IT is as natural to die as to be born; and to a little infant, perhaps, the one is as painful as the other. He that dies in an earnest pursuit is like one that is wounded in hot blood, who, for the time, scarce feels the hurt, and therefore a mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good doth avert the dolors of death; but above all, believe it, the sweetest canticle is "Nunce demettis" [now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace], when a man hath obtained worthy ends and expectations.—Bacon's Essays.

MEN must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither;
Ripeness is all. —Shakspere's King Lear.

THROW away all the miracles of the New Testament and the good teachings of Christ romain—all that is worth preserving will be there still. Take from what is known as Christianity the doctrin of the atonement, the fearful dogma of eternal punishment, the absurd idea that a certain belief is necessary to salvation, and with most of the remainder the good and intelligent will most heartily agree. . . . Like other religions, Christianity is a mixture of good and evil. The church has made more orphans than it has fed. It has never built asylums enough to hold the insane of its own making. It has shed more blood than light.—Ingersoll.

IT is the province of reason to judge of the morality of the scripture, i. e., not whether it contains thiugs different from what we should hav expected from a wise, just, and good being, . . . but whether it contains things plainly contradictory to wisdom, justice, and goodness.—Butler's Analogy.

THE bishops [of the church of England] must know the tone around them, and may very well perceive that what the church needs now is encouragement, a promis from her leaders of ultimate victory. That truth must always prevail, besides being true, is often in its place a valuable argument, but still we are not quite contented. Is the Episcopal optimism well founded? That it will be found true at the long-last, as the Germans say, is our conviction as profoundly as it is theirs, for neither science, the modern source of skepticism, nor human impatience of suffering, the ultimate root of secularism, can alter or effect an ultimate truth; but organized churches must think of of nearer futures, and consider such trifling periods of time as centuries and within time—as statesmen calculate time—both skepticism and secularism may become very serious phenomena.—The Spectator (London), Oct. 8, 1881.

EITHER there is a God or there is not; to which side shall we incline? Reason can giv us no assistance, yet we must take one side or the other; we must stake on the question. Heads, then, that there is a God! If you gain, you gain everything; if you lose, you lose nothing. And thus, since you are forced to stake, it would be contrary to all reason to cling to this life, rather than to stake it for an infinit gain, of which there is an even chance; while the loss, even if it should happen, would after all be the loss of nothing.—Pascal.

IN a correspondence which took place between a Mr. John Sheppard and Lord Byron, the latter speaks thus: "Indisputably the firm believers in the gospels hav a great advantage over all others, for this simple reason, that, if true, they will hav their reward hereafter; and, if there be no hereafter, they can be but with the Infidel in his eternal sleep, having had the assistance of an exalted hope through life, without subsequent disappointment, since, at the worst for them, 'out of nothing nothing can arise,' not even sorrow."—Moore's Life of Byron.

I WAS leader of the expedition, and all discoveries achieved by it naturally belonged to me. I was entitled to these remains, and I could hav enforced my right; but rather than hav bad blood about the matter I said we would "toss up" for them. I threw heads and won, but it was a barren victory, for although we spent all the next day searching, we never found a bone. I cannot imagin what ever became of that fellow.—Mark Twain's Tramp Abroad.

TRUE temperance givs us a hearty appetite that enjoys healthy food with a keen relish unknown to the glutton or the intemperate.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

IN choosing a wife, always select one that will wash.

HEARD in New York: "Ma, why does everybody look so pleased, and what are all these flags out for, and what are so many brass bands doing out to-day? It isn't the Fourth of July, is it?" "No, my child; the legislature has adjourned."

"BEG pardon, sir, but could—hic—you tell me which is the opposit side of the street?" "Why, that side, sir" (pointing across). "Mosh oblish. I was sover there jus' now, and asked 'nother gen'l'n which was opps' side, an' he said this was."

"I DON'T want no rubbish, no fine sentiment, if you please," said the widow who was asked what kind of an epitaph she desired for her late husband's tombstone. "Let it be short and simple; something like this: 'William Johnson, aged 75 years. The good die young.'"

VISITING BRITON—"Ya-as, Miss Wosalind—but your politicians—aw—are a lot of cads, y' knaw. You are—aw—wuled by a set of wiotous wascals whom you wouldn't dweam of—aw—inviting to your house." Rosalind—"True; but in England you are governed by persons who wouldn't dream of inviting you to theirs."

AT a recent Sunday-school picnic a thunder storm came up, and lightning struck very near. The good pastor called out assuringly: "Don't be frightened. God will be with us in the storm as well as the calm." "I know that," remarked a young lady with chattering teeth and trembling voice; "but I don't like to hav him come so sudden."

GENERAL HAZEN has telegraphed to the weather bureaus in the West Indies to make no more reports on cyclones after the 30th inst., Congress having failed to make appropriations for the purpose. This is pretty rough. The motto of Congress appears to hav been: "Twenty-five thousand dollars for improving Mud Creek, and not one cent for cyclones."

ACCORDING to the "voracious" Post-Express, a melancholy affair has just taken place at Rochester. A printer who had been delayed in "throwing in" his case was left alone in the composing-room. At the conclusion of his task he approached the washstand, and, after washing his face and hands, he reached for the towel and immediately fell back in a fit. A clean white towel had been placed on the rack, and never having seen anything of the kind before, he took it for a ghost. He is now a raving maniac!

"NOT long since," writes a "drummer" to the Boston Herald, "I took a train on the Bennington and Rutland railway, leaving Rutland at 1 o'clock. I front of me sat a lady and boy. The conductor came along, punched her ticket, and asked, 'How old is the boy?' 'Ten years old to-day,' said she. 'We collect half fare from all children ten years old or more,' said he. The lady hesitated, colored somewhat, and said, 'He will not be ten until eleven o'clock to-night.' The conductor, accepting her statement as authoritativ, passed on.

THE ARKANSAW FARMER.

A cattle dealer stopped at the house of an Arkansaw small farmer, and called to a man who was drawing water with an old-fashioned windlass that cried out with an alarming screak at every turn of the crank.

"Light!" shouted the drawer of water.

The man dismounted and approached the well.

"I am a cattle buyer," said the man, "and I'd like to talk business to you."

"Can't talk business till I giv these steers as much water as they want."

"How long will it take you?"

"Blamed if I know. They ain't had no water for two days, and the well's seventy-five feet deep, and the bucket leaks, Now make the calc'lation."

"How long hav you been drawing?"

"Sence sun up; and they're jest as rampant now as they was when I commenced. I don't 'low to do nothin' else for several days yet, fer by the time one gits 'nough the other one is sp'ilin' fer some."

"Why don't you drive them to the creek?"

"Thar ain't no creek in the neighborhood."

"Why don't you drive them to the river?"

"Cos they'd rush in an' drown theirselvs."

"Why don't you drive them to the pond?"

"They won't drink that sorter water."

"Don't you want to sell them?"

"I would if I had the ole woman's consent, an' I think she's willin'."

"Where is she?"

"She's jes' gittin' ready to go over to see one of the neighbors."

"You'd better consult her before she leaves."

"You don't know that woman like I do. It ain't safe to pester her when she's gittin' ready to go anywhar. We'll hafter wait till she gits thar."

"How far is it?"

"About nine miles."

"I see you don't care to talk business."

"No, I ain't so powerful keen."

"If you'd pay more attention to business you'd liv better."

"Don't wanter liv no better'n I am. Suits me."

"Are you making any attempt to educate your children?"

"Yes, an' they're gittin' along fine. Jim hit a nigger with a rock yisterday, Bob sassed a jestice of the peace, and Buck ain't afeerd of the devil. That's a mighty good showin', let me tell you." And the windlass screaked and the steers walled their eyes.

"Are all of your children boys?"

"They might hav been ef it hadn't been for one thing."

"What was that?"

"One of them was a gal."

"Where is she now?"

"Married to the triflin'est feller I ever seed."

"Well, there's no use fooling with you; good-day."

"Good-day." And he turned the crank, muttering to himself: "Nosin' 'round here tryin' to find out who's got whisky. A man haster be mighty smart these days."

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between Mrs. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D. W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 24. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, June 16, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year

Notes and Clippings.

THE reports recently circulated regarding Sitting Bull's conversion to the Roman Catholic faith are now squarely contradicted. Bull declares that he never authorized them, and says that he cannot bear the idea of leaving the faith of his fathers.

A JUDGMENT for $2,872.55 was recovered last week in the Brooklyn City Court, before Judge Woglem, by John Fitzsimmons against the Rev. Philip J. Kenny, of St. Paul's Church. The amount was alleged to hav been placed in the hands of the priest to be applied to certain trust for the plaintiff.

MR. FLINDERS PETRIE is about to publish a work on measurements of the great pyramid of Egypt, in which he will show that the new measurements are irreconcilable with those on which Prof. Piazzi Smith, who saw a religious significance in everything pertaining to that structure, has built his hypotheses.

COMPLAINT is made that in the Old Fulton Street Prayer Meeting in this city some of the brethren pray too long. The limit is five minutes. When a praying brother exceeds this limit there is worrying and fidgeting. Some of those who pray for more than five minutes are accused of a lack of spirituality.

ONE of the most eminent religious weeklies, bearing date May 31st, publishes an account of how an old lady, aged 90, "went on the ice last week and coasted down a steep hill several times on a double runner." Such incidents are refreshing in these hot times. If that religious weekly will, in its next issue, tell where the old lady found sufficient ice for her sport "last week," or where coasting may safely be done during the next few weeks, the result will be a spare attendance at the Sunday-schools of any such frigid locality.

IT is a Delaware clergyman who declares in the Observer that the negro church-members in his slate are almost unanimously vicious. Stealing, lying, and licentiousness are their besetting sins, and the last is the more general. Most of them marry, but it is in most instances a mere form. The marriage vow is disregarded. He could not with the least degree of confidence point out a single virtuous couple. Such there may be, but he would not know where to find one. He asked one of the better sort of colored men about this, and he acknowledged that he knew of only a single exception, and that was himself and his wife.

THE Louisville Courier-Journal has joined the ranks of the wicked, and makes fun of the holy Bible in this wise: "A wife at New Concord, Ohio, has asked for a divorce from her husband on entirely new grounds. The husband is extra pious, holding religious services at his home three times a day. She does not kick on the frequent religious services, but she says at every service he selects passages from the Bible that condemn certain sinful acts, applies them to her, and then goes to work to preach her a sermon full of reproaches. The religious persecution has caused her great annoyance, she claims, endangered her health, and she asks for a divorce with alimony. If the divorce is granted and the alimony is large, it will be a lesson to husbands in regard to pointing a self-cocking Bible at a wife, and firing fixed ammunition at her under the guise of family religious exercises.

SOME of the calamities resulting from stripping a country of its trees are now being experienced in the French Alps, where the forests have been ruthlessly destroyed. The valley tillers find that good arable land is being inundated with sand and gravel. The torrents sweep down the slopes unhindered, carrying great quantities of detritus, and cutting gulleys and ravines into the softer soil formations. The tendency of the streams is to deepen their channels, and thus carry accumulating masses into the valleys. Serious damage is threatened to the farmers, who are forced to dam up the smaller streams in numerous places, in order to compel the waters to drop their sediment in their channels, instead of upon the valuable soil. The unwisdom of destroying forests is at last fully appreciated, and now the farmers are planting the bare hillsides with new trees.

BOTH branches of the Pennsylvania legislature hav now passed the bill abolishing the contract system in prisons and reformatory institutions. The Keystone state, which has for many years been noted for the attention it pays to its penitentiary system, is in this matter taking an important step. Here in New York statistics are published from month to month showing that prison labor is pushed to such extremes that not only are all the current expenses of the institutions covered, but a large annual surplus is earned. It is clear, however, that wherever the fruits of convict labor come into direct competition with those of the labor of honest people outside the jails they will underbid the latter, since the state takes care that the convict workmen are so fed and clothed as to make their labor effectiv, and the workshops are furnished to the contractor rent free, while he pays only a small sum for the labor he buys.

THE advocates of a "national divorce law," says the Sunday Mercury, knowing that the federal constitution expressly prohibits any interference by the general government with the obligation of contracts, now wish a constitutional amendment which shall make divorce uniform in all the states. The constitution has been doctored enough and more than enough by political tinkers. The Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments hav kept the country in commotion ever since they were adopted, and the people want no more amendments. Marriage is a pure civil contract and can be nothing else under our form of government. It is a contract over which each state must hav control, because it concerns exclusivly the citizens of each state. To take that control from the several state courts and giv it to the federal courts would be to destroy a prime right of local self-government. The people hav been for eighteen years engaged in decentralization, and they are not going to agree to an amendment which would be in the highest degree centralizing.

THE "Messaros" church squabble in Philadelphia has at last come to an end. The Central Presbytery agrees to let the brethren of the Northwestern church take their church and their pet preacher and go forth into a condition of independency or whatever else they please. To this end they bid the whole concern depart in peace. As a Presbyterian church the Northwestern no longer exists. There was much gratification on the announcement of the completion of this action. But there arose a wail from certain brethren, who claim that the church owes them about $3,200, and would like to know how to get it. Their inquiry has not been satisfactorily answered, and probably will not be. Brother Messaros, having been baptized by immersion and licensed by a Baptist association to preach, is now somewhat of an Independent Baptopresbygationalist of the go-as-you-please order of ecclesiastical succession. The fact that he is as eloquent as he is odd is considered a compensation for all his eccentricities. He draws a crowd, and that is what his followers say the ordinary old-fashioned Presbyterian preachers of Philadelphia cannot do.

THE oath as a test of the value of evidence in the courts has been further discredited by the action of Chinese witnesses. Tom Lee, a Chinese deputy sheriff of New York, charged with blackmailing gamblers and opium sellers of his own race, has been acquitted and discharged. The allegation against him was brought by Ah Chum, who now declares that he is willing to retract that charge. The fact that Ah Chum swore solemnly to the affidavit against Tom Lee is of no matter, because, as Ah Toy very forcibly remarked, the oath of Ah Chum was taken on a Bible, which was not binding, as no pagan Chinaman considers that sacred book of any more account than a last year's almanac or a copy of the revised statutes. Ah Chum should hav been sworn on a white chicken, its head being cut off in the open court at the solemn moment. In default of the decapitated fowl, the oath of Ah Chum was valueless. Were these pagans put in the box and told that if they gave false witness they would be imprisoned with hard labor for perjury, whether they killed a chicken, swallowed a Bible, or neither, there would soon be an end of false swearing, after the jaunty manner of Ah Chum.—Ottawa Free Press.

EVERY true Confucian, says the North China Herald, is an Agnostic. He believes only in the seen; the unseen he regards as unknown and unknowable. As an Agnostic the Confucianist is tolerant of other creeds. He goes even further, and will admit that for the ignorant multitude, and especially for women, an apparatus of gods and demons is necessary. He does not care, therefore, to proclaim his skepticism, still less to activly propagate it. His creed is only for the wise; the masses are better as they are. He will subscribe to the temples and take part in idolatrous ceremonies. To the common people Confucian Agnosticism has never been very satisfactory. But the Agnostic philosophy has not been without its influence on the massess. There is but little religious fervor, and scarcely any deep faith. The people will ridicule their own gods, laugh at their own worship, and freely criticise all the creeds. Speak to any Chinese, no matter what his rank, about the future life, and his reply is almost certain to be, "Who knows anything about it?" and is likely enough to add, "Eating and drinking are realities," implying that all else is doubtful. Refer to the subject of future rewards and punishments, and his sarcastic remark will probably be, "I hav seen the living suffer, but hav never seen the dead in cangues."

THE early stages of human development and the first beginnings, so to speak, of the individual frame present to the eye of science certain very marvelous proofs of man's kinship with lower life. Away backward in the dim ancestral periods, when the lower types were evincing their special tendencies toward the evolution of the "paragon of animals," the evidences of that lower life gradually began to pale and to disappear, at first the prehuman and then the human characters were outlined. The projecting face-bones, still seen to-day as a lingering survival in lower races of men, began to be compressed and concentrated as the work of making the "human face divine" with its overhanging brain proceeded apace. The massiv teeth and muscles of lower life were gradually modified to form the more modest structures our race exhibits to-day, and the erect posture, sustained without an effort, likewise began to be assumed as a special feature of the developing tribes of humanity. This much we can see by the lawful scientific use of the imagination in a backward glance along the lines of the past. It would appear to the eye of the biologist as though the human characters had been laid over the features of the lower life that preceded them—as if the picture of humanity's progress had been painted over and upon the design which the cumulativ life of the vertebrate had furnished as a foundation for the best and highest work of all. If such a simile holds good we might expect, in examining closely the latest figures on the canvas, that here and there we should obtain a glimpse of the artist's first outlines, and of the preliminary sketches which served for the realization of the more perfect ideal. As from the erasures and blots of the finished manuscript we may gain a clue to the genesis of the writer's thoughts, so we may read between the lines of the warp and woof of life, and may detect occasional glimpses of the fashioning of lower types into that of humanity itself. The glimpses we do obtain are often blurred and indistinct, and their very nature is frequently obscure. But there is no doubting the significance of the ancient finger-posts which, half buried in the mists of antiquity or erased by the busy fingers of time, still point the pathway along which man's race has fought and won its way to the supremacy of the animal hosts.—Longman's.

News of the Week.

GOV. BUTLER will attend the commencement exercises at Williams College, Mass., July 4th.

TIMOTHY KELLY, the last of the Phenix Park murderers, was hanged last Saturday in Dublin.

THE ministerium of the Lutheran church has decided that there must be no more dancing at picnics.

A TORNADO passed over Collaway county, Mo., last Sunday, doing considerable damage to farmers' houses.

THE queen of England is said to be subject to "fits of depression," and considerable alarm is felt about her health.

FOUR men were lynched in the West last week—two in Iowa, one in Missouri, and one in Mississippi. Lynching is a bad business.

THE Hon. Chester W. Chapin, one of the richest men in New England, died at his residence in Springfield, Mass., last Sunday, aged 84 years.

THE remains of John Howard Payne, author of "Home, Sweet Home," were laid at rest in Washington, last Saturday, with funeral ceremonies.

THE latest pugilistic achievement of the pugilist Sullivan, of Boston, was to smash $500 worth of furniture, thrash his wife, and then skip the city.

THE house in Fordham, N. Y., where Edgar A. Poe lived and wrote his poem, "The Raven," was sold at auction last week. It brought something over $5,000.

A CHINESE consulate has been established in New York. Au Yang Ming is the consul, and has his residence at 40 Clinton Place, a few doors from THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

JAY GOULD'S new $250,000 yacht made her trial trip last Saturday, and is said to be the fastest vessel of the kind afloat. The expense of running her is about $100 per day.

MR. CHARLES C. BUGBEE, of Hartford, Conn., was untrue to his wife, was horsewhipped severely by that lady last week, and is in the insane asylum. Mrs. Bugbee now believes she made a mess of it.

SULIEMAN DAOUD, one of Arabi Bey's officers, was hanged on the 9th for having set fire to Alexandria, Egypt, during the recent bombardment of that city by the English. He is said to hav died of fright before the drop fell.

MANY people are coming forward, through the press and other channels, to the support of Dr. Potter in his assertion that the Young Men's Christian Association is a humbug. There seems to be great unanimity on the subject.

THE committee to raise money to send a team of riflemen to Wimbledon, England, to compete in the international match, are not hopeful that a sufficient sum can be raised, and the maksmen may be obliged to say at home.

TRAFFIC on the Brooklyn bridge is thought to hav reached its normal point. About $525 per day is now taken as toll, which is more than a thousand dollars less than would be required to pay four per cent on the cost of the structure.

THE committee of the statue of Liberty has made such progress that it is already calling for samples of stone for the pedestal. The work of tearing down the buildings on Bedloe's Island, in New York harbor, is almost accomplished, and excavations will soon be made.

THERE is war in the Presbyterian church at Throgg's Head, N. Y. It is, as usual, between the pastor and an expelled member and their supporters. Charges and counter-charges are brought up and threats are hurled. Whatever else may be proved, it is certain that these Christians love one another.

Communications.

Sensation, Perception (or Intuition), and Reasoning.

The issue brought forward by Stephen Pearl Andrews in his answer to my question, "What is Science?" is so fundamental and far-reaching that I feel under the necessity of doing my level best to put on record my own thought in regard to the matter, whether that thought is accepted by anybody else or not. I hav no desire for any personal triumph. I shall be gladly defeated if I am defeated by the simple presentation of the truth. The theories under discussion are of supreme philosophic importance, and I feel that much will be accomplished of permanent value by the expression of opposit opinions.

The weight of authority, as quoted by Mr. Andrews, is against me, but I refuse to hav this question settled by any authority whatsoever. It is a question of common sense and is to be settled by the common sense of mankind. It requires no extraordinary knowledge, no reading of books, no peculiar experience. It simply requires keenness to study one's own individual activity.

There is no distinction in knowledge. All knowledge is the same. Scientific knowledge is classified knowledge. But to classify knowledge is not to change its character. The knowledge of the most ignorant and most ill-disciplined mind, so far as it is knowledge, is just as valuable as the knowledge of the greatest philosopher. All logic, as Huxley says, is simply elaborated common sense. It is not anything different from common sense, only a more attentiv common sense. There is no royal road to truth—one for the learned and one for the ignorant. All must take the same road. The most learned man at the start must take exactly the same road as the most ignorant; the only difference is that he goes farther in the same way, and by the same process of reasoning. He cannot at any time change the way or the process. He only transcends the uncultivated mind by more continued reasoning, but there is no difference in the kind of reasoning. It is all common sense.

Before I proceed with the main discussion let me say that in my previous article I did not confound sensation with perception. I used them together because they are together in time, but in thought they are different things; and in writing that article I had that distinction firmly in mind, though perhaps I did not sufficiently express it. To confound these two as one would show an intellectual blindness that should rule me out of this discussion altogether.

I differ with Mr. Andrews at the very start; and here I want the careful attention of the reader. Those who agree with the definitions of Mr. Andrews must agree with him throughout. His logic is irrefutable. The battle-ground is in the starting-point. I do not agree with Mr. Andrews's definitions either of sensation or perception.

First as to sensation—let me define what I mean by that term, and what I think science must mean by that term.

What is the fundamental, and, I might say, absolute and unquestionable, postulate of science, the unbeginning and the unending thing of it all? It is this: the reality of the outward universe. Let this be thoroughly understood. Science does not start, as many imagin, with the reality of the ego, that is, of the subjectiv, but with the reality of the objectiv world, that is, of the outside. Science does not pass from the ego to the outward world, but from the outward world to the ego. Its original assumption is the objectivity of relations, and not their subjectivity. Science takes its stand on the firm earth. It sets itself like a flint against idealism or any sort of reasoning that makes mind the starting-point. If one start with the mind he must end with the mind, and all phenomena become merely a transformation of mental imageries. Modern science revolts against this subjectivity, although I grant that modern philosophy seems to favor it; but this is the weakness of modern philosophy, and it never can come into harmony with science until it accepts the objectiv as the starting-point of human cognition. To science the stars are real stars, the flowers are real flowers, the ground on which we tread is real ground, having a real, objectiv existence. These are not mere mental operations, or inferences.

This outward world I call material. I use the terms of matter, not of spirit, as the universal and most comprehensiv terms. This is what science is compelled to do, although it may not giv a precise definition of matter; but, as Huxley says, it must use the terms of matter, and not the terms of spirit, in order to be understandable. Matter, therefore, is the universal thing, or quality, or attribute, or whatever you may call it, of the objectiv reality with which science deals, and mind is simply a process in the material universe—not the beginning or the soul of matter—but a process in it taking place under certain conditions. Science may not know how this process results from certain conditions, but it knows that it does so result, and comes after matter, and not before it. First matter, then mind; this is the conclusion of all scientific research. It is proud philosophy which makes the ego of supreme importance, for proud philosophy so far has been the offspring of the ego; but humble-minded science, with true wisdom, does not admit this blinding egoism, but takes the mind just as it is to experience as a process in the world, and not the creativ power of it—a resultant of force, but not the original force itself.

Now comes my definition of sensation, not, as Mr. Andrews givs it, from the subjectiv, but from the objectiv standpoint. Let the reader pay careful attention.

Sensation is the impact of the outward universe upon the mind of man.

There is not a particle of activity in the mind of man until this impact takes place. The mind of man is like a dead thing until this action of the material universe intrudes upon it. In this impact lies the beginning of all knowledge whatsoever. It is the only basis upon which any possible knowledge can be achieved. Anything that passes for knowledge, which cannot be traced to this ultimate basis, is not knowledge but imagination.

Sensation, as I define, is entirely objectiv, and not subjectiv.

The subjectiv and conjoint action, in this case, of the mind of man, is perception, or intuition, which last, to my mind, is a better term; and in using this term I strike a point of profound difference between myself and Mr. Andrews. Notice that I use the word intuition in a new scientific sense, and not in the old transcendental sense.

Mr. Andrews says that the mind infers the existence of an outside world. This is the idealistic view. I do not accept it. I affirm that the human mind does not infer the existence of an outer world; it knows it directly—that is, it intuits it, sees it, perceives it, without any act of reasoning whatsoever. The reasoning does not begin until after this intellectual intuition. Immediately as the outward world impinges upon the mind of man, the mind knows in "dynamic unity" with sensation, as Mr. Andrews terms it, that there is an outness. There is no inference, no reasoning, no indirection. It is simple, absolute, first-hand knowledge. This is what I mean by perception. It is a direct seeing of things as outward.

I object to Mr. Andrews's view because it results in pure idealism, and in the end there is no such thing as knowledge. All the universe becomes a dream. If you say the existence of the objectiv world is to man an inference, then he can deny that inference, and affirm, as Berkeley does, that there is only an ego; but the ego itself is not left, as Hume shows, for, by the same process of reasoning, the ego becomes an inference, and only bare thought is left; or, as Mill puts it, "a possibility of sensation;" and that lands one on the shores of an infinit phantasy. The only possible escape from this is by affirming that the human mind knows the outward universe as directly and intuitivly as it knows itself.

I affirm that consciousness includes two prime elements which must exist in order to produce consciousness, namely, the me, and the not-me. Take away either of these, and there is no consciousness. Consciousness is, as the word signifies, a knowing together, or with. It is the human mind coming to knowledge by the conjunction of the outward world, and without this conjunction there is no consciousness. The not-me is as necessary, as the me—for how can man know even himself except by contrast with what is not himself? So the very beginning of knowledge, of all consciousness, is the impact of the not-me with the me, and the not-me is no more an inference than the me; both are directly intuitioned in the act of consciousness. There is no priority.

I hav thus given the common-sense, popular view of the matter, to which Mr. Andrews and all philosophers must come at last and practically accept. But I maintain that this common-sense view is the profoundest philosophic view of the matter. It is practically true, and it is theoretically true. Does not every man believe in the actual existence of the outside world? Of course he does. Can he giv a reason for his belief? No, because he has not reasoned himself into that belief. Its foundation is not a reason, but an intuition—that is, a direct perception, or insight, in the very act of consciousness, without which consciousness itself would be impossible.

Let me now repeat the things necessary to human knowledge. First, the outside universe; secondly, the impact of the universe upon the mind of man; thirdly, but instantaneously with this, "in dynamic unity," the perception or intuition by the mind of the outward reality; and fourth, reasoning—that is, attention, observation, collection, and classification of facts, inference, discovery, and unfolding of relations, and so all the accumulated knowledge; but every particle of reasoning that has any scientific validity must find its basis in a material sensation and a mental perception springing from that sensation, so that the ultimate and sole beginning of all knowledge is the material sensation. The radical, and, to the careless-thinking mind, the incomprehensible, difference between Mr. Andrews and myself is in this starting-point. Is the outward universe or the mind of man the starting-point? He says the mind of man; I say the outward universe. He admits that this is so in time, as a fact of history, but not as fact of logic; but I say that even as a fact of logic the universe comes first. Mr. Andrews is idealistic; I am realistic. Mr. Andrews makes the objectiv a mode of the subjectiv; I make the subjectiv a mode of the objectiv. I subordinate the mind of man to the outward universe; Mr. Andrews subordinates the outward universe to the mind of man, and makes it but a mental image.

The only way to settle this question is by an appeal to each man's common sense; let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind on this matter. For my part, I don't act or think as if the universe were real; but I know it to be real, absolutely; and this, I affirm, is the attitude of modern science. It does not postulate the ego first, but universal existence.

Science, of course, as Mr. Wakeman declares, reasons beyond the physical into the ideal and spiritual, but its basis is the physical. We cannot reason from the spiritual as a beginning to the physical, and thus interpret the latter by the former; we must always reason from physical into the spiritual, and understand the spiritual in and through our previous knowledge of the physical.

Mr. Andrews wishes to know what I mean by metaphysics. I mean any system of thought whose starting-point is within and not without, in an idea and not a fact, in a mental assumption and not a physical existence. Science and metaphysics may meet in certain domains and reason together amicably on spiritual realities; but the difference is this: metaphysics is wholly subjectiv, while science is first of all objectiv and then subjectiv. The metaphysician reasons from the mind to the mind, while science reasons from the material universe to the mind and considers the mind a part of the material universe. Thus it will be seen that science and metaphysics are fundamentally opposed. No process of reasoning can be scientific that does not find its source in a material sensation. Any reasoning, no matter how beautiful or truthful it may appear, that finds its starting-point in an idea of the mind, is metaphysical, and can never be accepted by science as anything more than poetry and imagination. It may carry a truth to the feeling, but not a truth to the intellect.

I hav thus said my say. Mr. Andrews must find room for me somewhere in Universology, though I don't know exactly where. But I hav given what I consider to be the modern scientific view of the universe and the mind of man, and what I believe will be the prevailing view in the times to come.

I know that Mr. Andrews has admirably expressed the prevailing philosophy of the day, and I am glad to hav drawn from him such a lucid statement of its basis and process of thought. There is not a flaw in his logic if you grant his premis. I do not, however, grant his premis. I disagree with his very idea of sensation. I deny that we get at the outside universe in any such way as he says, and I affirm that the philosophy of the future will reject his premis, and come into harmony with science, by affirming the reality of universal existence as prior to all reasoning, as in fact a prime element in consciousness itself, without which there is no consciousness. The me and the not-me, both "in dynamic unity," make man a knowing being, and the me does not reason to the not-me, but knows it directly in the very first flash of conscious existence. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Postscript.—Since writing the above I hav had the pleasure of reading Mr. Andrews's second article, and in reply I will offer a few words and then let the matter rest. The sense in which I regard pure mathematics as poetry is this; poetry is something that is made; it is essentially a mental creation. It deals with imaginations and possibilities and not with actual matter of fact. Pure mathematics does the same thing. It is ideal. It reasons with possibilities. It is founded upon axioms of the mind, not upon facts. There is no such thing as a circle or a line, or a point as defined in mathemathics. Therefore mathematics does not giv the real universe, only an ideal universe—a universe that might be if such and such things were so. Mathematics is true with an if, as all poetry is true with an if. If you take a circle, a line, a point, as mathematics defines them, then certain things must inevitably follow. But no such things actually exist, and, therefore, pure mathematics deals only with an imaginary state of things.

When this ideal instrumentality is brought into contact with the universe, as it is, then vast results follow. But the ideal must blend with the practical, in order to do this. Pure mathematics can giv no particle of real knowledge—there must be applied mathematics. There must be a fact, and the fact is the source of all the truth we require. Pure mathematics, therefore, is nothing but poetry until it hinges upon a fact; then, of course, it swings open to boundless realms.

Now let me come to the fundamental question, Can the human mind, by any action of its own, add to its store of knowledge? Mr. Andrews seems to think that it can, and that I make tremendous and venturesome assertions when I say: "Nowhere along the whole line does the human intellect, merely as intellect, furnish a particle of truth. Truth is in a well, and that well is the continuous contact of the mind of man with its environments. Reasoning in itself never provides man with truth." I still repeat these assertions. I affirm that by no process of pure mental activity can a particle of knowledge be added to what is given in sensation. The sensation furnishes the raw material always and wholly. The mind can only formulate, classify, co-ordinate, define, arrange, and re-arrange, but it cannot create. It cannot initiate an iota of truth. It can turn it over and reshape multitudinously, but it cannot make. The sensation givs the total stuff out of which is woven every particle of truth we possess. The human mind is simply a weaver—it weaves what is given to it gloriously and wonderfully, but it can do no more.

This question Kant himself discussed, and, as I remember, decided this same way. He discussed it in a different form. He put it in this way: Can the mind by any process of logic, of pure reasoning, come to a "synthetic judgment?" What Kant meant was this: Given a certain amount of knowledge, can the mind by pure reasoning increase that knowledge? or must the reasoning, whatever shape it take, still keep within the bounds of that knowledge, unable by any process to transcend it? Kant affirmed that the mind by no logic whatever could leap beyond that knowledge. It could remold the knowledge, but it could not in the least thing advance beyond. This is the same position that I take, and is the scientific position; but Mr. Andrews seems to think that logic has some transcendental power to increase human knowledge, while I affirm that it exhausts its power in defining human knowledge. Definition, readjustment, is all that logic can do.

Let us illustrate this—put it squarely, and see just where we differ. Supposing that from this time henceforth all material sensation should cease; that is, the ovtward world should no more affect the mind of man. Up to this moment man has acquired a certain body of knowledge. His mental faculties remain just as they are. His logic is still unimpaired, his mathematics as keen as ever. Now the question I would ask Mr. Andrews is this: Is it possible for the human mind, out of its own activity, to increase this body of knowledge after the material sensation has ceased? According to his philosophy, I understand, he would answer in the affirmativ. Yes, he would say, the human mind could so readjust this knowledge, so classify, so co-ordinate, so logically arrange and define, so mentally mold it, that it really would increase the body of knowledge.

I would answer just the other way. No amount of mental action, the most stupendous processes of pure reasoning, the most magnificent triumphs of logic, could by one scintilla increase that body of knowledge. Reshape and remold as the intellect might, making that knowledge protean in its many forms, it never could add the least glimmer of new knowledge; new knowledge could only come by a new sensation. The sensation begins the knowledge, and the sensation must accompany the knowledge all along, or the knowledge cannot grow. Logic, I affirm, is simply definition; it is not, it cannot be, creation. Its sole material of knowledge comes forever and forever from sensation. Let sensation cease, and knowledge stops, and not a spark of new truth will appear until sensation renews. Again, therefore, do I say, "The well of truth is the continuous contact of the mind of man with its environments."

I will now end my say. I rejoice that I hav called out so luminous an expression of the idealistic and Platonic philosophy from Mr. Andrews. It has a wondrous fascination, I admit, and Mr. Andrews has the brilliant poetic faculty of making it seem as if it must be true. His clear-cut and beautiful sentences flow over us like the symphonies of Beethoven; but I hope my reader will not be led astray by this "light that never was on sea or shore," except so far as he accepts it to be the "poet's dream," which is after all the supreme glory of human life; but which in the realms of science cannot be adjudged valid. It is the glorious possibility of things, but not their actuality. Each man can judge this question for himself, but he must go to the very root of things in order to do it. He must read his own consciousness clearly. I differ from some great thinkers, but on this point they are no authority. Let the reader judge by his own mind, and not by what others say, however eloquently. S. P. P.

Practical Temperance Talk.

A correspondent of the Columbus, O., Saturday Gazette saw Col. Ingersoll the other day, and wrote home to his paper:

"Mr. Ingersoll has grown quite gray, and is aging rapidly; at least the tell-tale crows'-feet and wrinkles anon creeping across his full, round, and clean-shaven face evidenced this fact. His forehead extended clear back of the timber line, and half-way up to the top of his fine, intelligent head was a straggling growth of close-cropped iron-gray hair. His piercing gray eyes twinkled with genuin good nature, and in a moment we felt that we had been old friends for life. As a conversationalist Mr. Ingersoll has no living equal—versatil to the point of admiration, with just facetiousness enough to giv a keen relish and a desire to giv him the floor indefinitly. He has a hobby, however, and that is Infidelity, and ever and anon it would crop out. We casually drifted into the subject of Ohio politics and the probable effect of the Scott law on the approaching campaign. He could not see how the unconstitutionality of the law could be avoided in view of the fact that the law was a tax—and tax is a license, or at least the consideration of a license. This naturally brought up the subject of temperance, and the great apostle of Freethought was rather vigorous in his condemnation of the many reformatory methods adopted by the temperance agitators, for, said he, 'If a man is on the road to the devil the best way to reform him is to assist him in that direction, rather than to giv him a slight relief with the ultimate result of his reaching the goal the moment he ceases to be an object of sympathetic consideration.' And said he, 'Take a confirmed toper, for instance; if his family cannot reform him, nobody else need try it. The reformers get hold of him, pull him out of the gutter, and place him on his feet, and just so long as he is the object of special attention he is straight. Well, it follows, having presumably got him on the prohibition path, another old soak is picked out, and interest in the first ceases. Well, he notices that he has ceased to be an object of commiseration, and, having abandoned his old convivial associations, finds himself a little the loneliest mortal in the community. His former habits hav ostracized him from highly respectable society, and his reformation excludes him from association with the 'boys.' What is the result? Simply, he passes the old haunts; the recollection of the fun he has enjoyed in former days in these places tempts him to drift into them again. There are Tom, Dick, Jim, and the rest, sitting around the stove, with periodical trips to the bar. On the stove is the familiar old copper kettle, with its component possibilities of punch and toddy, and he drifts in. A good-natured welcome, an invitation to take something, and human nature asserts itself and reformatory resolutions vanish, and your reformed bummer makes up for lost time—gets gloriously drunk, and anathematizes temperance societies and prohibition principles to all time. Right here, then, lies the evil, or rather the fallacy, of the temperance subject as advocated by its partisans. Hold the victim responsible; let business men establish the rule, and not deviate from it, that a man who drinks is not reliable, and refuse to giv him employment because of his drinking habits, and when intemperate men realize that their drinking habit is the insurmountable bar to securing profitable, responsible, or remunerativ employment, then is struck the blow that will abolish intemperance, and then only.'"

The Rev. Mr. Nichols Speaks for Himself.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I see by The Truth Seeker of March 31st that you hav inserted a challege purporting to be from me. I wrote a similar challenge and gave Mr. Clow, of Forest Grove, Oregon, liberty to hav it inserted in any Liberal paper, or any other paper in the world. I presume that this is how it came to be in your columns. But I did not say to Mr. Clow that R. Ingersoll or Bennett was afraid to meet me. I simply stated that I had challenged Mr. R. Ingersoll through the papers of Oregon. I also said (by letter) to Mr. Clow's inquiries that I had offered five hundred dollars toward defraying the expenses of a discussion with R. Ingersoll. I also stated plainly to him that I wanted their best, also that I had plenty of chances to discuss with men who (although Infidels) I do not consider able to do the subject justice; with men whose self-esteem is highly developed. With such I had not the least inclination to discuss. In reply to Mr. Clow I plainly told him that I would make the following offer, not to everybody, but to R. Ingersoll: I would defray half of the expenses of the discussion, and, as we hav a printing-press, would print the discussion free of charge, meaning by half of the expenses simply half of the cost of the hall, or for fitting up some park; also for a shorthand reporter, never once thinking of giving one single dollar to defray R. Ingersoll's expenses from the East to Oregon; no, not one dollar; neither do I offer to pay his personal expenses. I acknowledge it would be extremely absurd for Col. Ingersoll to come to Oregon to meet a man he never heard of. I hav never asked him to do so, as the following challenge, or copy of the challenge, will show, which (challenge) was published in our county paper:

NOTICE TO ALL INFIDELS.

As I hav been informed that Robert Ingersoll is coming to Oregon, and as some hav reported that I am afraid to meet an Infidel in public debate, I now ask, and earnestly desire, you to get said R. Ingersoll to meet me in a public discussion upon the following question:

"Resolved, That the Bible is the reliable record of God's revelation through men."

Will some Freethinker (or Infidel) please ascertain if R. Ingersoll is coming, and if he will discuss or no? If he is not coming, throw in your mites and get him, or some one else that is acknowledged by him or Underwood to be competent to handle the subject, to meet me in a public discussion. If the Bible is true you want to know it, and if it is not true I desire to know it. It is facts we want to know. Therefore put your energy and efforts together, and secure the service of R. Ingersoll, and let us hav a trial to see what the facts are. We believe without a doubt the Bible is true, and are not at all afraid to meet Mr. R. Ingersoll or anyone else that is acknowledged to be one of your best. Oregon and other papers please copy. L. T. Nichols.

Acknowledging that it would be absurd for Col. Ingersoll to come to Oregon to meet a man in discussion he never heard of, it would be equally, yea, more, absurd, to think that I would go to the expense and trouble of getting the many (professed) Christian sects to unite and accept of me as a representativ man, and stand or fall by the results of the discussion. If it was possible to get every sect to agree to such a compact, do we not know that they would not stand to their agreement? It is extremely absurd, therefore shall not attempt such a bootless undertaking. I hav never, neither do I now, ask Mr. Ingersoll to meet me in discussion without informing himself in reference to my ability. Because a challenge is given it is no evidence that it must be accepted without due investigation and self-satisfaction that the end or result will justify the undertaking. I would say in reference to the challenge to Mr. Bennett I never once thought he would come to Oregon on purpose to discuss with me or any other man. At the time I gave the challenge to Mr. Bennett he was making (what was called) his trip around the world, and I was informed by Infidels that they thought he would come to Oregon. Although I gave the challenge (without any draw whatever upon my imagination), I could not say that Mr. Bennett ever received it, neither hav I ever said that he declined, for I never heard one word from him. I now renew the challenge of 1880 to Col. Ingersoll (except the information of his coming to Oregon), with the following addition: Although I am not in union with any of them, I will agree to send him a statement signed by many leading members of different churches, and a host of others, besides a multitude of Infidels, stating their desire for such a discussion, and also that I am fortified in the Bible, and competent to handle the matter in a public disussion with him, etc., etc. One leading Infidel told me he would take such a petition and go through the country with it, heading it with his own name with twenty dollars opposit of it. I am certain that ample funds can be raised by the Freethinkers to richly reward Mr. Ingersoll for his trip and trouble. I am certain of it, provided they will go to work in earnest. If Mr. Ingersoll does not see fit to accept of my challenge to an oral public discussion (which I would by far prefer), I will challenge him to a written discussion in the columns of The Truth Seeker. In the mean while, if Mr. York, Jamieson, Bell, or Walker wants to discuss orally with me, they will find me ready to accommodate them. Seeing that you hav recommended them, I will meet one or all of them as acknowledged by the editor of The Truth Seeker willing to risk the cause of Liberalism in their hands. I hav no high sounding words to use either now or in a discussion. Truth alone is what I want, sought after in all candor and honesty. In the May 5th number of The Truth Seeker I notice what is called, "Mr. Nichols's Challenge Accepted," and then subscribes certain conditions which I hav said nothing about in my challenge. In reply, I will say to Mr. Kelso, you hav plenty of well-to-do Liberals, and if you are aching so badly to dissect so rash a gentleman as myself in a parliamentary manner, you can simply invite them to defray your expenses and hav your full fill at dissecting.

Under this (professed) acceptance I see a heading, "Is It Nothing but Brag After All?" followed by a communication from one representing himself as being my neighbor. If he uses neighbor to convey the idea that we both liv in Oregon, all right. I hav never seen Mr. Sears (to my knowledge), neither hav I ever spoken to him. What he says about accepting my challenge, and Mr. Martin accepting of it for me, I know nothing about, for certainly I never gave Mr. Martin any authority to accept of any challenge, or accept of any acceptance of any challenge for me. All the knowledge I hav of the matter is Mr. Martin came to me and said that a Mr. Sears wanted to discuss with me; that he said that he would accept of my challenge, etc., and I told Mr. Martin plainly that I was not after such men as Mr. Sears, and never challenged any such men; and hence he could not accept of my challenge, for it was not to that class. But as J. L. York has been recommended by The Truth Seeker as one that they are willing to abide the finale, I am (providing it is the same York, and hav no doubt but what it is) ready at any time (when it can be suitably arranged by both parties) to enter the contest, and thus show that it is not brag nor high-sounding words, but the result of a full conviction that the Bible is authentic, and the desire to cause, if possible, to arrest in some degree the fearful tide of unbelief. My words are simply the expression of what I am not only willing, but anxious to do.

Hoping that you, as a person upholding freedom of speech, thoughts, and press, also ready to mete out justice, will giv this communication a place in your columns, I subscribe myself, Yours respectfully, awaiting the result, L. T. Nichols.

McMinnville, Oregon, May 18, 1883.

Spelling Reform.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mr. Bennett was one of the first, if not the very first, Liberal publisher to recognize the claims of the spelling reform. He gave his aid to it by a systematic omission of silent letters in many words, as is still done in the columns of The Truth Seeker. His example has been followed by Man and many other Liberal papers—a fact of which spelling reformers are becoming aware. The appended letter is taken from the Fonetic Educator, and will, I think, be of interest to your readers. Yours truly, Eliza B. Burns.

"Liberalism and the Spelling Reform.

"Editor Educator: In a hasty survey of the list of spelling reform workers and friends of the cause, I was struck with this peculiarity, or fact, viz: that Liberals and Spiritualists largely predominate, so far as I understand their religious belief; or, at least, if they are not openly avowed Liberals, they are several removes from the old-fashioned orthodoxy. In this connection it may be observed that the organs of the people were the first to adopt reformed spellings. Now, what is the inference to be drawn if my observations are correct? What could be more natural than that the Freethinker should exercise his reason, or that the Rationalist should persist in spelling rationally? But, brother Christians, fellow-believers in the atoning blood of a crucified savior, shall we abandon reason and rationality in language representation? Shall we leave this grand theme to be pushed and monopolized by the enemies of our holy religion? While it may be said that every Atheist is a spelling reformer, let it not be true that all spelling reformers are Infidels. The lover of the beautiful, the good, the true; the soul expanded by the teachings of Jesus, imbued with the spirit and aspirations of the age in which we liv, should form no part and parcel of the jeering crowd, hooting at every attempt to amend our wretched orthography. A. J. PIERCE."

Bradlaugh Still Determined.

London correspondence of the New York Sun.

There is in the city, in a rather busy thoroughfare called Old Street, a place of meeting named the Hall of Science. It may comfortably seat 2,000 people. About six years ago I went there on a Sunday night for the first time. There were probably fifty persons in the room. On the platform at one end of the hall were a lady and a gentleman. He had a massiv frame, the appearance of a priest, and the face of a bulldog. The lady was Mrs. Besant, the wife of a clergyman. Her partner was Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. They both told us bold things about religion, and tried hard to persuade us that there was no God.

I went there again and again. Each time the room got fuller and the doctrins bolder. Now and then politics took the place of theological and bibical raids, and republican principles got ventilated. At first the attendance was evidently mostly composed of people who had dropped in through curiosity, without any notion of what they were to hear, but gradually came a public attracted by sympathy for the principles that were preached. This public was composed of mechanics, clerks, and small shopkeepers, many of them accompanied by their wives or sisters.

Last night I was there again. Expecting to find a large meeting, owing to the increasing popularity of Mr. Bradlaugh among the working classes, I arranged to arrive three-quarters of an hour before the beginning of the proceedings. Seats were to be had for a shilling and a sixpence. The room was already full. It was only by a combined effort of diplomacy and weight that I passed myself down between a middle-aged lady, fashionably dressed, and a young red republican. After that many other people came and were most unmercifully packed. There were as many outside as there were inside.

I had gathered a few days ago from the general tone of conversation of an aristocratic circle that it was all over with Bradlaugh; that the fellow was completely crushed and would never be heard of again. Having had many opportunities of studying the representativ of Northampton, and knowing him to be a man of will, I dissented from the rose-color views, but was laughed at.

At the appointed time Mr. Bradlaugh, amid vociferous cheerings, ascended the platform. The chair was taken by Miss Bradlaugh, a young, bright looking, and intelligent lady of about 25. Then Mr. Bradlaugh began to speak. His delivery, at first low, as though his lungs were weak, gradually grew stronger, till it vibrated like an incessant roll of thunder. His speech was eloquent and clever. It was enthusiastically received. His appeals from what the speaker called the treason of the Commons to the rights of the people, won a tempest of applause. It would hav fared badly indeed with certain members of the House, if they had been within the reach of some of my neighbors. The speaker very ably contended that the Commons had committed treason against the Constitution by preventing him from serving his constituents, although he had been lawfully elected by them, as admitted by the House itself; for if he had not been legally qualified to sit, why was not a new writ issued for Northampton? No legal disqualifications could be urged against his return. He was therefore one of the Commoners of England, and business should not go on in Parliament without his taking part in it, for it was not only his right, but his duty to do so. "If the House of Commons," urged the orator, amid a fresh volley of cheers, "would, by its mere resolution alone, override law, what reasonable security was there for the life, liberty, or property of any subject of the nation?" Then he went on to remark that he was afraid, as it has been said, that the House had gone too far to recede; yet one of them must recede, and he would not. The loud but unmistakably propitious tumult which greeted this fierce challenge, foretells that the burgess for Northampton will be backed in his campaign by no half-hearted followers, and that we may soon hav to record something more conclusiv than mere "glove meetings."

Turning then against those who had assailed him the most in the Commons, the Radical orator swayed himself with bitter sarcasm, crushing under foot all consideration of rank or of past glory. He let out especially with remarkable spirit against Lord Randolph Churchill, until he figurativly got him in chancery, as one of my neighbors had it. Having reminded the meeting that Lord Randolph had said that he (Mr. Bradlaugh) had been elected by the dregs and scum of Northampton, he asked whether anything could be more insolent and at the same time more awkward than this definition of a most honorable body of citizens by the descendant of the man who was forever selling his country, and who enriched his family by robbing soldiers of their bread and starving them to death.

The burgess of Northampton has therefore issued his challenge to the Commons. During the ensuing weeks he will hold meetings all over the country, to be wound up by two monster ones in London, in July and August. After that, having satisfied himself, as he said, and the country that the people are with him, he will take his seat.

Rarely hav political assembles shown so little foresight and judgment as hav been displayed by the Commons in this affair. Mr. Bradlaugh was quite in the wrong at first. They hav helped him out of his position and hav put themselvs in his place. He was disliked and ill-supported. They hav given him the prestige and power of a martyr, and now should there be broken heads and ugly riots, the fault will lie with them.

He Knows Him.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: "Does anybody know Von Schleumbach?" Yes; three years ago Von Schleumbach lectured to the Young Men's Christian Association at Wilkes Barre, Pa. I was editing the Toiler's Pleader at the time. I called on Von and had a chat with him on different subjects, and I learned from him that he was not "a learned man," which he boasted to be. He had edited a paper in Wilkes Barre, he said, "about fourteen years ago." The Infidel clubs that he organized were the "turn-overs." He acknowledged to hav been a great drunkard, a man of vice, and claimed that his conversion came about in this way. Said he: "I vas at Malchunk vone day und stait mit ine Christian laty, und she inwited me to go mit her to Sunday-school. I vent, und heard a liddle shile say, 'The fool hath sait in his heart, Dere ish no Gott.' Dot touch me in mine heart, und from dat I believed dere vos a Gott, und I gried until my heart almost proke, und den I got trunk, tried to trown the idea dat I vas converted. I then quit—" but his story was cut short. The name of the paper I did not learn. I believe it was a German paper. He had a brother at Wilkes Barre when I was there last. He spoke in German. Only one English lecture he gave at Wilkes Barre. Von and a German had a confab at the Young Men's Christian Association, but I did not understand the discussion. I learned that his brother is a Liberal, and Von a fraud of the first water. So said his countryman. WILLIAM MASON.

Liberal, Mo. (the only Liberal town in the world—no preacher, no policeman, no priest, no god, no heaven, no hell, no devil), June 6, 1883.

Notes from the Lecture Field.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Since I wrote you last I hav lectured in Roseburg, Oakland, Eugene City, Forest Grove, North Yamhill, and Astoria, and hav been greeted everywhere with unusual success.

Our hearty thanks are due John Cogswell and others at Eugene City, and Brother Hudson and others at Forest Grove. At North Yamhill R. R. Laughlin stood in the front and rendered us every assistance in doing our work. Brother Chance, as usual, was found in his place at Astoria, with a ready hand and a good word to help us along.

At this writing I am at Seattle, W. T., and hav just concluded a course of lectures under the auspices of the Seattle Liberal League—the best League west of the Rocky Mountains, numbering in membership about one hundred.

Our last lecture was made the occasion for an excursion by steamer six miles, and a grand picnic and clam-bake, at which time one thousand people listened to the literary exercises and joined in a happy dance at the close.

D. M. Crane, an ardent friend of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and a true Liberal, is president of the League, by whom we were kindly cared for during our stay in Seattle. Our thanks are due to the many friends at Seattle, among whom I am glad to mention the name of W. H. White, one of the best lawyers in Seattle; an outspoken Liberal, an eloquent speaker, and a leading mind in the League, to whom much of its success is due.

We lectured two nights at Tacoma, the terminal point of the Northern Pacific railroad, to large and appreciativ audiences. Also two nights at Puyallup, the great hop-growing district of Puget Sound. Our thanks are due at Puyallup to Charles Reed, A. S. Farquharson, Friend Meisner, and others; and at Tacoma to R. J. Weisbach, J. P. Chilberg, and others.

We are to speak again in Seattle and also in Tacoma on our return from Victoria, B. C., for which place we sail to-morrow morning, and all the more gladly as I expect to meet the better half of the York family on our arrival in Victoria, as I thought the beauties of the Sound country too much for one to enjoy all alone. This is my seventh visit to this country, and yet new sights and natural beauties of climate and landscape appear on every hand.

The opening up of the great Northwest by rail has created a wonderful boom in real estate, and Seattle and Tacoma are growing like magic under the influx of rapidly increasing population.

I will speak in Portland on July 1st, and on the 4th of July giv the oration at Eagle Creek. From thence I go to Eastern Oregon, Walla Walla, Spokan Falls, Cheeny, Pendleton, Union, Baker City, Prairie City, and other points. We shall be glad to get word from any of the above points—that is, if you can catch me on the wing.

By the way, lest I forget it, let me tell you that the man Nichols, at McMinnville, who blows such a big horn, is not worth the ammunition of Col. Kelso, Jamieson, or any other speaker, if he would maintain self-respect, He does not represent an orthodox sect, or anything else but himself and a handful of cranks; besides, I was informed that his standing is anything but moral, and quite unsavory among decent and orderly people, and that he has neither money nor sense. We gave a course of lectures within ten miles of him, and to our surprise the valiant champion of departed worth did not put in an appearance, and the friends of Freethought in his neighborhood counseled us not to stir up this unsavory man, as no good would accrue to the cause of truth. DR. J. L. YORK.

A Freethought Camp-Meeting in Iowa.

Yesterday (Sunday) I attended the first Freethought camp-meeting ever held, I am told, in northwestern Iowa. The entire work of less than half a dozen earnest, indefatigable Liberals, and the chief glory for the admirable arrangements, are due Daniel Leonard and D. P. Kerns. A. M. Copp, the able and enthusiastic standard-bearer of Liberalism in Corning had spread the news broadcast over the country, and drove us from his beautiful residence to the place of meeting with much misgiving as to whether, on account of the incessant rains and almost impassable condition of the roads, there would be any meeting at all. Much to our surprise and that of every one else, the meeting was in full blast when we arrived, and we listened with rapt attention to the stirring address being delivered by Mr. J. L. Andrew, a young English ex-minister, who has recently burst the bonds of mental servitude and is devoting his life to liberating his fellow-men. At the conclusion of the address an elegant repast was provided by Mr. Copp and Mr. Leonard, to which every one was invited. Fortunately the clouds disappeared and old Sol seemed to smile with satisfaction and lend his welcome warmth to those who had met to supplant the despotism of theology, which, for generations, has labored to simply suppress truth. Notwithstanding the terrible state of the roads—on account of which it was pretty generally understood to hav been postponed—there was an attendance of of over two hundred persons, largely representing the worst form of orthodoxy. Not less than 600 persons would hav been present.

Mr. Leonard again called the meeting to order, and Mr. L. C. Goodrich, of Bedford, who had traveled sixteen miles to attend, with roads in a condition that would tax anyone's enthusiasm, delivered a well-timed speech on the prevailing Infidelity, even among the so-called orthodox, in reference to the Bible. His points were pertinent, logical, and well received, although a number of ladies took occasion to show their prejudice by retiring during its delivery.

Mr. A. M. Copp was called to the chair, and took that occasion to refer to the servil status of woman to which the Bible and all theology had assigned her.

Mr. Leonard briefly but pointedly suggested to the young people present that they ought to read the Bible, examin it carefully, go to church, but just use their own reason, and they would come out all right. He had been a Methodist class-leader nearly fourteen years, but always approached the Bible with a superstitious awe and reverence never accorded any other book, and thus was enslaved.

Though suffering from a hoarseness, I was called upon and gave my own convictions as to what the constructiv side of Liberalism should interest itself in, showing that grander possibilities, that a higher morality, and nobler aspirations toward a better social order, the realization of justice in society, were now, should continue to be, the aims of the truly Liberal. At the close of the lecture I explained the aims and objects of the National Liberal League, and called upon all persons present who thought such an organization worthy and necessary to giv in their names for the purpose of forming an organization. The first volunteer was Mrs. Mary Holgate who has done much missionary work in this neighborhood, and who had also traveled sixteen miles to be present. The list entire is as follows: A. M. Copp, T. D. Holgate, Mary Holgate, Mortimer Ballard, D. P. Kemo, Daniel Leonard, and G. L. Andrews, so that it can safely be predicted that a Liberal League is now a fact for Corning. E. A. STEVENS.

Omaha, Neb., June 4, 1883.

A Canadian Freethought Club.

The following account of the opening of the Montreal Freethought Club we take from the Montreal Herald of June 4th:

Yesterday afternoon, the new rooms of the Freethought Club, situated on St. Catherine street, opposite the Cathedral, were opened under most favorable auspices. Mr. Feodore Boas occupied the chair, the attendance being large and influential.

At the opening of the proceedings Mr. George Martin said:

"Ladies and gentlemen: It affords me very much pleasure indeed, in common with every member of this club, to see so many of our friends here to-day on the occasion of opening our new hall. This pleasure is enhanced in view of what such an assembly broadly signifies. It is, I think I may safely say, an unmistakable indication of a rapid spread of Liberal thought in our midst, of an increase of that beneficent spirit of mutual toleration and respect which tends to harmonize communities, and renders intercourse among individual citizens a pleasure and a joy.

"We are passing through a period of intellectual unrest, a time of doubting whatever is doubtful, of questioning whatever remains unsettled, and, above all, of a bold and fearless assertion of 'the right of unlimited search' into all matters pertaining to the welfare and enlightenment of mankind, the right to ignore and set aside all ecclesiastical proscriptions and decretals.

"It is only within the present century that the heavy hand of ecclesiasticism has been forced to relinquish its grasp on human reason, and only in recent years that thoughts of the most Radical and startling character hav been permitted to fairly take wind, exulting in the freedom which they find to fly wheresoever the free air and sunshine of heaven may invite them.

"The priesthoods of the day of every complexion hav become more modest in their claims, in many cases apologetic, in some cases repentant, ready to confess to sins of omission and commission. Even 'Mother Church' herself, alarmed at the rising tide of unbelief, turns her latest fury only against Atheism or Agnosticism, and through one of her highest dignitaries proposes a combination of all religious peoples, Jews, Mohammedans, and Buddhists, all Theists joining with Christians, Catholic and Protestant, to wage a war of extermination against this monster, born of his fears, that rises up everywhere and arrogantly refuses to worship or recognize the supernatural.

"This same high dignitary, had he lived at a somewhat earlier period, would hav recommended a very different procedure in connection with the heretics and heathen whose co-operation he now craves in a crusade of persecution; craves only from a depth of despair induced by his seeing the decay and ultimate overthrow of those colossal despotisms that hav retarded the march of civilization, and hav proved so inimical to human happiness, chief among which his own church has acted the most inhuman and sanguinary part.

"These reflections on the signs of the times I hav supplemented with some verses, which I respectfully offer for your acceptance:

ONWARD!

Onward still; the fiends of terror
Never more by force of error
Can the thinker's thought subdue.
Dear to us the hero-sages
Of the pious, priestly ages
Whom the fierce fanatics slew.

Dead? They are not dead, their teaching
Through the long, dark centuries reaching,
Throbs in countless hearts to-day;
Not one word for freedom spoken,
Nor one limb for freedom broken
Has been wholly cast away.

See! in the enlightened nations,
Shaken to their deep foundations,
Venerable temples reel;
Superstition, wounded, wailing,
Angry-mouthed, but unavailing,
Howls to heaven her last appeal.

Forward, then! 'tis shameful treason
In this glorious age of reason
To disguise one's honest thought;
None but dupes and cowards falter
To disown each ghostly altar
Where the ancient lie is taught.

Ours the age of science; splendid
Are her triumphs, with them blended
Truths that zone the world with light;
Ours an age of song more truthful
Than the old-time muses youthful Poured from their Olympian hight.

Long hav slept the gods they flattered,
Long ago their altars scattered,
Vanished from the midst of men;
Other gods hav followed, follow,
Prayer and praise grow faint and hollow.
Can dead faiths come forth again?

Ours the age of freedom, striding
O'er the earth, no more abiding
On bleak mountain-tops, secluded;
Where she passeth tyrants tremble,
Priest and king their craft dissemble,
Theirs the spoils of souls deluded.

Onward! be our motto, ever
Striving with a wise endeavor
Higher, higher still to rise;
Striving to uplift and gladden
Hearts that grim beliefs but sadden,
So shall spread the truths we prize."

The president then delivered an admirable and exhaustiv address on the aims and objects of the club.

Mr. Withell sang a song, in which he was accompanied by Mr. C. C. Hampshire.

Mr. R. C. Adams made an address on "the leading principles of Liberalism;" Mr. G. Iles, on "a school system for the children of Freethinkers on a rational basis," and Mr. Alexander Murphy on "the social features of organization."

Dr. Fisher followed in a forcible speech, and after remarks from several others the meeting adjourned.

Only a Little Over One Hundred Years Ago.

HOW BLASPHEMY WAS PUNISHED IN CONNECTICUT.

From the Litchfield Enquirer.

The execution in this case is dated 1779 and signed by Geo. Pitkin, clerk of the superior court. The prisoner was Samuel Tousley, of Salisbury. The statute of blasphemy reads as follows:

"That if any person within this state shall presume wilfully to blaspheme the name of God the Father, Son or Holy Ghost, either by denying, cursing, or reproaching the true God, or his government of the world; every person, so offending, shall be punished by whipping on the naked body, not exceeding forty stripes, and sitting in the pillory one hour; and may also be bound to his good behavior, at the discretion of the superior court, who shall hav cognizance of the offense."

The nature of the punishment inflicted will concisely appear from the following return of the officer setting forth what he did in pursuance of the sentence of the court:

"LITCHFIELD, 23d August, 1779.

"Then by virtue of the within execution, I took the within named Samuel Tousley, from the common jail in Litchfield, to a gallos viz., erected for that purpose, and set him thereon with a rope round his neck for the space of one full hour, and then I branded him with the capital letter B with a hot iron on his forehead, and then tied him to the tail of a cart, and caused him to be whip'ed thirty-nine stripes on his naked body, in the whole—at four of the most public places in the town of Litchfield, and then returned him to the jail from whence he came. "Test, LYNDE LORD, Sheriff."

Three days after execution of the sentence, Tousley paid the cost in the case, amonting to £153, 8 shillings and six pence, or $531.42.

The execution does not set forth any particulars of the crime charged. Apparently a denial of the divinity of Christ would hav subjected anyone to the penalties of this statute. Some of the ablest civil leaders of the Revolution were Deists, or at least Unitarians—notably Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and John Adams—and any one of them, if he had been a resident of Connecticut, might by the mere statement of his religious views, hav subjected himself to the savage and degrading punishment inflicted on Tousley.

The Only Way to Earn Bread.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

"I am a minister of the gospel!" observed an important gentleman, with a portentous frown, as he took a chair at the managing editor's table. "I am a minister of the gospel, and I want—"

"Certainly," interrupted the managing editor. "We hav no objection to suppressing the facts. Do you know which reporter has them?"

"I don't, sir!" thundered the clergyman. "I wish to remark, sir, that I hav come—"

"Well, just leave the lady's name and I will look after the matter," the managing editor again interrupted, this time quailing slightly.

"It is not a lady at all, sir!" proclaimed the visitor; "I came to tell you, sir, that I am a clergyman, and that—"

"Yes, sir," murmured the managing editor. "It's about his son. What is he charged with?"

"Do you understand me?" roared the divine, rising in wrath. "I tell you, sir, I am a clergyman, and I hav come here for the purpose of—"

"Pardon my error," put in the managing editor, apologetically. "How much of the missionary money do they claim is missing?"

"Will you let me finish, sir?" demanded the pastor. "Did you catch the full import of my first remark? I am a clergyman, sir, and I am come—"

"I beg your pardon," exclaimed the managing editor. "I misunderstood you. It's entirely my fault. When was it left on your doorstep?"

"Never, sir; never!" roared the divine. "Do you hear me, sir? I am a minister of the gospel. I hav waited on you, sir, for the purpose—"

"Why, certainly," smiled the managing editor, "I owe you a thousand apologies for my stupidity. I see it now. On what point are you a heretic?"

"None!" yelled the clergyman. "I am come to tell you that I am a clergyman out of a pulpit, and that I hav accepted a situation in a bank, and—"

"God bless you," ejaculated the managing editor. "And your bondsmen are stuck for how much?"

"That's like you," observed the religious editor, strolling into the sanctum as the horrified guest tore out.

"You hav a wonderful facility for making an ass of yourself whenever you come in contact with orthodox theology. Do you know what that man wanted?"

"Was it a game of poker?" asked the managing editor, dolefully. "It could not be that. They all know I don't play."

"No. It wasn't a game of poker," sniffed the religious editor. "That man is a consistent Christian. He has had hard luck and quit preaching. He is now a bank messenger, and I think he wanted the assistance of the paper in getting a call."

"He'll never fetch it," muttered the managing editor. "I called him on every hand a successful clergyman can hold, and he never came to a show down! By the way, did you hear about that Presbyterian brother out in Montana, who bluffed out three jacks on a four flush? Try and get some argument out of that in favor of practical Christianity as against the old-time custom of pastors holding aloof from their flocks!"

And the managing editor took a fresh piece of paper and started on a laborious editorial demonstrating that the doctrin of infant baptism would outliv the attacks of science on the church, and that a perfect faith in Calvinism was the only way to earn bread.

The Matrimonial Creed.

From the London Freethinker.

Whosoever will be married, before all things it is necessary that he hold the conjugal faith, which is this, that there were two rational beings created, both equal, and yet one superior to the other; and the inferior shall bear rule over the superior; which faith except everyone do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall be scolded at everlastingly.

The man is superior to the woman, and the woman is inferior to the man; yet both are equal, and the woman shall govern the man.

The woman is commanded to obey the man, and the man ought to obey the woman.

And yet they are not two obedients, but one obedient.

For there is one dominion nominal of the husband, and another dominion real of the wife.

And yet there are not two dominions, but one dominion. For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity to acknowledge that wives must submit themselvs to their husbands, and be subject to them in all things; so are we forbidden by the conjugal faith to say that they should be at all influenced by their wills, or pay any regard to their commands.

The man was not created for the woman; but the woman for the man.

Yet the man shall be the slave of the woman, and the woman the tyrant of the man.

So that in all things, as is aforesaid, the subjection of the superior to the inferior is to be believed.

He therefore that will be married must thus think of the woman and the man.

Furthermore, it is necessary to submissiv matrimony that he also believe rightly the infallibility of the wife.

For the right faith is that we believe and confess that the wife is fallible and infallible.

Perfectly fallible and perfectly infallible; of an erring soul and unerring mind subsisting; fallible as touching her human nature, and infallible as touching her female sex.

Who although she be fallible and infallible, yet she is not two, but one woman; who submitted to lawful marriage, to acquire unlawful dominion and promised religiously to obey, that she might rule in justice and folly.

This is the conjugal faith which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot enter into the comfortable state of matrimony.

Not A Success.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Will you please insert the following for the benefit of your readers? Not wishing to be responsible, directly or indirectly, for any loss readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER might suffer in consequence of the Prichard letter, published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, May 12th, I will say to them that some of my neighbors hav returned from the stampede, and report the extensiv gold fields described by Mr. Prichard in the Cœur d'Alene Mountains, a total failure. THOS. BURK.

Bozeman, Mon., June 2, 1883.

Thanks, Brother Kates.

From the Atlanta, Ga., Light for Thinkers.

THE TRUTH SEEKER comes to us every week laden with an abundance of profitable mental influence. It seems to hav lost no editorial strength, but on the other hand, E. M. Macdonald has demonstrated himself a worthy successor to the arisen D. M. Bennett. The sympathy and prompt support of Liberals in sustaining Mary W. Bennett, as the publisher, demonstrates that they are as earnest and generous as the most bigoted churchmen who fears "his satanic majesty," and tries continually to buy claims in the orthodox heaven.

THE London Secular Review says: "Mr. S. P. Putnam's 'Golden Throne' is a work which without doubt entitles the author to the proud distinction of one of the foremost novelists of Freethought. Full of exciting incidents, the story throws open the inmost recesses of the church. The dialogs are brilliant, and it is by means of sparkling conversations that the author's best purposes are achieved. In plot it is worthy of the inventiv faculty of Jules Verne."

Ho! Forward to the front!
Ye "lords of creation," and giv ear to our petition.
We summon ye from north and south, from east and west,
We widows three—all differing in personnel.
A counterpart we seek of temperamental adaptation.
In nature, kindly molded must he be;
In principle and creed, loyal, true, and free;
In financial wealth, enough to share;
In habits, gross—not dare!
In years, upward of forty-three.
Description plain, with stamp and "photo," mail to me.
ELLEN LECLAIR,
New York City P. O.

Communications.

A Curious Confession of Faith.

[The following communication was written for publication in a western Pennsylvania daily paper, but circumstances, unnecessary to mention, defeated the purpose. It now finds utterance in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER].

MR. EDITOR: Business of importance lately requiring me to make a visit to the state of Michigan, it became necessary for me to stay over the Sabbath. At the hotel where I stopped I met an Englishman who had come to this country to see for himself, and decide, after doing so, whether he would not leave England, invest in a cattle or sheep ranche, and become an American citizen. Very judiciously, he seemed not to be in a hurry, but had gone from state to state, and from place to place, remaining for weeks, and sometimes months, at each, so as to study its advantages and become acquainted with the people and with the quality of the soil and climate. In certain parts of Michigan the wild raspberry abounds, and makes the very best of mutton and of wool, and my English acquaintance was meditating whether it would not pay well to purchase four or five thousand acres of land, inclose it with a wire fence, and go into sheep raising. During the evenings at the hotel, when the business of the day was over, we cultivated our mutual acquaintance, during which I discovered that, although a graduate of Oxford University, and a well-read man on general subjects, he was an ardent admirer of the new school of thinkers called Evolutionists, and considered that Darwin, Huxley, and others of the same ilk, were not only scientists, but had a deep religious faith in the truth of what they held. To me, brought up in an orthodox church, it seemed a strange idea, and I hardly knew what to say in reply, for I hav always supposed that the Christian doctrins were the only subjects on which a person could properly be said to exercise faith. But he insisted on it that the Evolutionists, or, as I had been in the habit of calling them, the Infidels, had a creed which they believed in, and would be willing to die for if necessary, just as a Catholic or a Protestant would die for the church belief in which he had been educated. He told me that during his prospecting tour in Michigan he had become acquainted with a leading citizen in a town some miles off, who, finding that he had an untrammeled mind, invited him to attend what he called a Colloquium, which was held weekly on the Sabbath at a settlement called Aurora. He did so, and was so surprised and pleased at what he saw and heard that he had attended every Sabbath since, rain or shine. And as it was now Saturday, he proposed that I should take a seat with him the next morning in a buggy, and attend one of the sessions of the Colloquium. Being so far from home, and where the influence of my example would not be considered bad by my neighbors, I accepted his invitation, and after breakfast we started off to Aurora.

The place of meeting was in a grove, and the house a plain one of wood, with comfortable seats, that would accommodate five or six hundred people, and a stand for speakers, with anteroom on either side. An organ stood on the platform, and in seats on each side sat a dozen or more of singers, who, when the audience had assembled, conspired with the organist in making music. After this was over, and the lid of the instrument let down, a gentleman stepped forward with a manuscript in his hand, and commenced a discussion of what he called one of the articles of their confession of faith. The topic was the different conceptions of the being called God. He then proceeded to quote from the standards of faith as held first by the Catholics; then from the Protestant confessions, chiefly that of the Westminster confession; then from the Armenian, or Methodist, creed; then the Unitarian; and, lastly, the Mormon. I never before heard such a showing up of the points of agreement and disagreement of the various churches concerning God; and, as he proceeded, commenting on the conflict of opinion on this one point, and reminded us that all who held these antagonistic ideas claimed that the Bible took the same view, I wondered what he would substitute for them. He soon satisfied me by saying that this contrariety of view on the most fundamental subject in religion—God—proved the folly of speaking positivly, either one way or the other; and that the most modest and truthful way of treating the matter was to say that, as we had no established facts in the case, we could neither believe nor disbelieve.

The speaker, I should judge, was a Hollander by birth, but he spoke the English language well, and the patois made it all the more interesting to me. He also seems to understand what he was about, and spoke with marked respect of the churches whose conceptions of God he was bound to reject. I sat in one of the side pews with my English friend, and had a good opportunity to see the audience, and I must say I never say a more intelligent-looking set of men and women. And as to attention, they listened with as much eagerness as if the speaker were reading a millionaire's last will and testament which made every one of them a legatee.

It is generally said of this class of people, who, on the subject of religion, differ so diametrically from the churches, that they are good in pulling down, but not in building up; that, in the matter of faith, they send a man out to sea without compass or chart; and that they hav no coherency and no missionary zeal. But if the rest of the Infidels are like those at Aurora, this is not true. At the close of the speaker's address, the audience was again regaled with music, after which a silver-voiced, matronly-looking woman of sixty-odd, who was one of the best readers I ever heard, took the stand, and read their confession of faith. It was a most remarkable document; and after the meeting broke up, I got my English friend to introduce me to the lady who read it with such fine emphasis, and she permitted me to take a copy of it, and I herewith send it to you, hoping you will publish it, and allow your readers to see the thoughts entertained by a large and respectable class of the western people. After I returned to the hotel, I inquired of the landlord, who was a very intelligent Methodist, and he told me that the Aurora Infidels were notorious for their intelligence, their public spirit, and their high moral character in every respect. It would take up too much of your space, and yet it would pay, to giv in detail my English friend's side of the conversation which took place during our return trip from the meeting. But although I am as orthodox as I was before I went west, I must confess that I am staggered by the reasonableness of this Infidel creed, and by the intelligence and earnestness of the people who hold it. I remember reading, when at college, Hugh Miller's prediction in his "Footprints of the Creator," that the controversy between the Bible and those who opposed it as a revelation from heaven would be shifted from the ground it had formerly occupied, and become a question of science; and that all future defenders of the faith, whether in the pulpit or the professor's chair, in order to be successful in the conflict, must be scientific men, able to show that the Bible's teachings were consistent with those of science. Little did I dream, at that time, that in what was a wilderness when the great geologist uttered his warning, I myself would be present, and witness a battle between these two forces, and come away in doubt as to which side would be ultimately victorious.

But I here giv you the confession of faith of the Aurora Colloquium, as I took it down in pencil when I heard it, hoping that, as a sign of the times, you will lay it before your readers:

I.—AS TO MATTER.

We believe in the eternity of matter; that, as its existence never began, so it will never end; that nothing exists outside of matter, but that all the intellectual phenomena we see in men and animals, called mind, are matter, subtilized and etherealized by its own inherent laws, and are among its infinit possibilities.

II.—AS TO THE ORIGIN OF THE EARTH AND SOLAR SYSTEM.

We hold that while the substance of matter never had any beginning, but is eternal, the earth and the rest of the planets which compose our solar system were originally a part of the sun itself, existing in a gaseous state; that they were thrown off into space by the revolution of the sun on its axis, after which, during a process of change continuing for many millions of years, they gradually cooled and hardened, and ultimately assumed their present shape and condition; that as matter is indestructible, but undergoes a constant process of change from one form to another, so the forces of nature, which are but the subtil and self-endowed forms of matter, are corellated and persist in their eternal round of change, yesterday, to-day, and forever.

III.—THE EVOLUTION OF MAN.

We believe that as the oak lay hidden in the germ of the acorn, and was evolved from it by light, heat, and moisture, until it became a tree capable of producing others like itself, so this law of evolution prevails in the animal world, at the head of which man stands; that man himself originated from an infinitesimal atom, passed through all the gradations of being up to his present position in the scale of existence, and that under the same grand law of progress, which is still executing itself, we are encouraged to believe in the ultimate perfectibility of the human race, and labor to that end.

IV.—AS TO ETHICS, OR THE LAW OF MORALS.

We hold that as man is constantly seeking his own happiness in some way or other, nature teaches us that it is both right and a duty to do so, and that as a consequence all pleasure, whether of the intellect, in the attainment of knowledge; the body, in the moderate gratification of its natural appetites, and the affections, which seek their appropriate objects of love, is the right of every person; and that the only limitation of a person's right to the enjoyment of this pleasure is that he shall neither injure himself nor any other human being.

V.—AS TO GOD.

As to the being which men in their ignorance call God, we hold no definit opinions, believing that if there be a personal God at all who requires of his intelligent creatures a belief concerning him, he would certainly hav revealed himself—not in a second or third handed way to a mere fraction of the human family, but to the race in general, and to each member of it in particular, and in such a plain and comprehensible way that, instead of long and bloody wars concerning it, as has been the case for centuries, there would be no misunderstandings, but a perfect agreement concerning the attributes which make up his character.

VI.—AS TO HOLY DAYS.

That while we agree with Paul and with Jesus that all days are alike holy, we consider it both wise and necessary to hav a weekly day of suspension from labor, affording an opportunity to the toiler to rest and secure the comfort and healthfulness of absolute personal cleanliness; and, for all who choose, to assemble together for hearing and discussing scientific, literary, and moral topics interesting and profitable to mankind; and especially for the enjoyment of social intercourse.

VII.—AS TO POLITICAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

We believe that, as all men are created equal in point of natural rights, the end of political government is to secure these rights to the individual citizen, by giving him the advantage of rudimental education, so ordering his environments as to fit him to succeed in the great struggle of life. We hold, also, that the state, being a purely secular institution, should ignore the very existence of any religion, or religious institution, but should guarantee to each citizen the enjoyment of his religion, or non-religion, without any interference whatsoever.

VIII.—AS TO A FUTURE LIFE.

We believe, that, as the life history of the human being before birth is a synopsis, or abridged record, of the evolution of the species, passing through all the changes of development from an atom up to a man; and that as he underwent these wonderful antenatal changes without his personal identity being destroyed, so it is among the confessed promis and potencies of matter that the subtil and etherealized form of it in man which thinks, which recognizes the difference between right and wrong, and which feels responsibility, may continue its identity after the coarser parts of the organism are separated from it, and pass through the changes subsequent to the event called death. If we cherish any hope of immortality, it is based on the two facts that the soul is a material substance and indestructible; and that the possibilities of matter are infinit. And as the believing or disbelieving the proposition will not alter the fact, we leave the question open, while we primarily concern ourselvs in the business of improving our own present condition, as well as that of the human family to which we belong.

Messrs. Editors, if the western creed is the creed of madmen, I think you will agree with me that there is a good deal of method in the madness.

LEX.

More About Materialistic Immortality.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: After reading friend Kirt's article over on this subject, in the last number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I turned back to the issue of April 28th and carefully reread friend Bradford's article on the same subject, and throughout I notice both writers carry this idea—that mind is an entity. Friend Kirt says, "Mind is material; at least, it is a property of matter. All matter, together with the properties thereof, is indestructible; therefore mind is indestructible." Suppose, friend Kirt, that we would say that digestion is material; at least, it is a property of matter. All matter, together with the properties thereof, is indestructible; therefore digestion is indestructible. How will that do? Again, with the beating of the heart, on the same principle, we would say this is material; at least, it is a property of matter, and together with the properties thereof, is indestructible; therefore this beating of the heart is indestructible. And so we might go on, from the soles of our feet to the crown of our head, and we would find that every particular organ, muscle, sinew, vein, artery, limb, etc., has its particular part of work to do to carry on this wonderful machinery called man. Still it is no more wonderful than we notice in many other animals, until we come to the brain. Here we find man occupying a higher development. And yet it is but a few years (apparently) since science unfolded to the world of thinkers the function of the brain as the organ of thought. And now, having attained to this knowledge, we build on what we know, and not on a blind faith, or idle speculation of a spirit entity, or a mind aside and separate from the brain; and so we say that the stomach digests, the heart beats, and the brain thinks, each one performing its own work in its own way, as Mother Nature arranges it.

This brain that does the thinking can be trained to do different kinds of thinking, and thus produce different qualities of mind, the same as the stomach can be trained to produce different kinds of chyle. This idea of a spirit entity or mind in us that runs this machine through this earth life, and at the death of this body escapes and livs on, ready to do and act in a spirit form, separate and apart from matter, is a very old notion, and had its origin in the prehistoric period of the human race, when man was but little above the four-footed animal. The brain was known nothing of as the generator of thought. Men then knew there was matter in the skull, for in their fights they would break each other's heads with war clubs and could see the matter scattered on the ground. Then when they retired to their caves to sleep they would dream of their fighting, and when they awoke they would conclude that there had been a spirit with them during the night. This of course was a war spirit, and hence arose the idea of a spirit in man. Then at other times, when they had their love feasts and their religious festivals, their dreams would be of a very opposit character; and so the idea came to them of good and bad spirits, and of course these good spirits, when they left the body, had a good home in the spirit world, and the bad spirits had a bad place. Hence the origin of the idea of a heaven and a hell. Then, as they advanced in these mental attainments and began to meditate on their surroundings, they observed on every side of them the manifestation of life and motion. Whether they looked around or above them they could see this display of natural phenomena, and the more they meditated on these surroundings the more they became excited over their study; and here was born in man the faculty of marvelousness, or wonder, and the more he ruminated on these natural phenomena the more he was inclined to these reveries. And here we can trace out the birth of marvelousness or spirituality. Now the thought comes to man that there must hav been a maker for all this grand display around and over him; and here was born in him the idea of a god, or gods, for in the earlier unfoldment of the brain they had many gods and goddesses. And now, as they were indebted to this god or gods for all their bounties, and even for life itself, they felt that they must devote a portion of their time and labor to his or their service and glorification, and hence was born the faculty of veneration.

Following along on this line of individual and mental unfoldment comes the wish and desire for a future life beyond the grave, and here is born hope, which says let us pray: "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief" (Mark ix, 24). This fetches us down near to the Salvation Army.

And here we will leave these mere instincts and turn to our reasoning powers, and see what they will tell us on this subject (now in the evening of the nineteenth century) of mind, or spirit, and whether or not it is an entity of itself, and survives the death of the body, or whether it is simply a function of the brain, like sight as a function of the eye, or like hearing as a function of the ear. The reasoning powers now speak and say that mind, or spirit, is a property of matter, and is nothing in and of itself any more than light and hearing are some things in and of themselvs; but as they are words we use to express the function of their separate organs, so with the word mind, it is a word we use to express the function of the brain, and is nothing separate and apart from the brain any more than seeing or hearing is separate and apart from their organs.

But here comes my Christian and Spiritualistic friend and says, "Oh, this is terrible to think of—that when I die I will be dead all over! If this is nature's law, then I say that nature is cruel to run things on this line. Why, I would rather never hav been born. If this present earth life is all there is for me, then I must conclude that the whole plan of creation is a failure, because I stand at the head of all creation, and if I am a failure all creation is a failure." Hold on, there, my dear Christian and Spiritualistic friend; are you not selfish here? Now, in regard to your life being a failure, that depends in a great measure on the use you make of it. If it was your good fortune to hav a good parentage to start with, and your early training was correct, so that you were ready to start in on life's journey when you attained to full age with your brain well stored with useful knowledge, and you were wise in the use you made of this knowledge, life would not be a failure. Now old age is coming to you and you are beginning to look toward the close of life; you hav now got your financial and domestic affairs all settled up in such a way as not to leave trouble behind you. If you ever had your brain befogged with those old superstitious notions about a personal God and a devil, and a local heaven and hell, and a future life beyond the grave, and all that, you hav now outgrown them, and in their place you hav planted the tree of knowledge that is now bearing its fruit. Your mental eyes hav become opened so as to enable you to see that you are a part of the natural universe; that parentage, birth, and growth had put you here on this planet with other men and women, and that when you had attained to maturity you had chosen to yourself a mate from the opposit sex to share with you in the struggles of life; and now from this relation has come another generation. And old age has now come to you, and as a wise, intelligent Freethinker you know that it is only a matter of time until you will pass away and the next generation will take your place. And so we see that one by one we come into life and animation, and one by one we pass away, and our bodies are changed back into other forms of matter; and while our individuality is blotted out, our character, whether good or bad, is left behind us for weal or for woe, and that, although our individuality is gone, the race still livs on forever; and this is true materialistic immortality for the race.

Adrian, May 30, E.M. 283. S. D. MOORE.

Tobacco.

The use of tobacco, which has now become so universal, has a curious and interesting history—curious on account of the novel origin of the habit, and interesting from the illustration it affords of the ease with which people adopt habits and customs, either good or evil, if only helped along by a little persecution.

History tells us that "in 1492, as Columbus lay with his ships beside the island of Cuba, he sent two men to search the land and report what they might see. On their return, among other things, they said they saw the naked savages twist large leaves together and smoke like devils." Since that time a large proportion of the men and boys (and, since the introduction of cigarets, we regret to say, some equivocal women too) of civilized nations hav been following the filthy example of those nasty naked savages.

It was not, however, without meeting with vigorous opposition that tobacco obtained despotic tyranny over human beings.

In Russia its use was prohibited under penalty of the bastinado for the first offense, loss of nose for the second, and deprivation of life for the third.

In Italy the pope fulminated a bull against the filthy weed, and excommunicated all who used it in church.

In Switzerland tobacco users were treated as criminals.

The shah of Persia made tobacco using a capital crime, and many of its devotees were executed.

In Constantinople a Turk was led through the streets with his nose slit and transfixed by a pipe-stem, as a warning to smokers.

King James I. of England expressed his opposition to the weed in a powerful "counterblaste."

Even in this country—the nativ home of tobacco—at a somewhat later period, it use was interdicted to all who had not previously acquired the habit, unless prescribed by a physician as a medicin.

But the devotees of the filthy, fascinating drug steadily increased in spite of all opposition, until its use has become as popular as religious revivals in winter.

Of all the evil habits ever inflicted upon society—next to religious hypocrisy and fanaticism—smoking, chewing, and snuffing are the most detestable, disgusting, and demoralizing.

Tobacco worms that profess Liberalism; Freethinkers who all too freely indulge in quids; truth-seekers that are up to snuff; Agnostics that blow a cloud; Spiritualists and Materialists who spend so much time and energy in befogging each other in smoke; love forbids our stirring you up with the long pole of rancor, but duty demands we assail you with the enticing power of persuasion, although fearing but little good can be accomplished either way.

Freethinkers claim to liv lives of love. Is there anything lovely or lovable in scenting up your clothing until you exude an odor compared to which a defunct mackerel, after ten days lying in mild sunshine, would be sweet perfume? Is there anything lovely in smoking or chewing tobacco, habits productiv of no possible good, and fraught with more evil than a trichinized hog, rendering your bodies as loathsome as turkey buzzards, staining your shirt bosoms and soiling your morals, causing an odoriferous, pestilential stench to exude from every pore and flow in a continuous volume of nauseating breath from your lips?

You profess as Liberals the promotion of the best happiness of all around you. For the sake of consistency, the cause you advocate, and your own self-respect, discard the noxious weed and not go puffing your impurities into the air and squirting your slimy saliva along the pathway of decency and good breeding.

You may wear the neatest of patent leather shoes, the most artistic cut broadcloth, the whitest and glossiest linen, the most exquisit of neckties, but how can you hav the brazen audacity to look in the face of ordinary cleanliness and proclaim yourselvs gentlemen, while tobacco juice—that unclarified, compound, double distilled essence of filth—is oozing from the corner of your mouths and bedaubing your beards?

As Liberals you claim to believe in the equality of the rights of men—and the equality of women to the same rights as men. Of all men else you most claim respect for the rights of the gentle gender. Why then deny your mothers, sisters, wives, and daughters right to the pure air? Why, if they take a morning walk, must they be sickened, poisoned by clouds of foul tobacco smoke from old pipes and bad cigars; why, on retreating to the sanctity of home should they find parlor, bed-room, closet, the whole house, reeking with the fetid odor of stale tobacco smoke.

Would that lovely woman, instead of learning to puff the poisonous cigaret (which she is driven to do, on the same principle that if one does all the family hav to eat raw onions, so as to be able to tolerate the stench of each other's breath), would resist being spit upon, and no longer permit the fragrance and purity which should surround the flowers of love to be contaminated with the effluvia of plug and fine cut.

Freethinkers, are you not a little too free in applying your tobacco-befouled lips to those of virgin purity, and besmearing the cheek of beauty with your nasty smelling kisses? We expect nothing better of orthodox Christians, for they are taught to believe women were created inferior to man, to be held in subjection, the creatures of his will, whose only duty is to submit. But you who claim to practice—instead of only making profession—to do as you would be done by—suppose your wife or daughter, mother or sister, should respond to your fond embrace with a cud of tobacco in her mouth, or return your loving kisses with smoke-scented breath, more disgusting to sensitiv olfactories than a dead polecat.

Ye masculine masticators of vegetable refuse—that none but biped hogs will taste—think the matter over. You hav shaken off the shackles of superstition; will you fail after all of attaining perfect freedom? Shall habit hold you still a slave? Act up to your profession; dare to do right; let nothing prevent you from performing what you know to be duty. Where there is a consciousness of right there is a vast amount of might. Don't shrink from virtuous actions through fear of failure. The fever and ague off fear never need to shake the stamina of honest purpose.

Snuffing is nearly as bad as chewing. It is claimed it clears the head; so it does, of every clean, pure, or bright idea. The less dust in your eyes the clearer you see; the less snuff you cram up your nasal protuberance the clearer your head to think, the better your health, and cleaner your person as well as your morals.

Discard the weed, and expend the vast amount of money now wasted in such nasty indulgence in diffusing the light of scientific truth.

"Oh!" says the tobacco user, "what will you giv me in exchange? You tear down, but you do not build up; you rob me of my solace and comfort in life. What do you offer in its stead?"

Reader, we hav heard that very same reply before in some other connection, and we hav a vague idea it was by the utterer regarded as a clinching and unanswerable argument. Will some truth seeker, or, if they cannot, will they please inquire of some Christian friend, who was the original author of that reply, and publish it in THE TRUTH SEEKER?

Rochester, N. Y. CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

Orthodoxy.

From the Independent Pulpit.

A friend seeks to know what a man has to believe to be orthodox, and whether membership in an orthodox church is a sufficient guarantee of one's real orthodoxy.

When a person believes in special creation, the verbel divine inspiration of the Bible, the fall of man, the divinity of Jesus, vicarious atonement, a personal devil, eternal hell, and the sanctity of the priesthood, he is orthodox, no matter whether he is in the church or not. It is not necessary that he be even a good moral man, much less a church-member. If he believes, or says he believes, these dogmas, he is orthodox. There are thousands of church-members, laymen, and a few preachers, who do not believe them; they are very good men, but they are not orthodox. They hav outgrown orthodoxy, but they remain in the church as the surest way of enjoying quiet and peace. They don't want to be talked about and abused by their neighbors. Orthodoxy is no test of moral goodness or basis of character. It is only a belief, and many very bad and irreligious men are orthodox. They are expecting to repent and take advantage of the vicarious dodge just before shuffling off this mortal coil. It appears that a large majority, nearly all, of the men who are hung, being orthodox, go right into Abraham's bosom. There is nothing so convenient for a bad man as the orthodox doctrin of vicarious atonement. It will serve any sort of a man except an honest, progressiv Freethinker. For such reprobates as these there is no escape from the unquenchable fire of hell.

THE New Haven people are getting tired of the vulgar antics of the Salvation Army, and threaten to arrest the whole crowd for disturbing the peace. Which shows that the New Haven people are unregenerate sinners without a proper fear of the Lord before their eyes.

SOME enthusiastic editor has discovered that the Sunday newspaper will always "hav the pull" over the Sunday preacher, because it doesn't spoil its sermon by passing around the contribution box.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - JUNE 16, 1883.

Its True Character.

We recently chronicled the charge made by Dr. Potter that the Young Men's Christian Association was the "grandest humbug" of New York. Of course this has been denied by the interested persons who get a fat living under the name of charity, but the charge is being amply sustained by parties who hav applied to that institution for help. One of these writers makes the serious assertion that young men are hired by it to get converted and relate their experiences. These are his words, writing of one of the branches in this city:

"The Bowery branch has a number of hangers-on, who do light work about the place, but at prayer-meetings they must applaud and relate experiences, telling how they were saved by prayer. When I attended their noon meetings I saw a young man get up day after day and giv his experience. He was hired for the purpose, and for that they procured him a place."

The association was organized to help deserving young men to procure situations, but it is shown to be worse than useless for that purpose. Employment is procured only for favorits, and for not many of them. The public generally, the Sun says, "hav a prejudice against the young men who make themselvs conspicuous in the association. Some merchants will not employ clerks who hail from there. They are afraid of them. Young men whose piety takes the form cultivated there are distrusted as possible hypocrits. The concern is a manufactory of cant, always odious, but especially obnoxious when it is dealt in by young men. . . Young men of the better sort are loath to be classed with the frequenters of the association." The Sun says Mr. Potter was right in denouncing the institution as a grand humbug, and thinks that he is not alone among the ministers in so regarding it.

Thus is effectually exploded another one of the claims that Christians do much to benefit the world. One after another their charities are found to be selfish and mercenary propagandizing societies or luxurious humbugs, sustained to afford a few scheming secretaries a good living.

The Timidity of Politicians.

The subserviency to the church and clergy of our alleged statesmen is painfully plain in these latter days. The politicians seem to be actually afraid of the pious lobbyists who hang around the halls of legislation looking after the interests of religion. "My church will work against you if you don't vote this way," is the open threat of the religious agent, backed by the mutterings of the sectarian organ. It has been the boast of the Methodists that they elected Grant for the second term, and also put Hayes the backboneless into the White House. Another illustration of the church's power is seen in the neglected condition of the last resting-place of Thomas Jefferson. This has long been a matter of comment, and it was only recently that Congress could screw up its courage to the point of making an appropriation to erect a monument over the remains of the man who with Thomas Paine laid the foundation of our republic. At last the monument is built, and a few of the people of Virginia hav for months past been making elaborate preparations for the unveiling of the monument on the fourth of July next. It was supposed that thousands would come from all parts of the country, but, to the chagrin of the committee of arrangements, the whole affair promises to be a complete failure, and the indications are that the meeting will hardly exceed the dignity of an ordinary cross-roads gathering. Not a single conspicuous statesman of either party has agreed to be present. Ex-President Grant will not be present. Gen. Hancock, Senators Bayard and Thurman, Gov. Cleveland, Gov. Patison, and other expounders of Jeffersonian principles are of the number who hav not agreed to lend interest to the occasion by their presence. The singular apathy that prevails within the borders of the state is also a disappointment.

The reason for this is not far off nor difficult to find. Thomas Jefferson was an Infidel, and the great "statesmen" are all afraid of taking part in any ceremony that brings prominently before the public the fact that it is to an Infidel we owe our splendid form of government. Had Jefferson been a Christian, the clerical Fourth-of-July orators would hav sounded his praises in their loudest tones. As it is, they want the people to forget him, and they help the pious work on by their silence or by belittling his fame when he is mentioned. The politicians take their cues from the pulpit, and when asked to participate in the unveiling of his statue are conveniently busy. Grant is pushing his railroad schemes in Mexico or begging from our government; Hancock is wrapped in his three hundred pounds of flesh and dignity on Governor's Island in New York harbor; Bayard, who represents all Delaware, has sat at the feet of Judge Comegys; Thurman hopes presidential lightning may strike him, and would not offend the churches for the world; and Governors Patison, of Pennsylvania, and Cleveland, of this state, and others who talk glibly of Jeffersonian principles, but act with the Hamiltonian aristocracy, are all too busy to pay a word of tribute to a real statesman. This reflects great discredit on them as men, although it may show their shrewdness as politicians. This country greatly needs a revival of honesty in legislators and executivs, and in no phase of affairs is this need more apparent than in the un-Jeffersonian unity of church and state, of priests and politicians.

Putting the Sunday Laws On.

The following letter tells its own story:

DUNDEE, ILL., June 6, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Will you kindly inform me through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER if there is any existent law in the United States to compel a man to close his business on Sundays? The city "dads" here hav just passed an ordinance to the effect that all places of business in future must be closed on Sunday at 10 A.M. sharp; and as the effect of such a prohibition will prove most disastrous to my trade—Sunday being my harvest, and equal to any other three days of the week—I would like to know if they hav any legal right to make and enforce obedience to any such arbitrary laws as these with impunity.

Dundee is a really pleasant little town, cosily nestled in one of the prettiest spots in the Fox River valley the eye ever rested upon; but, like most other small country towns, is a regular hot-bed of religious fanaticism. I will venture to say that we hav as complete a selection of the real, genuin, fossilized specimens of the old faith here as any town of its size in this or any other state in the Union—regular "old-timers"—who are so full of piety and godly zeal that to pile on the fagots and apply the torch to such vile heretics as myself, who are infamous enough to regard every day alike, and who believe in no religion but that of humanity, would be to them a joy unspeakable. But as they can't do that, the next best thing in order, it seems, is to try and starve me out by ruining my business and preventing me from getting a living. And to win the favor and approbation of such a saintly herd as this, the Sunday Closing law was passed by the driveling idiots we call our "city fathers," who seem to recognize no law but such as cramp the sympathies and that yield only to the gratification of their own miserable selfishness.

Of course, if the law is against me I must submit; but if it is not, and I hav any rights and the law will sustain me, they will find it as hard to bulldoze me out of them as into the nonsensical notion that some day I am to be converted into kindling-wood to keep the Christians' hell in full blast, as my reward for refusing to take stock in their mythical doctrin of gods, ghosts, and goblins. Yours fraternally, WM. SMITH.

We fail to see where the town authorities of any place get their right to close places of business on Sunday, but Sunday laws are on the statute books of nearly every state in the Union, and municipalities, following this bad example, enact rules for the guidance of their citizens. The Constitution of the United States will not let Congress make laws respecting the establishment of religion, but most state constitutions hav done what the United States cannot do, and that is, practically recognize Christianity by recognizing Christianity's God. This is directly contrary to the spirit and intention of the Infidel founders of our government, but there never has been a country where Christians had control in which they did not enact laws directly oppressing a large portion of the people.

Municipalities hav a right, through their legally-elected representativs, to make all necessary laws not in opposition to the state constitution. They can say that one day in seven shall be a legal holiday, but their right to enforce it as a religious festival or holy day has never been admitted by other than Christian zealots. However, they do it, and there appears to be no remedy at law, for nearly all the judges are in sympathy with the church party. We advise Mr. Smith to educate his "city dads" by circulating among them some Liberal and anti-Sabbatarian literature. Perhaps they can be enlightened sufficiently to repeal the unjust ordinance.

Hav Gibbon's Works Outlived their Usefulness?

The Rev. Joseph Henry Allen, of Massachusetts, has written a book on the early history of Christianity. The literary reviewer of the New York Sun says this work can be recommended as a substitute for Gibbon's "History of Christianity," because Mr. Allen has studied the subject from its ethical side, while Gibbon confined himself more particularly to a history of the facts. "The destructiv work of criticism," says the reviewer, "was performed so long ago, and has been so thoroughly accomplished, that a salutary change has taken place in the posture and temper of rationalistic students of Christian history. They hav no longer anything to fear from Christianity; they regard it as a venerable ruin, as, on the whole, a beneficent, though now obsolete, system of pious imposture, and they are able to examin its monuments and records appreciativly, sympathetically, in the true historical as distinguished from the polemical spirit. It has become, indeed, a mark of semi-education and pueril ostentation to discuss Christianity in a disdainful or vindicativ way, and it is a blunder, therefore, to recommend Gibbon to the young seeker after truth, unless the information to be garnered from the caustic pages of the historian is supplemented and interpreted by the more benignant light reflected from the impartial scholarship and liberal thought of later times."

We cannot altogether coincide with this view of the matter. The work of destructiv criticism, it is true, was performed long ago, but not all the world yet, by any means, is aware of that fact. Nor will one out of one hundred Christians believe it, if told, on the bare assertion. There is still need for the facts to be repeated again and again, and a consideration of merely the ethical side of the question will not do. The "higher criticisms" of Mr. Allen, Prof. Robertson Smith, the Rev. Mr. Chadwick, and others are useful, but Gibbon's "History of Christianity," Paine's "Age of Reason," Ingersoll's writings, and papers like THE TRUTH SEEKER are yet needed, and will do good work where mere abstractions would produce no effect whatever. So long as the Bible is believed to be the word of God and the Christian religion divine, so long will there be need for Gibbon to be read, so long will Paine's and Ingersoll's works be popular; and THE TRUTH SEEKER will continue to assault the foundation of Christianity so long as there are those who believe that foundation to be anything more than the paganism and fraud which Gibbon shows that it is.

"A Doctrin Infernal."

The great Brooklyn preacher is rapidly coming over to Rationalism. He has within the last year or two thrown away as dishonoring to God—to whom or which Mr. Beecher clings with great pertinacity—the basic principles of Christianity, and last Sunday he pitched the doctrin of vicarious atonement on to the heap of previously discarded rubbish. In this, says the World, he has "cut loose finally from everything that could be considered orthodox. He has approached so near to Ingersoll in his Liberality that we greatly fear the Infidel lecturer will find his business greatly interfered with next season." We presume the colonel will not lament much that Beecher is coming up higher, and will rejoice that he has had the courage to voice his convictions of the "doctrin infernal," which he did in these words:

"No view of God or of the atonement is the right view that does not present the hopeful side. Any view that represents God as an avenger is a false view.

"The idea that God had determined to destroy the whole world, and that Jesus Christ said, 'I will go on earth and die in their stead,' is a doctrin as infernal as if it had come from the bottomless pit.

"Any view that makes God first angry and then placated is blasphemous.

"God's brooding love, not God's avenging law, is the doctrin of the Bible. God-saving is the doctrin of the Bible, and not God-destroying. Hundreds of young preachers swear to preach this blasphemous system, not knowing what they do, and when they wake up and find what they hav sworn to preach they are silent.

"They say of me that I hav beaten down a man of straw. I am not beating down a man of straw; I am beating down a mummy that stands in the creeds of the world to-day, and every generation of ministers by that. But the men who are to preach that say, 'We don't believe it'—and they don't believe it. Very well; what kind of moral honesty is this? They say, 'The church does not believe it; we don't believe it; we don't preach it; come and see what we preach.' Yes, they preach one way, but the confession of faith to which they hav subscribed is another way.

"Men are asking, 'What is this new theology?' There isn't any; but men are finding their way back to the old theology—that is all. It is a march backward—not forward.

"It is the renaissance of theology fighting against the Byzantian, and the Byzantian will go down and the new light will go up. I hav heard men say of me, 'He is preaching a mush of divine benevolence.' I was not. I was simply taking away the barbaric notion of an avenging God. I hav been preaching the fatherhood and motherhood of God.

"If we sin we shall in no way escape the penalty. How long it will last I do not know; that it will last forever I do not believe.

"That men are to be made to suffer forever, to hav an eternity of endless torment, I shall not believe outside of a lunatic asylum.

"I will not go to heaven if I must go through that infernal Confession of Faith to which I once subscribed—God forgiv my ignorance. I abhor it."

This repudiation of the Confession of Faith and the church creeds does honor to Mr. Beecher, and it is a great triumph for the Rationalists that the foremost preacher of the age comes so squarely over to their side, conceding what they all along hav affirmed—that the Christian idea of salvation is the most monstrous perversion of justice ever conceived by any theology. It is a wonder to us how any man with a heart in his breast could ever believe such an infernal scheme to hav been originated by a God of love.

It is needless to say that Mr. Beecher will not be burnt for this expression of his heresy. Times hav changed recently.

The Monument Fund.

The amounts received the past week are as follows:

Prev'sly acknowl'd,	$803 42	T. P. Frank,	$2 00
Mrs. Letsie A. Allen,	100 00	J. N. Newman,	25
A. L. Thompson,	1 00	James Oliver,	1 00
Charles Nelson,	1 00	Mrs. Florry Lake,	1 00
J. Petty,	75	W. Ennor,	1 00
W. Hanson,	1 00	L. S. Burdick,	1 00
Dr. J. H. Moore,	1 00	P. W. Darby,	50
		Total, - -	$915 92

Notes.

General Sheridan is to describe in the July number of the North American Review the part that he took in compelling the surrender of General Lee.

Talmage says everybody ought to sit still in times of excitement. That is certainly an orthodox sentiment; but how would it work if he should sit still in the pulpit? Probably his audience would diminish in direct ratio with his jumps.

The New York World says Vanderbilt is no more fit to run a railroad than Anthony Comstock is to be president, which is pretty rough on Vanderbilt. If the comparison is just, he is not competent to navigate an empty wheelbarrow downhill.

The first impression with many—possibly a majority—like ourselvs, on reading Mr. Putnam's article in this week's issue, will be, probably, that he has totally demolished Mr. Andrews. "But wait for what the Pantarch has to say in reply," says a Universologist, who has had an opportunity of reading Mr. Putnam's paper. We wait.

"What is pastoral visitation?" inquires the Rev. James M. Whiton, D.D., in an article just published in a religious paper. Exactly what "pastoral visitation" is we hav never been there to observe, but for some of its general results we would refer Mr. Whiton to the works of the ecclesiastical historian, Billings. His "Crimes of Preachers" does not leave a very large field for doubt open on that subject.

"A National Prophetic and Holiness Convention of special interest," according to prospectus, "is to be held by able and devoted ministers of the various Christian denominations, at Lake Walden, Concord, Mass., on the Fitchburg Railroad, sixteen miles from Boston, commencing Saturday, June 9th, and closing the 18th." Poultry and servant girls in the vicinity of Lake Walden will please take notice and roost high.

The Winsted Press says: "The Boston Herald thinks Rev. Joe Cook had 'better take another tour and forget to come back.' The Chicago News calls him 'an intelligent tramp.' The Inter-Ocean says 'he is not unlike a dog, sniffing and growling about empty woodchuck holes and barking furiously at shadows.' The Times remarks that Cook 'goes round the world culling the ravishing dollar and elevating the human family wherever it will consent to be elevated at Cook's prices.' A prominent New York daily speaks of him as a 'somewhat reverend.' Another New York paper of wide circulation has called him a liar, with multitudinous variations in its conjoined adjectivs; and a popular home verdict is that he is 'all mouth.'" It is shrewdly surmised that the "New York paper of wide circulation" is The Truth Seeker, for, if there is any variety of liar we hav not called Cook, the omission was unintentional, and will be rectified upon hearing of it. He is a liar in all the shades and meanings of the word.

The Home Secretary has refused to release Foote and Ramsay, the imprisoned editor and publisher of the Freethinker. Mr. Henry Kemp's sentence expired May 25th, and he is now a free man, but sorely broken down in health. The treatment of all the prisoners is shocking—solitary confinement in a six by nine cell for twenty-two of the twenty-four hours of the day, and the extra hour of recreation has only been granted for the past few weeks. The Christian prosecutors would undoubtedly be pleased if the imprisonment should prove fatal, but their hopes will be thwarted, for the condemned men bear up bravely and are determined to liv long enough to force their enemies to regret the persecution.

Between the Christian at Work and the Christian Advocate there is a discussion as to whether or not the cause of Christ is flourishing as it should be in Skowhegan, Maine. A correspondent of the first paper says it is not, and a correspondent of the second says it is. The editor of the Christian at Work thinks that, as the Congregationalist church at that place has only 213 members out of a population of 4,000 or 5,000; as less than $2 per head was raised among the members in 1882, and no conversions made or baptizing done, the record for Skowhegan last year is not very inspiring. It may be cited as a fact that the true condition of religion in most localities is not generally half as inspiring as the reports sent from them to the religious papers.

"When the critics of religion shall do their share of the world's work, when the Girards shall be the rule, and the Greens, and Morgans, and Coopers, and Lenoxes, and Slaters, and Peabodys, and Stuarts, and the great host of Christian benefactors—when such as these shall prove the exception, then, and not till then, may Christianity hav occasion to pause and ask itself if it has not survived its usefulness."

The foregoing is from the Christian at Work. It would serve in a measure to extract the point from this flight of rhetoric to inform the writer of it that Cooper was not a professing Christian, which is a fact. Peter Cooper's greatest benefaction was dedicated to science and art. The Christian at Work might hav defeated the object of its remarks still more thoroughly by mentioning James Lick, of California, who, though an Infidel, was as much a benefactor of mankind as any of those named.

"When a serious disaster occurs almost everybody looks around for a scapegoat on which to lay the blame. This is perhaps the reason why some of the newspapers are virtually charging the trustees of the East River Bridge with the responsibilities for the disaster which happened last week. If they had been omniscient they might hav prevented it; but omniscience does not happen to belong to our nature."

We find this profound reflection in the orthodox Independent. While the subject of omniscience is up for discussion it may be in order to remark that if the lack of that attribute exculpates the bridge officers, the possession of it would seem to inculpate whatever governing power is endowed with it. The bridge officers, according to Dr. Storrs, placed that structure in the hands of "Almighty God" that he might bless the enterprise. Can that being be excused from responsibility on the same plea with which the Independent would clear the trustees?

The Rev. Mr. Buckley complains that when religion appears upon the theatrical stage it is usually represented by a "sporting parson, or an Aminidab Sleek, or the hypocrit." This in the North American Review. We would remind Mr. Buckley that the drama seeks to represent upon the stage persons and things as they appear most prominently in the world at large. If there were fewer sporting parsons, Aminidab Sleeks, and hypocrits off the stage, we should hav fewer of them on it. Christians, however, are chronic growlers. They are not content with the stage as it is, and when Mr. Salmi Morse attempted to "elevate" it by putting Christ and the apostles upon it in the Passion Play, they were not apparently any better satisfied and suppressed him in the interests of Christian morality. John Howson, the actor, made up as Talmage, was also denounced. What under the sun do the religious people want on the stage anyway? They ought to find some consolation in the fact that the defaulting deacon, the adulterous minister, and the missionary among the heathen with a half dozen dusky wives hav not yet been dramatized.

Gov. Cleveland, of this state, had the courage to veto the legislature's appropriation to help support the Catholic Protectory. His reasons are: "The name of this institution implies that only Roman Catholic children are there provided for. If this be so, that fact furnishes a good reason why public funds should not be contributed to its support. A violation of this principle in this case would tend to subject the state treasury to demands in behalf of all classes of sectarian institutions, which a due care for the money of this state and a just economy could not concede, and which would yet hav a justification in precedent. It will be seen, too, that the delinquents received at this institution are committed to its care by the authorities of the city of New York. Thus, it appears to be local in its purposes and operation, which affords, it seems to me, an additional reason why it should not be aided by the state. I am informed that the municipality of New York pays a stated and reasonable compensation for the support and maintenance of such juvenil delinquents as are committed to this protectory. If this be true, even the plea of want and necessity cannot be urged to justify this appropriation."

The Banner of Light speaks right out when the liberty of the people is assailed by the church. Recently the clergymen in Berkshire county, Massachusetts, presented petitions against running trains on Sunday; but the railroad company disregarded them, in consequence of which the Massachusetts authorities ordered the trains stopped last Sunday. For the present, therefore, no Sunday trains will be run further than North Canaan, Conn., near the Massachusetts line. And the Banner asks: "Now the question arises, will the people of this state tamely submit to hav their rights thus invaded by a few bigots? Ought such 'blue laws' to remain on our statute book? We believe the people hav just as much right to ride on Sunday as they hav to walk. If this edict is carried into effect in one county it can be in every county. Is Suffolk county ready for the issue? Will the railroad and steamboat companies here cease running Sundays because a few zealous churchmen desire them stopped? We hope not. The same spirit that hung innocent people and expelled the Quakers from the state nearly two hundred years ago, is still rampant in our midst. Will the people submit to these clerical bigots? is the question of the moment."

In answer to a correspondent who inquired who wrote the sentence, "These are the times that try men's souls," the Chicago Inter-Ocean, after correctly naming Thomas Paine as the author, says he "professed to believe that men had no souls." We would like to ask the editor of the Inter-Ocean's "Curiosity Shop" where he gets the authority for this statement. Paine said he "hoped for happines beyond this life," and if he did not believe that he had a soul, on what did he base his hope? The fact is, Paine was a Deist, believing in a God and immortality, but emphatically denying that the Bible was in any way God's word. His reasons for rejecting the Bible hav never been, and cannot be, refuted. His political pamphlets also breathe the true democratic-republican spirit. He and Jefferson were the men who fashioned and formed this republic which the Christians are now trying to mold into a theocratic despotism. The editor of the Inter-Ocean's "Curiosity Shop" will do well to inform himself on these subjects before speaking so oracularly as is his habit. Once before he has had to eat his words of condemnation of Freethinkers, and unless he soon contracts the habit of speaking and writing the truth, the Inter-Ocean will do well to abolish his department.

All the leading scientists and Liberals of England hav signed the petition for the release of the imprisoned Freethinkers. Among the names on the scroll of honor are Professors Huxley, Tyndall, Ray Lankester, Macalister, Herbert Spencer, Leslie Stephen, and Frederic Harrison. The leading physicians, surgeons, artists, and men of letters hav also signed. Not a few clergymen hav joined in the "prayer" to the Home Secretary, one of them going so far as to thank the presenter of the "prayer" for the opportunity to place his name on record. In bitter contrast to these is the refusal of George Jacob Holyoake, the renegade to liberty. Although once imprisoned for heresy himself, and not now professing to be a Christian, he refuses to ask for this reparation because, forsooth, he thinks the prisoners "committed an outrage on the feelings of Christians" in caricaturing their Christ. The poor, dear Christians' feelings must be respected though they thrust the knife through the heart of every Infidel in England. It is no matter that not an hour passes that the feelings of Freethinkers are not outraged by the church and her whelps of bigotry. No one must strike back, says Mr. Holyoake. We wonder if receiving government pay has anything to do with his changed attitude. The role of Judas Iscariot fits him well. A few pieces of silver per annum seem more to him than the lives of the martyrs or the cause of freedom. It will be well for Freethought when he follows the example of his patron saint and commits harikari or hangs himself.

To the Editor of the "Advocate."

"The editor sits in his easy chair,
Scratching his head, for he had no hair
To tear from his weary and aching pate,
As he thinks of the horrible, horrible fate
Of a man condemned to earn his meat
By running a weakly Christian sheet,"
And to wait for a quarter, wherewith to dine,
Till he hears from his Isabella mine.
But such is life, and such is the rod
They all pass under who worship—Fraud.

Lectures and Meetings.

Mr. Charles Watts writes us that he thinks of again visiting this country in September and lecturing for three months.

W. S. Bell will be in Iowa through June, and will speak at any point in the state where lectures are desired. Mr. Bell reports that he is meeting with unusually good success.

Mrs. Amelia H. Colby will answer calls for Sunday lectures in New York state and vicinity. Her address until September next will be 123 West Eagle street, Buffalo, N. Y.

W. F. Jamieson lectured in Janesville, Minn., week before last to full houses. On the 17th inst. he spoke in Alma City, Minn., and for the four days ending on the 17th in Waseca. His permanent address is Lake City, Minn.

Mrs. H. S. Lake began her second engagement with the Liberals of Salem and Alliance, O., Sunday, June 3d. She is to speak at the Michigan State Convention, which begins August 17th. Parties wishing lectures will write her at Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio.

Mr. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League, leaves New York on Friday, June 15th, on his proposed trip to organize State Liberal conventions. He can be found in Philadelphia at 223 North Twelfth street, Saturday and Sunday, the 16th and 17th; at Harrisburg on the 18th, Altoona the 19th, and Pittsburgh, at 99 Fifth avenue, on the 20th and 21st. From there his program will be as announced last week. It is hoped as many Liberals as can will meet him at the proposed times and places, and plan for state conventions.

"A Truth Seeker Around the World;" 4 volumes, cloth, $6.50; leather, $9.50; morocco, gilt edges, $10.50

Communications.

Paul at Berea.

At Berea the Jews being more "liberal" than those of Thessalonica received the missionaries kindly, listened to them gladly in the synagog, and searched the scriptures to find whether what they said about Jesus was true! And here as in Thessalonica it is said that "of the Greeks many men and women of note" believed—which we disbelieve. But Jewish emissaries from Thessalonica stirred up the people, and the result was that "the brethren sent away Paul, that he might go down to the sea. But Silas and Timothy abode in that city."

There is no evidence that Paul ever wrote a letter to the Bereans, nor does he speak of them anywhere. The city is now called Veria or Kara Veria, and has 15,000 to 20,000 inhabitants (Smith's Bib. Dic.).

PAUL AT ATHENS.

Some brethren of Berea accompanied Paul to Athens. They probably went by land 16 miles to Dium, and thence by sea about 250 miles. Paul sent back by them a letter to Silas and Timothy, urging them to come to him at once.

In Athens there was a synagog, and in it Paul spoke. It is also said that he disputed with the Epicureans and Stoics in the market place daily.

"And one and another of them said: What doth this word-monger mean? Others said: He announceth foreign deities; because he preached to them Jesus and his resurrection. And they took him and brought him to the place of judgments called Areopagus, and said to him: May we know what this new doctrin which thou preachest is? For thou scatterest in our ears strange words; and we wish to know what they are. For all the Athenians and the foreigners residing there cared for nothing else but to tell or hear something new. And as Paul stood in the Areopagus he said: Men, Athenians, I perceive that in all things ye are excessiv in the worship of demons. For as I was rambling about and viewing the temples of your worship, I met with an altar on which was inscribed, To the hidden God. Him therefore, whom ye worship while ye know him not, the same I announce to you" (xvii 18-23).

The rest of the speech we thus abridge:

God dwelleth not in temples, is not ministered to by human hands, and has no wants. He is not afar off, for in him we liv, move, and exist, and as one of your own wise men has said, from him is our descent. Therefore the offspring of the deity ought not to carve his image in metal or stone. The times of this error God hath made to pass away, and now he commandeth all men to repent; because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge all the earth, by the man whom he hath designated, and whom he raised from the dead.

"And when they heard of the resurrection from the dead, some of them ridiculed, and others of them said: At another time we will hear thee on this matter. And so Paul departed from among them. And some of them adhered to him and believed; one of these was Dionysius from among the judges of the Areopagus, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them" (32-34).

This judge, Dionysius, is claimed by the Catholic church to be the famous St. Denis who first converted France, and wrote certain divine works, alleging that he learned the use of the holy sacraments from the apostles. But the Protestants deny the authenticity of the said documents and assign them to a latter period; such being the only make-shift of the heretics when they see all antiquity against them! (Notes to Latin Vulgate, Acts xvii, 34).

Paul's stay in Athens was short, and the only allusion he ever makes to it is this:

"And because we could no longer endure it, we were willing to be left alone at Athens, and to send to you Timothy our brother" (1 Thes. iii, 1, 2).

If therefore he expected Silas and Timothy to help him at Athens there was no use for them. Indeed there were probably but few Jews in that city, for no trace of a synagog has been found there, and the passages in the Talmud from which it has been inferred that the Jews were numerous in Athens, apply to a much latter period (Farrar's St. Paul, p. 302).

The poet actually quoted in Paul's speech, says Farrar, is Aratus of Celicia, but the same sentiment is repeated in a Hymn to Jove by Kleanthes, and was probably common to other sacred poems (Ibid, p. 308).

On the question whether Paul spoke Greek at Athens or anywhere else we take the negativ. Canon Farrar, who believes he did, admits that "he knew little or nothing of Hellenic story," and that "the notion that he was a finished classical scholar is a delusion" (Ibid, p. 296-7). He went only to places where there were Jews; and those Jews doubtless retained the use of their nativ Aramaic tongue, and taught it to their children.

Paul founded no church at Athens, and Christianity was slow in getting a foothold there.

PAUL AT CORINTH.

From Athens Paul went to Corinth, about fifty miles distant. Here he met a Jew named Aquila, a nativ of Pontus, just arrived from Italy, with his wife Priscilla, "because Claudius Cæsar had commanded that all Jews should depart from Rome." This statement is probably based on what Suetonius says of Claudius, to wit, that "he drove the Jews out of Rome who were constantly rioting at the instigation of Chrestus." Claudius was not the first to banish Jews from Rome; Tiberius did it before him.

But if there is any truth in what is said about Aquila and Priscilla in Acts, some early scribe has interpolated the clause about Claudius, for Paul knew no more of Claudius than the Rev. George Whitefield knew of General Andrew Jackson.

Aquila and his wife, being tent makers, and Paul having learned the same trade, he took lodgings and worked with them.

"And he spoke in the synagog every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the profane ("Greeks" in the Greek codices). And when Silas and Timothy had come from Macedonia, Paul was impeded in discourse, because the Jews stood up against him and reviled, as he testified to them that Jesus is the Messiah. And he shook his garments and said to them, Henceforth I am clean; I betake myself to the gentiles" (xviii, 4-6).

The Greek codices hav, "Your blood be upon your head henceforth," etc.

"And he went away and entered into the house of a certain man named Titus, one who feared God and whose house adjoined the synagog" (7).

The occurrence at this point of the name Titus is a puzzle. In the Latin Vulgate it is Titus Justus, but in all the early Greek codices it is only Justus, who is never mentioned by Paul unless it be in Col. iv, 11, while Titus is oftener alluded to than even Timothy. Canon Farrar suspects that Titus was converted in Cyprus by Paul. It is necessary to believe that he was converted during Paul's first missionary journey if we would harmonize the account in acts of the meeting of the apostles at Jerusalem with Paul's own account of his second visit there, when he says he took Titus with him. That event we hav already passed in the book of Acts, which never mentions Titus at all, unless it be at the point where we now are. We therefore believe that the order of events has been changed by the writer or compiler, and that Paul first met Titus, the Aramaean, at Corinth.

"And Crispus, the president of the synagog, believed on our Lord; he and all the members of his house. And many Corinthians gave ear and believed in God and were baptized."

Crispus is mentioned once by Paul (1 Cor. i, 14). But why should he ignore Justus, alias Titus, whose house afforded him a refuge when driven from the synagog? We cannot believe that Paul was such an ingrate, and we suspect that the pious Justus was the beloved Titus, who is named nine times in the second epistle to the Corinthians.

The writer of Acts says that many Corinthians were baptized. Paul says he baptized none but Crispus and Gaius and the household of Stephanas. Neither Silas nor Timothy was there; did Paul confer authority on Crispus, or Gaius, or the uncircumcised Titus Justus to baptize all the rest? We suspect that most of the baptizing was done some time afterward by Apollos, who had been a disciple of John the Baptist.

"And the Lord said to Paul in a vision: Fear not, but speak and be not silent; for I am with thee, and no one is able to harm thee; and I hav much people in this city. And he resided in Corinth a year and six months, and taught them the word of God" (9-11).

Paul's entire sojourn in Macedonia and Achaia was probably less than two years, according to Acts.

"And when Gallio was proconsul of Achaia the Jews assembled together against Paul" (12).

Marcus Annæus Novatus, after being adopted by the rhetorician Lucius Junius Gallio, took the name of Lucius Junius Annæus Gallio.

"He is supposed by some persons to be the Gallio who was deputy or proconsul in Achaia, before whom St. Paul was arraigned" (Lip. Biog. Dic.).

"Whether he is the same Gallio who is mentioned in Acts as proconsul of Achaia is uncertain" (Smith's Dic. of Gr. and Rom. Biog.).

"Junius Annæus Gallio, the Roman, was proconsul of Achaia when St. Paul was at Corinth, A.D. 53" (Smith's Bib. Dic.).

"He was proconsul under Claudius when Paul first visited Corinth, . . . A.D. 49" (McCl. & Str. Cyc.).

The time of Paul's arrival at Corinth is variously conjectured to be from A.D. 48 to 54, but most of the authorities say 52 or 53. Gallio was a senator in the reign of Tiberius, who is said to hav banished him and afterward imprisoned him at Rome. He was a rhetorician, but probably not a great one, and his work on rhetoric is lost. He is said to hav been a lovable and popular man, and to hav died by suicide A.D. 65. But even if he was proconsul of Achaia, of which we find no evidence except in Acts, what proof is there that he ever knew Paul? None; nor hav we the slightest fear that any will ever be found.

"And they brought him before the judgment seat, saying: This man persuadeth the people to worship God contrary to the law. And when Paul requested that he might open his mouth and speak, Gallio said to the Jews: If your accusation, O Jews, related to any wrong done, or any fraud or base act, I would listen to you suitably. But if the contests are about words and about names, and concerning your law, ye must see to it among yourselvs, for I am not disposed to be a judge of such matters. And he repelled them from the judgment seat. And all the profane ["Greeks" in the English version, and in some Greek codices] laid hold of Sosthenes, an elder of the synagog, and smote him before the judgment seat. And Gallio disregarded these things" (12-17).

This Sosthenes is supposed by some to hav been one of Paul's converts who was maltreated by his own countrymen. But the more rational view is that he was a bigoted Jew, and probably the successor of Crispus in the old synagog. The first epistle to the Corinthians is written in the name of Paul "and Sosthenes, a brother;" but if Sosthenes of Corinth became a believer, it was probably after Paul left that city (Smith's Bib. Dic.).

This is all the account we hav of Paul at Corinth, and much of it is no doubt fictitious. He probably preached in a private house or small public room, and supported himself in part by manual labor, as will appear more fully hereafter.

Moral Right and Civil Rights.

Says Mr. W. H. Gantz in his reply to me: "Man has the 'natural right' to so 'control his person' as to fulfil the useful, ennobling, and elevating conditions of life. But he has no right, either natural or unnatural, to the 'control' of his person in an abuse of the conditions of life which prostitutes all the nobler elements of his nature."

This contains, in essence, about all that Mr. Gantz says. Let us briefly examin his position.

In the first place, it is self-evident that whatever a man does which brings him in conflict with the superior forces of nature will work injury to him, though he may be utterly ignorant that he is in any way doing wrong. No one can dispute this plain proposition, or deny that is is immoral in the truest sense of the word for any man to do that which may result in injury to himself, or which he may hav good reason to think will work an injury to others through its effects on himself. In this sense we all stand by the definition of "right" given by Mr. Gantz. No Liberal, burdened with a sense of the responsibilities resting upon him as an apostle of the new faith, could conscientiously do, or advise another to do, that which would diminish the sum of human happiness.

Now all this is within the sphere of morals, with which law should hav absolutely nothing to do. When man is free only to do "right," he is not free at all; he does not do right. His actions under such conditions are completely negativ. When he has a "right" only to go to the east, he has not one iota of freedom; his act in going east cannot by any possibility possess a moral attribute.

When Mr. Gantz is considering the subject of right action he should never forget that he does "right" only when he has the "right," so far as the legal or physical restraint of his fellows is concerned, to choose the wrong way, and yet goes the right way. In other words, man only can do "right" when he has the civil "right" to do wrong. Action under other circumstances is negativ merely.

It would seem that all this explanation is unnecessary, for I all along hav insisted upon and made clear the fact that there is a distinction and a difference—a difference wide as the seas—between righteousness and civil or natural right. It is a standing and unappeased complaint of ours that the prohibitionists accuse us of opposing temperance in effect, if not in intent, because we oppose compulsiv methods in temperance work.

Mr. Gantz seems to be a gentleman, and I much regret to hav to say that he has utterly failed to grasp the question at issue, and is but striking the air. Let me giv an illustration or two to make clear this distinction which, so far, he has failed to apprehend. Suppose that I work out in the field on a cold, drizzly day, as I hav very often, knowing that by so doing I am endangering my health and running the risk of leaving those dependent upon my labor without the means to procure food, clothing, etc.; that certainly is not, I confess, in the highest sense a moral act, and yet will Mr. Gantz venture to claim that he has the right to appeal to the state to prevent me from so doing? Or, I spend a portion of my time in reading the lightest kind of light fiction; that again is a censurable act, but is Mr. Gantz or the state my guardian, with right to snatch from my hand the offending publication?

These instances might be multiplied by thousands, but two are sufficient to demonstrate that while the individual is capable of committing innumerable acts which are in violation of right, it is only when he crosses the boundary line which separates his from his neighbor's rights that the state has any office as mediator or arbitrator.

Another almost universal misapprehension of the prohibitionists is expressed in this remark of Mr. Gantz's: "You [I] would defend C.'s 'right' to 'exchange' such a glass—of physical, mental, and moral destruction—for ten cents; but you would blush to make such a nefarious 'exchange' yourself." Would Mr. Gantz suppress every business and profession in which his conscientious scruples would not permit him to engage? Such is the logical deduction from his words. Certainly I hav decided objections to engaging in the business of the liquor dealer, just as I hav to becoming a priest. Both of these men and mind destroyers, both of them fail to giv an equivalent for value received, but so long as their dupes are unenlightened enough to pour their earnings into their tills and coffers they will liv and flourish. I am expressing my sober conviction when I say that I esteem the cleric the greater enemy of mankind, for the single reason that his victims look to him in every joy and in every affliction of life; and in the hour of death they turn to him as to the embassador of their God. Men trained in the school of the priest cannot reason clearly on any subject. Then he destroys, if possible, the spirit of doubt, which is the hope of the world.

But the saloon-keeper is a man like unto the men who drink at his bar. If liberty, science, and hygien cannot compete with him unaided by the arm of the law, then is our peaceful warfare against the thrice-armed priest of God in vain. Every argument which can be brought forward to sustain the plea for the curtailment of man's physical liberties applies with even greater force in the domain of mental intoxication.

E. C. WALKER.

Literature.

New Books.

OPINIONS PASSED UPON THEM BY "THE TRUTH SEEKER," MRS. SLENKER, AND MISS. WIXON.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA. By Frederick Larkin, M.D. 290 pp. Illustrated. Price, $1.50. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

There is nothing of more fascinating interest to the student of American history than the questions, Who built the mounds of Western New York and other states? What manner of people were they? When did they liv? and, What was the object for which they erected these vast heaps of earth and stone? Dr. Larkin has spent considerable time among these vestiges of prehistoric enterprise, and in the book under consideration has endeavored to answer, as far as human knowledge is capable of answering, the foregoing questions. He concludes that the mound builders did not belong to the same race of people as the present North American Indians. The difference in the cranial development of the two races precludes, in his judgment, the possibility of their being identical. From the fact that representations of the mastodon are found upon bones exhumed in localities where the mound builders lived and were buried, he draws the inference that those gigantic animals existed contemporaneously with the people who erected the vast tumuli, traces of which are still found. The theory is also advanced that the mastodons were made to serve the purposes of the mound builders as beasts of burden. Cuts descriptiv of these mounds are given in Dr. Larkin's book, together with maps of localities where they are found, arrowheads, picture-writing, and other relics. The whole constitutes a valuable addition to the information on the subjects treated of. To the description of works found in the United States is added a chapter on ruins in Mexico and Central America, giving the latest words of modern research concerning these vestiges of an extinct race of highly civilized men.

This book is written in language designed to be popularly understood, and cannot prove other than interesting to student and casual reader alike. It is printed from large type and contains a likeness of the author.

THE "FREE THOUGHT DIRECTORY."

Mr. Green's Directory for May contains a number of good articles besides the list of Freethinkers. The first is headed "Ingersoll at the Grave," and consists of the noted orator's speeches at the grave of his brother Eben and his more recent one over Mr. Mills, the talented Positivist. These are followed by an able editorial on the Bible, wherein is set forth some of the inconsistent and false statements of that noted volume. Mr. Putnam has a critical and dissecting history of the New York Liberal Club, the spicy reports of whose meetings in these columns by Mr. George E. Macdonald has excited considerable comment, not less for the matter discussed than for the manner of discussion. "Our Reading Club" by Mrs. Slenker is a very interesting account of a local woman's sewing circle transformed into a useful reading organization. Milton Wooley has an essay entitled "The Bribe of Judas," and Messrs. E. W. Hewitt, of Michigan, and John S. Crosby, of Missouri, quote the Sabbatarian laws of their respectiv states and show the progress made toward state secularization. T. L. Brown, the energetic president of the New York State Freethinkers' Association, discusses the force of the assertion that "I believe I shall liv after death" and the admission that "I do not know that I shall liv again after death." Dr. Brown always brings some original thought to the surface when he puts his pen to paper, and this brief jotting is no exception. Mr. Green closes the reading matter with a few pages of "all sorts" of paragraphs, and the number closes with the list of names. This issue is no less valuable than its predecessors, and we can cheerfully indorse the following by Mrs. Slenker.

"I fear Liberals do not fully realize the importance of the work in which H. L. Green is engaged, in trying to collect for his Directory the name and post-office address of every out-spoken Freethinker in the United States and Canada.

"I supposed, ere this, he would hav had 10,000 such names. Such a list of names, arranged alphabetically by states and territories, would be of inestimable value to Liberal publishers, Liberal lecturers, and Liberals who are traveling, and besides that, it would bind us all together in a sort of friendly league or society, where each would feel an interest in all the others.

"Mr. Green only charges twenty-five cents for the first insertion of the name, and after that he publishes it free in every issue of the Directory.

"Elmina would be proud and glad to receive names for this purpose, and hopes to be able to forward to Mr. Green a nice respectable list of them by the time another copy is issued.

"Who will respond first and place himself on the roll of honor? We are called, and duty asks that we respond with pleasure and alacrity."

MR. KINGSLEY'S POEM, "TRUTH."

"From perished seed, air, earth, sun, dew, and rain,
The precious, golden harvest we obtain.
Delightful music birds from eggs do bring,
Sweet, withered flowers bloom again in spring.
When dreadful storms of winter all are past,
Worms change to perfect butterflies at last;
Bees, flowers, birds, worms—all things that we see,
Proclaim to man a future life may be."

Thus sings the poet claiming to sing of truth. But will he prove where one "perished seed" ever produced its share of "the golden harvest?" A mashed, burnt, drowned, dead seed never yet came to life. Once dead, always dead. No flower that blooms ever again unfolds its tender petals in any future spring; once dead, always dead. No worm that is killed, either as worm, chrysalis, or butterfly, ever livs again; once dead, always dead. "Bees, flowers, birds, worms," and all living identities, organic or inorganic, hav but one life, and for each death ends all.

Beautiful dreams, lovely imaginings, sweet meetings where parting is no more, flow in verse along the pages of this book called "Truth," but the seeker for real philosophy, for sound Materialistic fact, will find it sadly adulterated with fiction and fable. Like the charming novel, whose interesting, overdrawn, and highly-colored narrativ we read with an inward proviso that it is only a story; just so does the matter-of-fact thinker peruse these cantos before us. Well may our author exclaim:

"Truth is what all mankind desire to know;
To find the truth, alas! where shall we go?"

Not to his pages, assuredly, so far as proof be given of immortality of identity.

But he does knock many of the old Jew-book superstitions in the head, and there he does good work. He pleads for progress, freedom, love, and union, and there he does good work. He kills gods and devils, and pleads for the laws of nature as the great creativ, moving power of the universe, and there he does good work. We shall say, Amen to the following lines:

"Great is the truth, and will at last prevail;
The laws of nature let us now obey—
Liv in the sunshine of the present day."

So we will each select from the three parts that which we approve, and pronounce the book on the whole a valuable addition to our stock of Liberal literature.

ELMINA.

Truth, as told by Mr. Kingsley in smooth and flowing rhyme, is a very readable pamphlet of forty pages—amusing, instructiv, philosophical, and entertaining. Its advice is good, its candor commendable, its deductions wise, and, if we are not able to understand all that is said in reference to another state of existence, it may be, possibly, because the book is "addressed to the people of a hundred years to come." However, it is good reading for the people of this time and this year. It contains a class meeting scene, which is about as ridiculous as such meetings probably are. It also has a dreadful looking picture of the Jewish Jehovah, with smoking nostrils and a mouth spitting fire and two-edged swords. He appears fierce and angry, as he clutches the lightning with one hand and seven stars with the other, and kicks over the candlestick with his very hot feet. The portrait is according to Bible description, however, and, though it may frighten the religiously disposed, no Liberal will be disturbed by it, I am sure. The poem is one of the helps to Liberal literature, and tells many facts in a very pleasing manner.

"A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD."

It seems strange that, in this intelligent age, it should be necessary to refute the vile slanders and base fabrications that continue to be hurled at the name and memory of that brave patriot and world-renowned Liberal, Thomas Paine; but so it is. Non-appreciativ Christians, persistently and deliberately, in the face of the most positiv facts, still falsify and calumniate the noble dead. "A Roman Catholic Canard" is another of the vile and slanderous falsehoods that are sent out, from time to time, to vilify and traduce one of the noblest friends that humanity ever had. Upon the face of the letter of Bishop Fenwick is stamped deliberate falsehood, and possibly forgery, it being a question if Bishop Fenwick ever saw the letter that purports to hav come from him. The statements are proven to be false, and the author deserves the thanks of a right minded people for his efforts to clear the name of Paine from the slanders his traducers would heap upon it. This little work should be sown broadcast, that the rubbish of calumny and malicious falsehood may be buried forever by the powerful weight of truth and justice.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

The last hours of no one man who ever lived hav been so lied about as hav those of the great and good Thomas Paine. This is one of the best proofs we hav that no man did surer or better work for truth and against the church than he did. That his strong, vigorous, telling blows struck home we may well believe when we see the effect of them still manifest in the eagerness with which Christians seize upon the faintest hope of retaliation and revenge. In his last will and testament Mr. Paine tells us he has lived an honest and useful life, and dies in perfect composure and resignation; and yet here in this day of light and knowledge, and of culture and refinement, publishers hav been found base and vile enough to print a fabricated account of the deathbed scene of this great and good man, which no one of common sense who has ever read Paine's writings, or his life record, can possibly believe.

Those who hav read Cheetham's libelous account of Paine, in which he published a letter from Dr. Manley (Paine's physician), written at his request (in 1809), will see at once this fabricated letter or canard of Bishop Fenwick there had its origin.

I hope Liberals will buy this little five-cent book by the hundred, and scatter them wherever they will be read. It is the best exposé of the whole batch of deathbed lies that hav been told concerning Paine that has yet been gotten up. Fact and fiction, truth and canard, are placed side by side in a manner no one save the author of the book is capable of. We hav now and then a writer whose points are not only soundly made, but are absolutely unassailable because of the basic truths upon which they are founded and the strong manner of their presentation, and the author of this book is of this class.

If anyone can read it and doubt that every slanderous epithet applied to Paine, as regards his life or death record, is a lie, I would like to know what manner of man he is.

ELMINA.

Can True Religion Exist Apart from the Bible?

The professed belief among Christians that the Bible is the only true and reliable guide to pure morality, good living, and happiness, that within its sacred covers are hidden the revelations and exhortations of a sublime and adored deity through his chosen prophets, is fast losing ground and can only be sustained in this modern age by scriptural application, a close guard upon the heart, the lusts of the flesh, and in earnest, persistent rebellion against the assaults and crafts of Satan. Prayer and faith are fundamental to a rigid belief in things which they cannot comprehend or ever expect to, which is at variance with the asseveration that the most ignorant need not err therein, if so be they desire to understand for the benefit of the soul. If we were allowed to criticise from some of the edifying subjects we sometimes meet from within the fold, I think there is ample ground for pronouncing this part of the doctrin illusory, as they do not seem very clear upon some points and yet perform their devotional exercises regularly.

Reason does not seem to possess a very high position in the estimation of the true believer, but rather occupies a secondary place and yields perforce to the farther-reaching and more sublime quality, faith. Reason possesses power only to carry us as far as our limited observation and knowledge extend; beyond that all is mere conjecture, but here faith takes up the thread of propounded theories and wafts the dreamer onward through seductiv vistas of imagination. Thus hideous pictures of future punishment, endless pain and misery for the tortured victim, mapping out and portraying regions of fire and brimstone and all the accompaniments necessary to assist Satan in his work of woe. All these brilliant prospects are faithfully promised to the people by a cunning and designing priesthood. Belief in a future existence originates in man's fear of dissolution, a superstition of things unknowable, ignorance of primary forces, and all things which darken the clouded visage of unscientific humanity in its vain endeavors to penetrate the veil which shades the inaccessible temples of nature. The existence of such a religion shows that we are not yet freed from the barbarous teachings of our forefathers, and so long as our mental and physical freedom is hampered in these enslaving bonds, which hav held generations in thraldom for centuries, so long will our sacred rights as men, and free men, be held subservient to the prejudiced charlatan, to the binding claims of popery and Calvinism, as felt in the laws of our couutry. The doctrin of total depravity stands prominently to the front, an insult to intellectualism, refinement and everything that is of worth in man's nature, asserts us as being naturally and unconsciously born in evil, with inherent bad qualities, ever ready to leap to the surface, and all because of one stolen apple. O inconsistency! The great Jehovah's ways are too deep and mystical for man's conception, and too cruel and vindictiv to command his admiration. It remains an unfathomable mystery how intelligent men and woman can grasp and giv credence to these preposterous mythological traditions, with such earnestness and confidence, upon such unsatisfactory and contradictory evidence. Let us say with Mr. Ingersoll, it requires reason to guide us aright in the every-day affairs of business. So let us hav the full evidence of our senses, the extreme exercise of our grandest falculty, reason, before giving credence to a doctrin which has proved so disastrous to the human family, the civilized world, ruling with a rod of iron, subverting and suppressing freedom of speech, propagating ignorance and dark superstition as its very footstool, a crushing basis.

Christ's character is pure and simple in the main, but not quite unimpeachable. His apparent liking for out-of-the-way places, low, bad company surroundings, rude answers to his mother, all seem to whisper that the young Nazarene was afflicted with some of the weaknesses of the flesh. Our business men of to-day would not applaud the appearance of a savior of sueh unpretentious demeanor. To meet their approval, he would hav to improvise some of the brass used in his great father's terrible outfit. He would also require to make his ascension in a little better style, distributing a few posters, and a notice in THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigator, and several of our popular papers. No doubt curiosity and excitement would wax intense, to a greater degree than ever was caused by the aerial flight of the most daring aeronaut. It is remarkable that these miraculous scriptural events, which if graphically narrated would be regarded as incomparable, are so penuriously dealt with by the author. Lazarus is made to play the part of sheep in the slaughter-house, and after being resuscitated at once becomes a character requiring too much ingenuity on the part of the author to wield advantageously, so is ignominously dropped. A few revelations from a man of his incredible experience, who must hav had a glimps of the deep, hidden mysteries of the future, would hav saved, oh! what a world of crime, persecution, and suffering. But it is ever in such incredible recitals, where God is made to contradict the immutable laws of nature, that Christians seek to inspire awe and respect for their religion. Such a religion can never command respect in a people whose eyes are once opened to its deformities. Instead of teaching self-abasement, that all impulse within us is vile and wicked inherently, and to lean upon a phantasm to whom is ascribed honor, praise, and glory, who is always addressed in tones of reverence, fear, and servil supplication for centures past, and in all this lapse of time we hav no authentic record of a single request being answered, except through natural cause and effect, let us teach the elevating and ennobling belief that man is a perfect being in himself, possessing every property and element necessary to make life perfect. Let us trample out the antagonistic and bitter feeling lying dormant in the breast of the nation, planted and rooted there by sects and creeds. Let us choose science as our worshipful deity, the grand and only true guide. Ever beneficial to mankind, she rears her lofty pinnacle skyward; ever onward, upward, she points man to a loftier and more elevated sphere, where persecution ceases and love, pure generous love, swells man's heart, linking us in indestructible bonds of friendship. Away up the steep hights, science stands beckoning us onward. Faith is of no avail here, but reason, the grandest of our faculties, struggles to the apex, where peace and happiness exist in knowledge, where the banner of truth flies unfurled. EDWIN ORMANDY.

The New Calendar.—A Card from Its Author.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav one request to make of Brothers Wakeman, Palmer, and all the other Liberal friends who hav so nobly labored to help me establish my Bruno-Wakeman or Freethought Calendar, and it is, that in addition to the 283 and the use of the letters B.S. (meaning before our modern science became a standard) in dating events previous to 1600 (s.s.) they will also, whenever for any reason or purpose the use of the Christian figures is necessary or preferable, add to them the letters s.s. (meaning superstitious style of dating) just as I hav done in the dating and other reference of this card. This will be a great help both to the Calendar and to our cause in general, in my opinion, because it will induce thought on the part of Christians and others, and be the means of leading man into the sunlight of reason and republic of common sense, and I therefore hope that all Liberals will speedily adopt it, as well as the Calendar, thus showing to the world that we can stand up for our Freethought philosophy as firmly and fully as the devotees of the various superstitions do for theirs.

GEO. N. HILL.

Boston, Mass., May 21st, A.S. 283 (1883, s.s).

[There are but few of the Paine Hall Calendars now left, and those who desire an original copy of the first Freethought Calendar ever published, should send to us for a copy. Price, only a three-cent stamp. —ED. T. S.]

"ANSWERS TO CHRISTIAN QUESTIONS." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

Letters from Friends.

LEROY, June 4, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed please find $5—$1 for the Monument Fund, and $4 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, which is a welcome visitor. W. HANSON.

WANSHIP, May 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2 on Monument Fund. I hope you will erect a fine one, as I think it will do quite a missionary work. WM. REYNOLDS.

POUGHKEEPSIE, June 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2.00 for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am happy to state that it is gaining popularity all over the country, notwithstanding its former editor's death. I hope it will keep on till it is crowned with the victory it is seeking after—truth. J. G. O. HARE.

ALLEGANY, June 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3, which is due you for subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is a grand paper in the cause of Liberalism, and may it liv to see the day when the religion of Christianity is dead and the religion of humanity reigns instead. M. BRUNELL.

DENVER, May 31, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed one dollar as my contribution to the memorial or monument of our Liberal friend, D. M. Bennett.

Although his writings will outliv either marble or granit, I am glad to see, by last week's TRUTH SEEKER, that it is intended to put up a suitable statue to his memory. JOHN BERRY.

GALENA, June 4, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Please find inclosed $3.25, to be applied as follows: $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World" (I hav the four volumes, and there is no history of travels that I ever read that pleased me so well. I would not sell them for $50 if I was not able to get a new set); 50 cents for the paper to a trial subscriber; 25 cents for "Answers to Christian Questions," and $1.00 for the monument. W. ENNOR.

ROSEVILLE, May 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I send herewith $3 to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER continued to my address. Greenbacks are hard to get on this coast, and we often are obliged to send stamps. I am certain this inconvenience causes you considerable loss sometimes. As I expect to read THE TRUTH SEEKER as long as I liv, it doesn't matter whether I send much or little, so that I don't get behind—and I don't mean to do that.

Yours with the kindest wishes,

T. R. STEPHENSON.

P. S —For the extra dollar inclosed send me "Voltaire in Exile."

NANAINO, B. C., May 22, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find seven dollars, four dollars for the monument fund, contributed by the following persons: J. Hemer, $1; Harry Milholland, $1; Richard Watkins, $1; P. R. Smith, $1; and $2.50 for a new yearly subscriber, all of this place.

I sincerely hope that the Liberals of America will contribute enough in one dollar subscriptions alone to raise an enduring monument in marble to perpetuate the memory of our author-hero, D. M. Bennett, so that future generations may know how highly he was appreciated by his contemporaries.

P. R. SMITH.

BASCO, May 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: As an expression of love and reverence to our lamented Mr. Bennett, I feel it my duty to contribute my mite to the erection of a monument over his resting-place. It is an honor to his friends, and I think it is better that the monument be erected with the small contributions of all his friends than by large contributions of a few rich ones. So here please find inclosed my promis—$1; and if a Bennett Hall and TRUTH SEEKER home is to be built I will also contribute $5 to it. Long liv THE TRUTH SEEKER and its editor and publisher! Please convey my kind regards to Mrs. Bennett.

JOHN DIDIER.

ALTON, June 4, 1883.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: I see by the tab that I am two months behind hand, but I send $2.50 for the paper for one more year. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from the third volume, and hav not missed but one paper, and that was at Mr. Bennett's death. You cannot know my feelings when I heard of his death through the papers, and my wife felt as bad as I did. I hav no wife now to sympathize with me. She breathed her last on the 23d of last month, aged 61 years and 10 months. We had lived together 41 years, and had lost two children. You can sympathize with me, since we hav both lost our companion. My wife suffered a great deal, but never complained. She was not afraid to die. She had no dread of the next world. She believed if there was a God, that he was good, and that he would not punish mortals for what they had not done.

WM. A. GRAVES.

GENEVA, May 29, 283.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Although I am not a subscriber to your valuable paper, I read it occasionally, and think very much of it. I think it should be in the hands of everyone to open their eyes to the truth as I see it. It is only a few years since I had my eyes open, and would like to see others open their eyes. I can see Freethought spreading in this far West, and there is need of it, as we hav some strong religionists here as elsewhere. It is rather late to sympathize with you in your loss. I feel it was a sad blow to the whole country, and how much more so to you!

Inclosed you will find fifty cents for a life-size lithograph of D. M. Bennett. HATTIE H. ROBINSON.

WEST BRIGHTON, June 3, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Those books came to hand all right. Was pleased with them. They are a feast to me. I take great comfort reading them and THE TRUTH SEEKER. I wish there could be a letter every week from MRS. A. H. Colby, of Boston. She used to entertain us every week in Rochester, N. Y. She was the one that opened my superstitious eyes, but she never converted me to Spiritualism; I can't go that, but hav great charity for those who do believe in it. I think that anyone that is not sectarian ought to hav charity for those who don't believe just as they think. I like to hear the Spiritualist's arguments all through, though, as I said before, they fail so far of convincing me.

Please send me the "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." I had one of these books destroyed, as superstitious hands got hold of it. I thought a great deal of it. This person thought he was doing the Lord's work in destroying my property.

Yours truly, S. E. SKINNER.

HOUSTON, June 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2.00 for my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am sorry that I could not send it before, for I hate to be behindhand. I should like to see THE TRUTH SEEKER take up the "labor" or the social question more fully, and I think it would increase your subscription list a great deal. But, however, you are doing indirectly what you could do more directly. Just as soon as you make a large minority of the masses Infidels, you bring about the Social Revolution.

Voltaire and other Infidels made the French Revoluion possible, although they did not teach revolution (political or social), for, if I am correct, Voltaire was an aristocrat, and an aristocrat is always ready to obey the powers that be. But such is the way that the world moves. Men work hard for a cause, but do not look at the final effect of it, or they would shrink back from it. They think that they can set a ball in motion and it will stop just where they want it to. I remain,

Yours for truth and justice,

THOS. T. KNIGHT.

TROY, June 3, E M. 283.

MR EDITOR: I hav been reading a note of our friend D. Bruce in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I wish to ask a question, and wish some one to answer it through THE TRUTH SEEKER: What relation hav electricity and magnetism to matter or Materialism? I will giv you an idea of my belief. I think that electricity and magnetism are the life of matter, consequently the soul of man, and, as the elements of animation, I think must act as mind through the brain. I hav studied phrenology, psychology, and Spiritualism, but cannot accept anything supernatural from them. I think the soul, when it leaves the body, returns to its affinity, or the body at large, the same as matter returns to matter. I believe this soul while in our body to be separable while the electricity sustains or suspends life. Magnetism leaves our body, enters the magnetism at large, and is everywhere, and givs us a knowledge of what is going on in a foreign country; and this I think will yet be understood and seem so simple that we will feel very foolish for having ever believed in a creator. Mr. Winter and Mr. Bruce will agree.

Yours, S. G. SCOLLAY.

CINCINNATI, June 1, 1883.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: Please giv a little of your space to an old subscriber. I wish to return, through your valuable paper, my sincere thanks to Brother A. W. Trevett, M.D., for his manly and able defense of Materialism, as set forth by the champion Materialist of the West, T. Winter. He has said considerable, and said it well. It covers the whole ground, and is unanswerable, and leaves me very little to say. But there is one remark I would make, which is this, that instead of Spiritualism doing good I believe it is doing much harm, inasmuch as it is a strong prop to the old theological dogma of a future state of existence, which brings into play all the priestcraft, church tyranny, and all mummeries peculiar to the numerous religions, which, from my standpoint, is the greatest of curses to the world. This world would be bright and beautiful if every one would concentrate their thoughts and deeds right here, instead of pestering their brain on that which is the most enigmatical and fanatical of imaginary delusions. I think the time will yet come when the Spiritualists will clearly see their errors and unite with the solid Materialist, and bravely fight all the dark and ignorant dogmas of the Christian and all other religions, which are founded on the unnatural and impossible axioms of two lives, when there is but one.

Is it not time, friends, to hav done with ghosts, goblins, and specters, and all those absurd ideas which ruled the millions of benighted people in the darkness of the past?

Are we still to cling to those musty, old-wives' fables? Are we still to hav our minds clouded by a deceptiv priesthood with a new name?

Surely it cannot be, when the highest order of science openly declares that all animal life can exist but once, man in common with the others; and this great and honest truth must, in lapse of time, prevail over the whole earth, and the inventions of priestcraft must fade before the bright glow of scientific knowledge, which is rapidly stepping to the front to disperse the fogs of superstition, which hath hung upon the world as a black pall of gloom. Hasten on, ye bright beams of light, that miserable superstitions might vanish and every man be free.

THOS. WINTER.

PETROLIA, May 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am in arrears for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and as I hav no hope of ever being forgiven by any God for doing injustice to any man, I conclude the best thing I can do is to pay all my debts, including what I owe for having the scales of superstition kept from my vision.

Were orthodoxy true, I might do all manner of injustice, and commit all grades of crime, and send a multitude of people to everlasting torment in hell-fire, and yet receive a harp and wear a crown.

Several years ago I accidentally picked up a paper which a Christian postmaster had confiscated for wrapping-paper, after refusing to deliver it to the subscriber whose name was printed on it. This paper was printed in my nativ town in Illinois, where an iron-clad superstition had control.

It was called THE TRUTH SEEKER. I liked its manly, fearless sentiments, and hav been a happier man since I commenced to read it. I never saw Mr. Bennett, but sympathized with him constantly during his many persecutions, and rejoiced exceedingly when he triumphed over the murderous minions of Christian hate. Peace to his dust! His teachings shall make happier many yet unborn.

J. N. DUDLEY.

ANGOLA, June 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the tab on my paper that the time paid for expires this month; therefore please find inclosed $4.50—$3 to pay another year for the best Liberal paper I hav yet read, 50 cents for the lithograph picture of ane of the best men of the present century, $1 for the Monument Fund. Our brother, however, has left a monument much more lasting than granit or marble on the thousands of pages he has written in behalf of mentally enslaved humanity. Yes, when cathedrals and spires, priests and their dogmas, hav been buried in oblivion, his grand achievements in establishing mental liberty will shine with a halo of glory that cannot be eclipsed. I had hoped that our mental hero-brother might liv yet for many years, but the voyage around the world, as I feared, proved too much for the physical system of a man of his age. But he is not dead, as Bulwer Lytton says—

"There is no death; an angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved friends away,
And then we call them dead.

But ever near us, though unseen;
Their dear, immortal spirits tread,
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead."

Myself and wife sympathize with Mrs. Bennett, and hope she may yet enjoy many days of happiness. I congratulate you, Mr. Macdonald, on your ability in conducting THE TRUTH SEEKER. It has lost none of its attractivness by the demise of our lamented brother.

DR. J. H. MOORE.

ALTOONA, Pa., June 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Through the earnest work and self-sacrificing interests of Mr. D. R. Christian and Mr. John Kemp, two of our most busy workers in the Liberal cause, we had the very great pleasure of having with us on Tuesday evening, May 29th, that noble and eloquent pleader for the cause of mental liberty, Mrs. H. S. Lake, and also Prof. W. F. Peck, the inimitable Freethought musician. The subject of the lecture was "The Mission of Liberalism," and is the second Liberal lecture ever given in this city, the first being given by B. F. Underwood a few years ago. As but very few people outside of the Liberals of this place knew Mrs. Lake by reputation, and as there is such a fearful opposition to Freethought in Altoona, she did not hav as large an audience as she deserved. There were present some of the most prominent orthodox Christians of the city, and, although the bold and truthful utterances of the brilliant speaker seemed to quiver their tender sensibilities, yet many of them claim that Mrs. Lake is the best reader and most eloquent lady orator they ever heard. Prof. Peck sang some of his comic and sentimental songs, which were well received. We also had the pleasure of having with us Mr. Harry Hoover, secretary of the Pittsburgh Liberal League. Since the lecture all the daily papers of this city treated it with silent contempt. So you see, Mr. Editor, we are somewhat like the state of Delaware in this portion of "God's vinyard," and hav great room to progress. Why, only the other day a young man in Hollidaysburg was fined $16 for breaking the third commandment.

But I think that we should do all that we possibly can to encourage our Freethought lecturers and endeavor to keep them busy in the good work. Mrs. Lake and the genial professor are doing a good work, and we hope ere long to hav them with us in Altoona again.

Not only is Mrs. Lake engaged in pleading the cause of those who are persecuted by church oppression, but she is also engaged in upholding the cause of the toiling millions. Therefore I ask that all Liberals stand by her and try and keep her in the lecture field, for she is one of the brightest and most brilliant stars in all the galaxy of Freethought writers in the United States.

W. J. BURNS.

WOULD LIKE TO BE AN ANGEL, BUT HAS HIS MISGIVINGS.

IRWIN, June 1, 1883.

Prejudice and passion are two important factors in forming the popular opinions of even professed Liberals, both Spiritualist and Materialists, and the more ardent and sincere they are the more is this likely to be the case. Speculation is unscientific, dogmatism is disagreeable; but bigotry and intolerance are odious. Personalisms are not in good taste, but personalities are breaches of decorum. Sarcasms are not arguments, although if judiciously and pleasantly used they may serve to fasten an argument in the mind.

Even when my sense of parliamentary propriety, and my ideas of logical consistency and harmony, are violated, I say of these impetuous debaters that even their "failings lean to virtue's side," and I pluck some enjoyment from their earnestness and sincerity.

Let us remember that the Secularism is the great, common, practical object of our united efforts as Liberals, whether we are Spiritualists, Universalists, Unitarians, Jews, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Agnostics, or Atheists. I do so much appreciate the earnest and hearty co-operation of any one, in this great work, that I feel under great obligation to be very patient and kind to him even if he is a crank—for cranks are not all orthodox Christians, and a Liberal crank is generally not only a harmless but a useful member of society in spite of his idiosyncrasies.

It seems to me that Hume's argument against miracles is valid: That it is more reasonable that the witnesses to them are either false or mistaken than that our uniform experience of natural causes producing all events should be broken. Why is this argument not just as available and conclusiv against "Spiritual manifestations" as against Christian miracles? How can a Spiritualist use it against a Christian and escape its logical conclusion against himself? The "medium" claims a peculiar capacity—something like the gift of prophecy, and power to work miracles—and he is supported in his pretensions by the great body of more honest or less cranky non-mediumistic Spiritualists. All of them take offense at the terms "crank," "humbug," or "delusion;" but they expect Materialists to midly submit to the disparaging conclusions of their own superiority, to the "gross, earth-bound Materialist." Let us giv and take whatever is necessary to the argument, without ill temper. These personalisms and personalities are due not to Materialists, but Spiritualists. This inferential (and often rudely asserted) disparagement is not the disparagement that must necessarily attach itself to the party on the wrong side in every argument; but it is a personal or class disparagement, like a war of races on the color-line, or the personal pretensions of the priesthood. Still there are real disparagements in nature, and it becomes us, as being more democratic and less egotistic, to repress our indignation and demean ourselvs as if we might be in error. We assert no superiority over them, in mental endowment or spiritual discernment, or physical ability, and we can afford to humor their whims. I would be only too glad to hav a hope of immortality; but while affection, like a tender mother, takes it from the tomb of earthly hopes and fondly presses it to her heart, it still seems to me to lack the paternal recognition and support of reason, without which it can claim no legitimate kinship to our family circle of established facts.

J. K. P. BAKER.

GALESBURG, June 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The last time I wrote I spoke of an account of the religious condition of Woodhull, but to do so my communication would be too lengthy; suffice it to say that the Methodists built a fine church last summer, and a portion of the members claimed the style of the preacher did not correspond with the house. This was settled by having the old one sent back. Others took exception to the Free Masons, Odd Fellows, and poor sinners who had never supported the church holding funerals in it and disgracing it; and then there was a big newspaper war, which was closed by the editor refusing to publish any more on the subject. The result was there were no converts during the protracted meeting through the winter. This spring a Mr. Patterson from Chicago ran the machine some weeks, and a large number, it was claimed, appeared at the altar, and the next Sabbath after Patterson left the converts presented themselvs for membership. I attended. One young man and a young woman came forward, at a very urgent call from the preacher. They were all I saw, though it is claimed that some hav joined since. I close on Woodhull.

The "honorable" Joseph Cook gave the Galesburg people a history of the manners and customs of the different nations. It was said he had a fair house and that his hearers were interested. I was not present. Galesburg is a very superstitious city, with some Freethinkers, but few who dare to speak.

You will now please permit me to return my respects to Brother G. W. Turrell, who replied to my comments on the liquor question now being so much agitated. He takes exception to my views and to others'. This proves he is a fault-finder, yet he tenaciously claims the right of free speech, free press, and free drink. Under my creed no man has a right to do wrong, therefore I justify him in finding fault with me. It is my friend that tells me my faults, yet he has failed to convince me. He says I argue that if drinking is injurious to the community it should be stopped. If he means coffee, tea, or water, the injury (if there be any) in drinking such drinks is not sufficient to call up the question; but if he means whisky, and the injury arising from such a drink is sufficient to justify the proceeding, then stop it. He also objects to a majority rule (not but that the majority may be wrong), yet that is the argument of tyrants, kings, and potentates. It is neither Republican nor Democratic. He asks, "Where will this line of argument lead us?" I answer, to the rules and regulations of a republican form of a democratic government, where the people rule. He further says, "If smoking is injurious, if Infidel publications are injurious, if eating too much mince pie and sweetmeats is injurious to the community, then they should be prohibited." Then he asks, "What becomes of our individual rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, for which governments are instituted?—the right to breathe, the right to think, the right to talk, and the right to select our food, drink, and pastime?" Here we ask, Is it possible a man can by his prejudice so abuse his reasoning powers as to justify the idea that a law that will prevent a man from drinking that which will make him drunk, and so worded as to apply to that and that only, will prohibit him from breathing, eating mince pies, thinking, talking, or prevent him from using coffee, tea, or any other drink he may choose, except that which will make him drunk, thereby endangering the peace, life, and the prosperity of the community which our government is bound to protect?

He further says no law would be just to deprive a minority, however small, of these sacred rights, except they are so abused as to endanger the community at large. In such case the drunkard becomes amenable to law. Amen to this idea.

It destroys all my friend's nonsensical arguments, justifying the foundation and essence of a prohibitory liquor law. If the right and privilege of drinking intoxicating drinks were not abused so as to endanger the community at large, such a law would be unjust. Giv us your hand, brother; we argee on the main point, yet I am aware such a law cannot be executed without infringing upon this one privilege, and there is but one simple question to settle: Shall we, or shall we not, surrender this privilege for the sake of relieving our nation of drunkenness and its dire effects? or shall we submit to the curse of drunkenness? I cannot believe the removal of a nuisance from sight and smell will prevent the breathing of pure air. Our opponents, instead of meeting the question upon its merits, bring in all other evils, big and little, real and imaginary, to drown and cover up the real issue, and then lay on the plaster. Oh, the sacred right and privilege our forefathers fought for to drink that which makes fools of judges, fools of governors, fools of presidents and their cabinets! What a privilege this to contend for!

My friend says, "I claim temperate drinking has been practiced since the days of Noah." This is true; but what has it done toward a reform? To meet this failure he says, "So has prohibition." If he means liquor prohibition, he is grandly mistaken. I hav no knowledge of any nation of people adopting such a law, excepting the Mohammedans, and history says it worked well for centuries. Christianity was routed from Palestine, its birthplace, but Catholic Christians hav of late mixed in there, and there is now some drunkenness. Yet it far surpasses our Protestant Christian nations in regard to sober people. Mr. Bennett, on his trip around the world, saw and heard of more drunkenness and debauchery during a four days' sojourn in the city of London than for months among what are called heathen nations.

My friend speaks of the injustice of the Sunday prohibitory law, as though it destroyed the justice of all prohibitory laws—as foolish as such an idea is; yet for what other purpose does he offer it?

ISAAC PADEN.

Poetry.

Three Good Doctors.

From Light for Thinkers.

The best of all the pill-box crew,
Since ever time began,
Are the doctors who hav most to do
With the health of a hearty man.

And so I count them up again,
And praise them as I can:
There's Dr. Diet, and Dr. Quiet,
And Dr. Merryman.

There's Dr. Diet, he tries my tongue;
"I know you well," says he.
"Your stomach is poor, and your liver is sprung;
We must make your food agree."

And Dr. Quiet, he feels my wrist,
And he gravely shakes his head.
"Now, now, dear sir, I must insist
That you go at ten to bed."

But Dr. Merryman for me,
Of all the pill-box crew!
For he smiles and says, as he fobs his fee,
"Laugh on, whatever you do."

So now I eat what I ought to eat,
And at ten I go to bed,
And I laugh in the face of cold or heat;
For thus hav the doctors said.

And so I count them up again,
And praise them as I can:
There's Dr. Diet, and Dr. Quiet,
And Dr. Merryman. —S. W. Dufield, D.D.

Beset by the Devil.

Mr. Mulkittle went into the country to dedicate a church. The boy did not accompany the minister. He pleaded and begged; he employed his mother as counsel, who argued the case, but the verdict was against the youngster. "No," said the father, "I hav cut my eye-teeth in letting you go with me. You always get me into trouble, and the only safe plan is to leave you at home."

Shortly after the good man left, to compensate the boy for his disappointment, his mother granted him the privilege of going down town alone. This was indeed a liberty. "I'll run away," he thought, "and hav some fun. I'll go way down the river and watch the men paddle around in the boats, and go to the livery stable and see 'em kill rats. No," after a moment of reflection, "that wouldn't be right. It would be treatin' ma wrong after she's let me go out."

He went to a cotton warehouse, and was much amused by a monkey that sat on a cotton bale. The monkey grinned, and the boy laughed, and the warehouse man came around and asked the boy if he wanted the monkey.

"Yes, sir," he replied. "Giv him to me and I'll take him home and feed him till he gets fat."

"You may take him," said the man. "He's in the way here. I've been trying to giv him away for a day or two. Here, lead him by this string. He won't bite you. Now you've got him," and the boy went away with an alacrity of motion, the natural outgrowth of enthusiastic childhood. His mother was frightened when he reached home, and wanted him to turn loose the ugly thing, but the youngster held on to his prize, and begged so earnestly that he might retain the animal that Mrs. Mulkittle finally acceded to his wishes. He played around the house, to the infinit delight of his little sister, and when he organized a menagerie in the parlor, with chairs arranged for a cage, and went in and stroked the animal with that air of pride which boys think showmen hav an inherent right to exhibit, Mrs. Mulkittle and the little girl applauded with the enthusiasm of a pleased audience. After awhile, the monkey rebelled, broke the string, jumped over the chairs, and ran from the room. The showman and audience followed, but the animal had disappeared before they reached the door. He had scampered up the stairway, and had bounded into a room and taken refuge behind a trunk. The boy searched around the yard and called the animal by affectionate names, but the monkey did not respond, and the poor showman turned to his sympathetic audience and wept with that sorrow which at no time of life is more genuin than at the opening doors of existence when a child, after every hope has been chased into nothing, bows his head and givs himself up to the bitterness of woe.

Late in the evening the Rev. Mr. Mulkittle returned from his sacred mission. He did not return alone, for the Rev. Mr. Mailer accompanied him. Mr. Mailer lives in a very retired part of the country, where the old log church, near the freestone spring, is still the community's sanctuary. For forty years the old brother has preached the gospel unto men—a gospel which, in its beauty and purity, can be delivered by the uneducated—a gospel which may not with strength combat the great foe of iron-clad science, but which, with gentle hand, smooths a pillow where the dying man may rest his head, and look up to his sorrowing friends, quiet, and with a faith-born trust, so peaceful and so smiling.

This was Mr. Mailer's first visit to the city. He had held back from such association, because, as he affirmed, the devil delighted in the crowd and longed for the time when he could plunge the rural preacher into sin and deep-set iniquity. He had, however, heard so much of Mr. Mulkittle's piety that, upon being urged, he agreed to enter the city of sin.

"Pa," said the boy, after the ceremony of introduction had been enacted, "ma, let me go down-town to-day, and a man gave me a monkey,"

"Willie, I don't want any of your foolishness."

"But I wanter tell you that I brought the monkey—"

"Hush, my son. There is an elder among us who would speak."

"This is your oldest, I reckon," said Mr. Mailer. "Yes, I thought so. My son, you are, of course, an apt scholar at Sunday-school. I hav taught many a little boy like you—many a one. Who was thrown into the lion's den?"

"The circus man," the boy replied.

"Willie!" shouted Mr. Mulkittle.

"Don't scold him, brother. No, it was Daniel. Who was the wisest man?"

"My pa."

"Oh, no; Solomon."

"Was it Samson what pulled up the gate-posts?" asked the boy.

"Yes, Samson."

"He was bad, wasn't he?"

"No, he wasn't bad."

"Could he pull this house down?"

"Oh, yes."

"I'll bet he couldn't."

"What do you mean," shouted Mr. Mulkittle. Leave this room, sir. Brother Mailer, I'll show you up to bed."

The "old timer" followed Mr. Mulkittle. He did not like such ceremony, preferring, even in a strange house, to find his own way, but he yielded. He was shown into the room where the monkey had taken refuge. "Good-night," said Mr. Mulkittle." "May your dreams to you be as pleasant as your company to me."

"Good-night," repeated Mr. Mailer, "and may your rest be undisturbed."

Mr. Mulkittle went down-stairs and Mr. Mailer walked around the room looking at the pictures. "Vanity, vanity," he mused, while he inspected the furniture. "Ah, Lord, what a change. Brother Mulkittle is a good man, but here under his roof do I see the evidence of worldliness. I should not be surprised if the devil was lurking among these vain things. Ah, Lord," and he began to disrobe. When he had removed all of his clothing except that which a country gentleman deems necessary for bed purposes, he kneeled beside a trunk, near the bed, to pray. Just as he squatted the monkey, aroused from sleep, hopped out and jumped on the old man.

"The devil!" he howled, and bolted for the door. The monkey sprang upon him and seized hold of his night shirt. The old man rushed down the stairway. The monkey held to the seat of his drawers. "I'm beset by the devil!" the old man yelled when Mulkittle rushed into the hall. "Get out of my way." He threw the door open, leaped the fence, and galloped down the street. The monkey, as much frightened as the man, hugged him and bit the back of his neck. "Whoop!" exclaimed the old man as he turned the corner. Mulkittle followed, but could not persuade the old man to stop. The police seized the old gentleman, and despite protestations, took him to the station house, where he remained until the following morning, when he left for home, fully convinced that the devil had appointed special agents to catch every preacher who so far forgot himself as to enter the wicked city.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN.

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

The Latest Improvements in Stylographic Pens. It holds more Ink, writes longer without refilling, writes better, never blots, never fails. It is not only the best pen, but the cheapest, and always givs satisfaction.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price. Inclose ten cents for registration.
Address GEORGE MACDONALD,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

Correspondence Solicited.

A lady wishes a gentleman correspondent. One of good address, good physique, dark complexion, and Liberal. Not under thirty years of age.
Address "L.," Box 973.,
2t23 Vineland, N. J.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

"THE VOICES,"

—BY—

WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

TENTH EDITION.
JUST ISSUED.

PRICE, - - - $1.00.

From pages of reviews we giv one brief extract from Judge Baker, formerly of New York city:

"Considered in the light of a controversial or didactic poem, it is without an equal in contemporaneous literature—the birth of an audacious mind, and is destined to excite greater and more wide encircling waves of sectarian agitation than any anticredal work ever published."

This work is nutritious food for Liberal thinkers, and the greatest eye-opener of blind bigotry and superstition that has yet appeared, while it presents the author of nature, and human nature, in a rational and exalted light.

The work is divided into four parts, viz.: "The Voice of Nature," "The Voice of Superstition," "The Voice of Prayer," and "The Voice of a Pebble," which blend in their combination like a quartet in music, and are replete with reason, philosophy, and sarcasm.

The work contains 226 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound in cloth, with heavy board and beveled edges, and has a fine steel-plate engraved likeness of the author from a photograph by Sarony from life.

If, Then, and When. By the same author. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodox Hash, With a Change of Diet. By the same author. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
(Sole Agency for New York),
21 Clinton Place, New York City.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,

No. 352 North Min Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs. Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

LACY'S WORKS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NATURE'S HARMONY.

A Wonderful Production; more fully solving the Problem of Life than any other work ever before the public.

It demonstrates the Future Existence from a Scientific standpoint, and shows the dawning of a New Era, and the introduction of a New Dispensation of Thought.

One Hundred and Sixty-five Pages.

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Neatly bound in cloth. Price, $1.00.

STAR LAKE ROMANCE.

A poem of Love and Rivalry, and one of the most thrilling and bewitching tales ever written in verse.

The characters for the colloquies are such as to excite interest; consisting principally of a clergyman of high order, a young civil engineer, who is an Infidel, and an English heiress, who is a devoted Christian.

In this romance Christianity vs. Infidelity is discussed to its fulness.

A Work of Two Hundred Pages.

Bound in cloth, gilt and embossed. Price $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait, and will be sent promptly by mail by addressing

ARTHUR J. LACY,

Nirvana, Lake county, Mich.

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control: Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cents.

No. 2.—Origin of Life; or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.—The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action; or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 15 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life. Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles (late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican) in Spirit-Life; or, Life as He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the Mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. Price 20 cents

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life; and Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 21 Clinton Place, N. Y.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Balanced. The Infidel's Text Book; comparing some of the best teachings and sayings of the Bible with those of Sages and Philosophers who lived previous to the Authors of the Bible; also a Partial Exposition of its Errors. By GEO. C. DARLING. Price, 50 cents.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBREOHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound in volumes of 525 pages each—Vols. I., II., III., IV., and V. Each volume containing 525 pages—thirty tracts or more. A Library within themselves of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price. Paper, 60 cents per volume; cloth, $1.00. If the whole set are taken—paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents each.

The Truth Seeker in bound volumes. Vol. I., 25 cents; vol. II., 50 cents; vols. III. and IV., $2 each; vols. V., VI., VII., VIII., and IX., $3 each. The whole set by express for $15.

Voltaire in Exile. Translated from the French of M. GASTINEAU by his son EDMOND GASTINEAU. Being Memoirs of the life of the great writer never before published. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil? A Series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

Which: Spiritualism or Christianity? A discussion between MOSES HULL and REV. W. F. PARKER. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

A Few Days in Athens. By FRANCES WRIGHT. Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion. By BENJAMIN OFFEN, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, $1.

A Modern Symposium. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life. By Frederick Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blackford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward. The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Sir James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Frederick Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton. Utterances never surpassed by writers and all important subjects. Noted for their terse originality. Price, $1.25.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur. Par Pigault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By ZEPA. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World? By G. TOULMAN. 20 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Price, $1.25.

A Short History of the Bible. Being a Popular Account of the Formation and Development of the Canon. By BRONSON C. KEELER. This is a splendid work, showing how the Bible was manufactured by the church and ecclesiastics. Limp cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By GILBERT VALE. 20 cts.

Astro-Theological Lectures. Rev. ROBT. TAYLOR. Price, cloth, $2.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper. Price, 15 cents.

Bhagavad-Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. COCKBURN THOMPSON. Price, $1.75.

Bible in India. Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By LOUIS JACOLLIOT. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Price, $1.50.

Bible Inquirer; or, Key to Bible Investigation. Containing one hundred and forty-eight propositions; with references to the most plain and striking self-contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures. Also one hundred and fifty-two references to the most marvelous occurrences. Each quotation has a short description of its contents. By A. JACOBSON. Price, 15 cents.

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in Other Religions: Being a comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity, considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol. Royal 8vo. 567 pages. Cloth, $4.00.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning. It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopedia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

Bible of Humanity. By JULES MICHELET. Translated from the French by V. CALFA. 8vo. cloth, $3. This is a large epic in prose. The artist historian sings the evolution of mankind. He throws brilliant glimpses of light on the long course of events and works which he unfolds.

Bible of Rational Mind and Religion. Rational Religion and Morals. By THOMAS J. VADIEN, M.D., of St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3.

Bible of To-Day. By JOHN W. CHADWICK. This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible. Price, $1.50.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. By KERSEY GRAVES. 35 cents.

LUCY L. CHURCHILL'S LIBERAL OFFER.

ANTI-MONOPOLY AND PROHIBITION

Have become vital political issues of the day, therefore, should be thoroughly understood by both friends and opponents. The best works extant on these issues are offered to you cheap. Truth seekers please order them now. They are Richard's Crown; How He Wore It, (Its plot is to the cause of the common people what "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was to the enslaved African), $1.50.—Prohibition and Self-Government; Their Irreconcilable Antagonism, Walker, 10 cents.—Dr. Kellogg's Cause and Cure of Intemperance, etc., 50 cents. From the date of this paper until June 15th I will mail, to one address, these great works for $1.60. For $3.00 these books and a 10k badge. For $5.25 these books and an 18k badge.

Freethinker's Badge Pin.

This badge is adapted for the use of all classes of Freethinkers, "Universal Mental Liberty" being its device. The cut shows the design and size, but not its beauty. Solid 18k gold, double thick, $4.00; solid gold 10k, $1.75. Packages registered; remit by postoffice order or registered letter, and mention this paper. Descriptiv circular with terms to Leagues, etc., free. Address the originator and patentee,

LUCY N. CHURCHILL,
West Richfield, Summit Co., Ohio.

2t23

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

SEND FOR

The Crimes of Preachers

From May, 1876 to May, 1882.

TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS.

And with previous Translations diligently compared and revised.

By Col. M. E. BILLINGS.

SECOND EDITION.

Price Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE GREAT AMERICAN BOOK.

WAITE'S HISTORY OF The Christian Religion

What the Press Say About It.
What Scholars Think of It.

The San Francisco Chronicle says: "It is by far the most important effort of American scholarship in this field of investigation."

The Boston Herald says: "The refutation of it will be found the most difficult problem that ever was propounded to the clergy by a layman." This paper calls it "A Scholar's Challenge to the Ecclesiastics."

The New Orleans Times says: "Judge Waite is an accomplished and scholarly man, and has made all of his arguments with force and clearness."

The Chicago Tribune, the Chicago Times, the Milwaukee Sentinel, the Troy (N. Y.) Press, the Detroit Commercial Advertiser, the Charleston (S. C.) Mercury, and a large number of other papers hav had similar notices.

Single copies sent by mail at $2.25, cloth.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office,

LIFE-SIZE LITHOGRAPH OF D. M. BENNETT.

Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.

Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

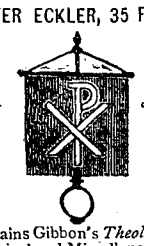
per, 10 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION



Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

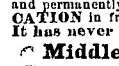
Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office

6m15



DIANA! A Psyco-Phisiological essay on sexual relations. Original in theory, Scientific in treatment and pure in tone. Price 25 cents.

BURNZ & CO,
24 Clinton Place.

3mo11

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

DR. FELLOWS

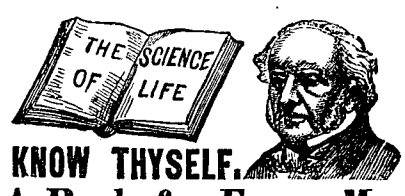
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and turpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Gems of Thought.

THE belief in witchcraft long existed in the world. As long ago as Moses penned the laws to govern the descendants of Abraham he wrote very hard terms for those supposed to be witches. "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv," was one of his enactments, and this cruel, merciless sentence for many centuries was accepted and acted upon as a decree from the throne of heaven, and many were put to death in that era for being unfortunate enough to be judged a witch. It prevailed also in many heathen countries for hundreds of years, but it was reserved for Christianity to add the crowning touches of infamy and wrong to this most unfortunate delusion, mania, or mental disease.—D. M. Bennett.

WHEN people are punished here on earth, even by imperfect men, they are punished for something, and their punishment has some relation to their offense. We should think it scandalous to punish a child as we punish a man; we should think it monstrous to punish the thief who steals a loaf of bread as we punish the swindler who heaps up riches by forgery and lying. For a first offense we do not punish as we do for a second or a third. All kinds of considerations are introduced to make the scales of justice true. Some young criminals are not even punished at all, but sent to a reformatory—a kind of compulsory school—and when they learn to do well they are gladly admitted to the open world, and hav free course among their fellows.—Hopps's Moody's Sermon on Hell.

AS to immortality, the Stoics precluded themselvs by holding the theory of absorption of the individual soul at death into the divine essence; but, on the other hand, their doctrin of advance and aspiration is what has, at all times, been the main natural argument for the immortality of the soul. For the most part, they keep themselvs undivided as to this great doctrin, giving it as an alternativ, reasoning as to our conduct on either supposition, and submitting to the pleasure of God in this as in all other things.—Chambers's Encyclopedia.

WHEN we try to combine the idea of the continuance of conscious activity with the idea of the entire cessation of material conditions, and thereby to assert the existence of a purely spiritual world, we find that we hav made an unthinkable proposition. We may defend our hypothesis as passionately as we like, but when we strive coolly to realize it in thought we find ourselvs balked at every step.—Fiske's Unseen World.

IT is not by wearing down into uniformity all that is individual in themselvs, but by cultivating it and calling it forth within the limits imposed by the rights and interests of others, that human beings become a noble and beautiful object of contemplation; and as the works partake the character of those who do them, by the same process human life also becomes rich, diversified, and animating, furnishing more abundant element to high thoughts and elevating feelings and strengthening the tie which binds every individual to the race by making the race infinitly better worth belonging to. In proportion to the development of individuality each person becomes more valuable to himself, and is therefore capable of being more valuable to others. There is a greater fulness of life about his own existence, and when there is more life in the units there is more in the mass which is composed of them.—Mill's Liberty.

IT does not make any difference whether you believe as the school-men of the Middle Ages did or not on some matter that is purely speculativ up in the air, except—and here is a vital exception—if you do firmly believe that a multitude of things of no importance is of first importance, then it makes a difference; because these pseudo opinions stand in the way of your discovering and acting upon the true. I say, then, it makes a great deal of difference what you think about God, what you think about human nature, what kind of a being man is, what you think about sin, about evil, about crime, about patriotism, about the social problems of the time. The minute you come into practical affairs, to those things that, as I hav said, touch character, touch conduct, then opinion means life and death, and it is not a slight affair at all.—M. J. Savage.

WHETHER I was mistaken or not, it has been the plan of my life to follow my convictions, at whatever personal cost to myself. I hav represented for many years a district in Congress whose approbation I greatly desired; but though it may seem, perhaps, a little egotistical to say it, I yet desired still more the approbation of one person, and his name is Garfield. He is the only man that I am compelled to sleep with, and eat with, and liv with, and die with; and if I could not hav his approbation I should hav bad companionship.—James A. Garfield.

ONE bad appetite conquered leads us into new fields where each succeeding one is easier controled than the last, and where there is a greater charm in winning the victory than in enjoying the present pleasure of gratified sensations.—Elmina D. Slenker.

THE lights by great men reached and kept
  Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
  Were toiling upward in the night.

Standing on what too long we bore
  With shoulders bent and downcast eyes,
We may discern—unseen before—
  A path to higher destinies.

Nor deem the inevitable past,
  As wholly wasted, wholly vain,
If, rising on its wreck, at last
  To something nobler we attain.

—Longfellow

A MAN that is of judgment and understanding shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that these which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselvs would never agree; and if it so come to pass in that distance of judgment which is between man and man, shall we not think that God above that knows the heart doth discern that frail men, in some of their contradictions, intend the same thing and accept of both.—Bacon's Essays.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.,

80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of disease as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom presrcibe it for their patients after medcin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for a knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and hav been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

CHAS. E. TRASK, 304 Ingham st., Jackson, Mich., says: "Garments arrived, with letter of instructions. Hav worn them. They are benefiting me more in the past week than all the medicin I hav ever taken."

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

NO CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all Communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA

MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

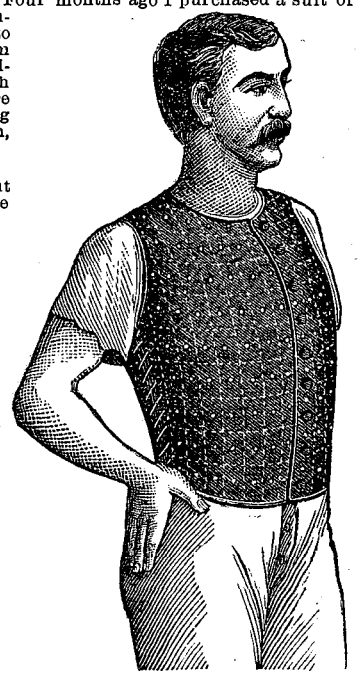
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED.

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

(Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 25. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, June 23, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

NEWPORT Journal: "Talk of mesmerizers putting people asleep! We know some preachers who can put more people asleep than any professional mesmerizer, yet their mesmeric powers go uncredited as such."

HANS OVERSET, a gentleman who arrived in Union county, Iowa, a few months ago direct from Norway, grew insane from too hard study of the English language and theology, and has been taken to the asylum at Yankton.

CHICAGO seems to gain in population much more rapidly than in religion. In 1840 the ratio of churches and missions to population in that city was 1 to 747; in 1880 1 to 2,081, and from 1880 to 1882 no relativ gain was made.

"RELIGIOUS summer resorts" are advertised. A religious summer resort is not a camp-meeting, for that is generally the reverse of religious. It is one of those places where they hav plenty of public prayer and preaching, and all the fun on the sly.

THE Buffalo Catholic Union says: "The Baptist Weekly solemnly observes that 'if Pope Leo doesn't mind some New York Irishmen will turn Protestants.' When those 'some New York Irishmen' heard that they laughed and said, 'We'll be damned if we do.'"

ACCORDING to the Missionary Review the Hindoos "not only believe in probation in one state of existence after death, but they believe in 8,400,000 successiv periods of existence, each beginning with birth and ending with death, and probation continued in each and all of them."

A NEW HAMPSHIRE paper says that while a Rev. Mr. Stocking was on his wedding journey last summer he occupied one of the pulpits in that state. He was a very little man, and when he gave out his text: "She hath done what she could," the ladies of the congregation smilingly accepted his apology, in behalf of his wife, for not having paired herself better.

SAYS the Churchman: "It is not every doctor of divinity who is competent to teach children. It is reported that one of them, undertaking to define catechism to a Sunday-school, said: 'A catechism is a synopsis, a compendium, a syllabus of Christian doctrin.'" If a teacher would giv his scholars something that they can really understand, let him teach them the Athanasian creed.

REV. DR. J. T. DURYEA, who was once a bright and shining light among the clergy of Troy, now of the Central Congregational church in Boston, declining a call to another pastorate, says: "Boston is the hardest place on the planet to do honest work in an evangelical church. Unitarianism has the intellectual lead here, and if a man is in a hurry for results he'd better stay away."

MRS. ANNIE BESANT, the Malthusian apostle and editorial colleag of Charles Bradlaugh, says the New York Star, is now about 30 years old, and is of Irish birth. When young she was famed for her beauty. She is now a large, well-proportioned woman, with dark-brown hair and dark-gray eyes full of fire. Her face is leonine, energetic, restless in expression. She is finely educated and has a particularly logical mind. She is planning to come to America soon on a lecturing tour.

"PARSON" POMEROY allows his paper to speak rather disrespectfully of his brethren on the coast. His Democrat of the 9th says: "California, unfortunately, has within its borders a shad-bellied, blue-nosed, old moss-back who pounds the dust out of a pulpit-cushion. He was recently asked to read a notice of a temperance lecture by that noble and gifted woman, Miss Francis Willard, to which he replied: 'I suppose if I do, the next thing you will bring me will be the announcement of a circus.' That preacher is too good for this world, and not good enough for heaven."

At a recent Southern camp-meeting the eloquent divine said: "The wheels of the righteous shriek and groan as they toil up the hill of salvation and over the ruts of temptation and the bridge of damnation, and hav to screwdge pretty lively to get up at all; but the sinner, with greased wheels and flying colors, slips down to tarnation like a dose of oil, with a rip and a whizz, and raises no dust whatever." Now, who says oratory is a lost art? asks Life.

IT is historically true that the Puritans in England gave to a child the name "If-Christ-had-not-died-for-thee-thou-hadst-been-damned Barebones." He lived under the affliction, and, we believe, became a member of Parliament, and for convenience all the words of his Christian name were dropped but the last, and he was called "Damned Barebones." The name of his father was "Praise God Barebones." The names may still be found on the official lists in England.

THE king of the Sandwich Islands, having grown tired of seeing his kingdom invaded by every imaginable foreign coin, is having a lot of silver coins manufactured at Philadelphia which are strictly Hawaiian in name and character. In view of the fact that his dollar is a little short in weight, he has taken the precaution to hav stamped upon it the striking phrase, "Ua Mau Ke Ea O Ka Alua I Ka Pono," which is about the equivalent for "In God We Trust." The simple-minded nativs would probably rather hav full weight in their coins and less trustfulness.

"MY dear child," said a pious-looking man to a boy on the bank of a stream one sunshiny Sunday morn, "what are you doing there?" "Fishin', of course, are yer blind?" replied the boy. "Don't you know, my dear child—" "Shut up; I've got a bite." "But, my boy, don't you know it is very wicked?" "There, dang it, that fish's got away agin." "Don't you know the devil will catch you, my boy?" "I know nuthin' 'bout it; but if he ain't any luckier catchin' me than I've bin catchin' that damned sunfish I guess I'll be on hand at Sunday-school next Sunday—if it rains."

WHILE the first anniversary of Garibaldi's death was being observed with appropriate exercises, a telegram from Lendinara, Venetia, announced that one of the patriot's most trusted officers had followed him into the other world. Alberto Mario was born in 1827, the descendant of one of Venice's most noble families, and besides his prowess as a soldier he gained some renown as a man of letters. He wrote "The Red Shirt in Calabria," an account of the campaign of 1860; a Life of Garibaldi; a collection of literary and biographical essays; a series of political essays; a series of "Lives of Martyrs for Freethought," from Bruno downward; "Personal Reminiscences of Garibaldi" for Macmillan's Magazine; and a series of biographies of noble Italian women for The Englishwoman's Magazine.

HERE and there a few extra-liberal religionists hav undertaken to defend that anomalous outcome of undisciplined fervor and fanaticism which calls itself the Salvation Army. Its agents appear to be continually defying law and order, and hav just produced another scandal in Syracuse. These rather disgraceful incidents of the new movement are too frequent not to be in some way an outcome of the system itself, and even those advocates of martial methods of religion must sooner or later be convinced that any attempt to convert the world by such a guerilla process is hopeless. No doubt special measures must be taken by pious reformers who wish to reach and hold the attention of the ignorant and debased, but it is yet to be demonstrated that these measures include tambourines, clog-dances, and all the hanky-panky of the dance-house and the circus, or that hysterical and ignorant young women in monkey uniforms are the best agents to bring men into the fold of temperance and righteousness. Indeed, the latest reports from the Salvation Army and its camp followers appear to demonstrate just the other thing.—World.

MERE Sabbatarianism as such, says the Saturday Review, has but the slightest support from reason, and next to none from religion. Any member of the Anglican church who chooses to hold Sabbatarianism to its strictest form, holds it as a private conceit which has not the least authority in ecclesiastical doctrins, and is contradicted by the best traditions of ecclesiastical practice. No Roman Catholic holds the Sabbatarian creed at all. Among Protestant Dissenters, even among the Presbyterian bodies in England, and to a very great extent in the Kirk of Scotland and its offshoots, Sabbatarianism has of late years sunk for the most part to the level of a pious opinion, if it has maintained that level. The man who really thinks it wrong to whistle a tune or to look at a picture on Sunday becomes rarer and rarer.

A SIXTEEN-YEAR-OLD girl, one of the members of the Salvation Army in an eastern town, married a negro the other day. It looks more and more as though the Salvation Army business should be suppressed. —An exchange announces that a church of a New York town recently received a lady nearly one hundred years old into the fold on probation. If she happens to liv a few months she may yet be a church-member. It will be noticed that the churches are becoming more careful every year.—A certain Mormon leader speaks of the polygamous proselyters as "our laborers in the vinyard." It is stated by persons who hav seen members of the proselyter Mormons that they look more like laborers in a potato patch, and as though they had been plowing up the potatoes with their noses.—Religious Editor of Texas Siftings.

A VERY thin woman had felt the power of the spirit and had been converted, and she appeared before the session to pass the preliminary examination. "Hav you experienced a change of heart?" asked the elder, gently. "Yes, sir, I believe I hav." "And you want to liv a new life?" "Yes, sir, I hope I do." "Are you willing to renounce the world, the flesh, and the devil?" "Do I hav to do that?" "Certainly, if you would be a consistent Christian." "Can't I giv up two of them and still go into the church?" "No, the renunciation must be complete." "Well, then, you must excuse me. I want to be a Christian, I want to giv up the world and the devil, but if a woman, as thin already as I am, has to giv up any more flesh, she might as well giv up wanting to be a Christian, and go and join a side show as the great American only living skeleton. Gentlemen, you will hav to excuse me. I want to join the church, but I'm not prepared to join a side show this summer."—The Drummer.

THE Olivet Presbyterian church in Philadelphia is in the thick of a bitter "choir fight." Some time ago the choir leader asked for an increase of $100 a year in his salary. Mr. Irvine, the blind organist, in commenting upon the matter, said he knew a better man who would lead the choir for $100 less than the present pay of its director. The latter is a favorit of the pastor, the Rev. L. Y. Graham, who, upon hearing of Mr. Irvine's remarks, promptly discharged him from his office. He declared that his motiv was to rebuke Mr. Irvine for his expression. The organist refused to accept his dismissal, and the pastor on Sunday, the 10th, endeavored to enforce it in the manner of the hotel "bouncer." Matters culminated on Monday night at a distribution of prizes to Sunday-school children. The pastor had secured a new organist, and had stricken from the program the part most interesting to Mr. Irvine, which was the presentation to him of $50 in gold by Mr. Pyfer. Mr. Graham's plans were perfect in design, but failed in execution. Mr. Irvine's were laid out well and carried out much better. By his arrangement the choir in their seats refused to sing, and the organ boy at his bellows refused to pump, while Mr. Graham was further humiliated by the appearance of Mr. Irvine and the presentation to him of the fifty dollars.

News of the Week.

HENRY WARD BEECHER will be 70 years old on the 24th.

THIRTY United States war vessels are to be sold at auction by order of Secretary Chandler.

GEN. CROOKE is back to Arizona from his successful campaign against the Indians, with many prisoners.

FOUR dynamite plotters, charged with treson-felony, hav been sentenced to imprisonment for life at London, Eng.

M'GEOCH, EVERINGHAM & Co., lard merchants of Chicago, hav failed for $1,000,000. The failure created a panic, and eight other firms hav suspended in consequence.

THE custom of lynching seems to be gaining undesirable popularity in the West and South. A white man was lynched in Michigan and a negro in Alabama on the 14th.

LI HUNG CHANG, the Chinese commander, has informed the French minister that Chin has no intention of declaring war against France, as had been previously rumored.

THE long Star route trial ended on the 14th with a verdict of acquittal for the defendants. Col. Ingersoll, counsel for the defense, received an ovation. The costs of the trial will foot up nearly $1,200,000.

THE Rev. J. Lane Borden, president of the Mansfield, La., Female College, was shot and killed, last Saturday, by the Rev. Ben F. Jenkins, Jr. The Rev. Mr. Borden had seduced a young lady to whom the Rev. Mr. Jenkins was engaged to be married.

TEN suits hav been begun against the two cities of New York and Brooklyn and the trustees of the Brooklyn Bridge to recover damages for the consequences of the Decoration Day panic. The total amount of damages sued for aggregate upward of $200,000.

THE Rev. Peter O'Neil, of England, now in New York, wrote a letter to Mrs. Hawkes, urging her to meet him, as it is alleged, for improper purposes. Mrs. Hawkes gave the letter to her brother-in-law, who met the priest at the appointed place and gav him a thrashing.

THE Rev. Florence McCarthy, a Brooklyn priest, was arrested last week, charged with criminal assault on the person and virtue of his servant girl. At the time of his arrest he was under bonds for having committed the same offense against a young lady of his congregation.

MR. MOTT, a member of the Salvation Army at Syracuse, N. Y., is charged by Miss Louisa Hauser, also a member of the army, with seduction under the promis of marriage. Mott admits the seduction, but denies the promis. He says he was doing as Jesus did and is free from sin.

YOUNG Nutt, of Uniontown, Pa., son of the murdered Captain Nutt, shot and killed N. S. Dukes, the slayer of his (Nutt's) father, on the 13th inst. It will be remembered that Dukes seduced Nutt's sister and shot her father some time ago. The jury acquitted Dukes of the charge of murder, and the son took the law in his own hands. Public sympathy is with young Nutt, and it is thought that a jury cannot be found who will convict him.

ONE hundred and eighty-six school-children, ranging in age from four years to fourteen years, were killed in a crush at a conjurer's show in Sunderland, England, on Saturday last. More than one thousand children were in the hall. The exit was but twenty inches wide. The panic was started by some one falling on the stairs. Soon the stairway was filled with a mass of children, and 178 of them were knocked down and trampled to death or suffocated, their bodies lying seven or eight deep. A number of deaths hav occurred since the first report, and the fatal list is now placed at 188, and it is feared that the number will yet be shown to hav reached 200.

Communications.

Mr. S. P. Andrews vs. Mr. S. P. Putnam.

THE "I," AND THE "NOT I."

When one has been innocently the cause of a difference, if only of a wordy nature, between two friends, the desire to step in and part the combatants and set matters right is certainly natural and commendable. Let this desire be reason enough for a few words about the controversy between Mr. S. P. Andrews and Mr. S. P. Putnam, on the nature of science. The dispute arose in the Colloquium, last winter, out of an exposition of the Positiv or scientific philosophy presented mainly by me; but where the dispute will end it would be impossible to speculate, for it has turned upon the question of the ages, as to the relations of the subjectiv and objectiv—that is, the wordy war between the metaphysicians and the scientists.

We were all launched into this vast sea of speculation by a definition of science given by Mr. S. P. Putnam, in which, singularly enough, all were agreed, but for which the theologians, metaphysicians, and scientists present sought a different foundation.

Each sought to lay under the definition his solution of the world.

To the question, What is science? Mr. Putnam said, Systematized knowledge—or, perhaps better, knowledge systematized; that is, putting knowledge first and the system after it. At once the questions arose, What is the test of knowledge? and what is the object of the system?

There are three fundamental solutions of the world, and answers may be given from each solution to those questions. The question for this age is, Which must be accepted as true?

The theologian says the ultimate test of knowledge is the revealed will of God, the creator of the world, who knew all about it when he made it.

The metaphysicians say that the logos ("The Word") which was with God, and was God, and remaineth ever the true logic of the universe, is the test.

The Scientist says the agreement of our subjectiv ideas with the external, or objectiv, order of the world around us, is the test of truth and the substance and foundation of what we are to regard as knowledge.

Mr. Andrews is the chiefest living incarnation of the logos, or logic of the universe.

Mr. Putnam follows Bacon, and hopes only to be "the minister and interpreter of Nature, and believes that man can only understand and do as to the order of Nature in so far as he may hav observed the same, whether in, or as to, the world itself, or in, or as to, the mind of man (re vel mente)."

As Mr. Putnam says, "the [to many] incomprehensible difference between Mr. Andrews and myself is in the starting-point. Is the outward universe or the mind of man the starting-point? He says the mind of man; I say the outward universe. He admits that this is so in time, as a fact of history, but not as a fact of logic; but I say that even as a fact of logic the universe comes first. Mr. Andrews is idealistic; I am realistic. Mr. Andrews makes the objectiv a mode of the subjectiv; I make the subjectiv a mode of the objectiv. I subordinate the mind of man to the outward universe; Mr. Andrews subordinates the outward universe to the mind of man, and makes it but a mental image."

This admirable statement of the question by Mr. Putnam will seem to scientists conclusiv of it. That the human race and all of its logic is the product of the world about us, as the result of natural processes and laws, seems now too plain to dispute. If the whole race of man should pass away with a comet's stroke, or other fatality, can we avoid the conclusion that the world (the not I) would still exist? If so, where would be the word, mind, or logos? The question, as old as Lucretius, Can there be thought or mind without a brain or nervous system? has been answered by modern psychology in the negativ. Without the world there could hav been no sensation ever, but without human sensation, or any conceivable mind, the world must be conceived as still existing. The "Not I" is therefore the eternal fact, foundation, and inexpugnable factor of the "I," upon which the "I" rests, and from which had and has its being.

Mr. Putnam is therefore correct in basing modern science and philosophy upon our knowledge of this objectiv order of the eternal world about us. The test of truth is the agreement of our ideas with that order; that is, the agreement of thoughts with things, facts, and processes observed around and within us. The agreement of ideas with ideas may make analogies or poetry, but not science or verified truth.

But while the external and objectiv world must ever remain as the inexpugnable basis of man and his subjectiv interpretation of that world, it must be frankly admitted that the subjectiv interpretation is, after all, the only interpretation of that order possible to man. In other words, we know of the external world only as our senses reveal it to us. "The eye brings more than it sees" is as true of each of our senses as it is of our sense of sight. But what it brings are the capacity and treasured sensations of the race, derived from contact with the world. Heredity is the factor formerly overlooked in the interpretation of nature, which under the genius of modern science, and especially of Herbert Spencer, has proved the open-sesame to the mysteries of human nature and its knowledge of the world.

The sensation by which all of the human race, and even brute animals, and even the plants, respond to their environments, makes one grand race of beings, all having a similar chemical or physical basis of life, the wondrous protoplasm, upon which a kind of sensation of the external world is produced, as if upon a musical instrument. Out of that sensation, ever increasing in the upward scale from protists to plants, to animals, and finally blossoming out in man, we hav the material out of which our capacities of perceiving, combining, and reasoning hav evolved. At bottom this whole subjectiv world of man is the outgrowth of the objectiv world and a part of it. The logos is the flower of the world, but not the soil, nor even the plant. But equally true is it that the fact of perception and of all of our knowledge of the external order is ever but a mode of our sensation in so far as our knowledge is concerned. Man can therefore only make a subjectiv—that is, a human—synthesis of the world around him. He can only interpret it to himself and fellows according to his and their common mode of sensation and perception. Wherever human sensations agree as to the external things, facts, and processes, and perceive them to be correlated together by constant relations and laws, then, and then only, a sure basis and test of certainty and prevision arises, and we hav knowledge, which can be systematized into science. But the first step is knowledge only, and not science. That is attained when the knowledge is classified, or systematized, so as to be a solution of the world and a basis of human prevision, action, and life.

What, then, shall be the system and the object of this classification? The theologian says the glory of God. The metaphysician says the manifestation of the word—the logos, as in Universology. The Positiv scientist says the use and glory of man. Under this impulse the Positiv classification of the special sciences, or man's knowledge of the domains of nature, reaching from man out to the infinitude of astronomy, has been framed, and is the most wonderful and glorious monument of man's accumulation of power and knowledge by heredity. It is the summary of his victory throughout the ages over nature, yet always by obeying her.

Here, then, in the Positiv objectiv, and subjectiv philosophy, we hav the only solution of the world worthy of our age or time. It is at once wholly relativ and yet integral. Would we know how man and his subjectiv world came here, we must ask the objectiv world out of which man and his logic hav evolved.

Would we know what this world is, we must ask science, or man's systematized knowledge of that world, accumulated through the ages in the animal and human systems, as well as in social archeology and recorded human history.

Both of these views of the world, objectiv and subjectiv, are the only responses man can giv. Existence is his looking into the lake of the cosmos, and seeing his own reflection as of the waters, placid or ruffled. He brings the picture he sees in the waters, but the lake is there, and he and his reflection and the lake itself are parts of one order of the world, however much he may wish to believe this shadow is not his image, but that of a God in whose image he was created. The thought, mind, and art of man are in ultimate analysis, but a part of the world of nature which is our fundamental conception and the basis of all.

There are three passages from the immortal poets which seem to me to embody the deepest philosophy, and upon which a whole summer's meditation may well replace the winter's Colloquium.

From Shakspere's "Winter's Tale," the following lines are partly quoted by Herbert Spencer, and are the delight of Positiv philosophers, containing as they do their deepest truth, and a statement of the proper relation of the subjectiv and objectiv:

> "Yet Nature is made better by no mean
> But Nature makes that mean: so, o'er that art,
> Which, you say, adds to Nature, is an art
> That Nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry
> A gentler scion to the wildest stock,
> And make conceive a bark of baser kind
> By bud of nobler race. This is an art
> Which doeth mend Nature—change it rather; but
> The art itself is Nature."

The next passage is from the first part of Goethe's "Faust." In it the poet breaks through the divine word, or logos, of St. John, and of all metaphysicians, down to the hard fact, or act, of the contact of the subjectiv with the objectiv which Mr. Putnam calls the fundamental perception, or "intuition," of the "Not I," and which is the first step of all knowledge. Faust, musing in his study, opens the New Testament at St. John's gospel, and thus disposes of its first verse, which is the foundation of all metaphysics or Universology:

> "It stands written, 'In the Beginning was the Word.'
> Here at once I balk; who can ever help me on?
> It is not possible to rate THE WORD so high;
> Quite otherwise must I translate,
> If by the Spirit I am enlightened aright.
> Now it stands written, 'In the Beginning was the Thought.'
> Bethink thee well over this first line,
> That thy pen pass not too hastily on!
> Is it the Thought that works and forms The All?
> No! It should stand, 'In the Beginning was the Power.'
> Yet even as this I am writing down
> Something warns me that by it I can never stand.
> The Spirit aids me: all at once I see the truth,
> And confidently I write, 'In the Beginning was the ACT.'"

This unity of the subjectiv and objectiv in the mind of man, as the cardinal or hinge point of each of these worlds, is beautifully implied in Emerson's exquisit poem, "The Rhodora" (or Rhododendron). Read the whole poem and remember the conclusion:

> "Rhodora! if the sages ask thee why
> Thy charm is wasted on earth and sky,
> Tell them, dear, that if eyes were made for seeing,
> Then Beauty is its own excuse for being.
> Why thou were there, O rival of the rose,
> I never thought to ask, I never knew;
> But, in my simple ignorance, suppose
> The self-same Power that brought me there brought you."

The poet and the flower found themselvs the common children of the all-correlating processes of the objectiv world. His fancy wove the wild flower into the life and heart of man.

Thus ever does Nature through the human intellect turn upon herself and appropriate her processes and results to human uses and joys. The "Not I" becomes the foraging ground and finally the farm of the collectiv, the dominant, Humanity of earth.

As I write this on the Stamford Hills, under the pines warding off the Sunday's sun, my eyes sweep a scene of the "Not I" formerly torn into vales by glaciers and strewn with rocks and stones. Over this wild wreck of land and ice and sea, protoplasm had thrown long ago its thin veil of plant and then of animal life. Then wild men gathered a precarious existence from its wilderness. Finally four generations of civilized men hav labored to remove the forests, gather the stones into fences, and drain the swamps. Now the eye is delighted by hills and vales clad with meadows and orchards, and gladdened by blossoms and birds. Beyond these the sight follows sail after sail on the Sound, and traces the green outline of the Long Island shore beyond. The prevailing effect of this whole landscape is that of rest, comfort, and peace, as the result of the prevision and labor of man resting upon natural laws.

What the "I" has done with this little tract of the "Not I" will be done with the whole visible earth, and also with the whole invisible tract of human philosophy.

But the basis and foundation of all the transformations into a higher world will be the old, original, glacier-swept earth, and the primary sensations of mankind. Out of these shall grow the higher logic, and a new ideal, spiritual world, transcending the conceptions of the past and present as the present landscape does the wild moraines of the glacier of geology.

Then the infinit will remain beyond the knowable. But no blasphemous theologian will dare to speak of it as a person.

Then the logic, the logos, the word, will remain. But no metaphysician, not even Mr. Andrews, our American Hegel, and justly honored as such, will dare to claim for it other than a relativ existence as the laws and truths which Man has systematized out of his contact with the cosmos and his race and himself.

Then the philosophy of science, recognizing the infinit and the cosmos, and their logic in proper place, will find HUMANITY as the culmination, reconciliation, because the integration, of all human knowledge, and upon that conception a new spiritual and social world will assuredly arise. T. B. WAKEMAN.

June 10, E. M., 283.

A Modern Quaker Meeting.

The Evening Telegram of June 1st contained a notice that an Indian princess would speak at the Quaker church, opposit Stuyvesant park. I had noticed for the week previous some hundreds of people filing in and out of this modest little chapel, mostly middle-aged and decrepit old men and women evidently from the rural districts, including a bevy of young maidens who, judging from their fresh and rosy appearance, seemed to know the value of a corn-cake diet and pure spring water as a beverage, and also, by their rollicking, frolicsome gambols in the park when let out of church, had a due appreciation of the joys of liberty. With the exception of now and then a palsy-stricken old gentleman with a turned-up coat collar, and some matronly and meditativ old lady in a dress resembling a hen on stilts in the molting season, you could not distinguish the Quaker from the carnal-minded.

The meeting opened at 7:30 P.M. with an audience of about one hundred and fifty persons, presumably mostly outside barbarians who from curiosity had come to hear the princess. The meeting seemed to hav been held for the winding up of a week's powwow, and the advertising of the Indian maiden a decoy to increase the droppings in the hat from the worldly-minded.

A sort of dry-goods-looking man with mutton-chop whiskers commenced by reading letters from Quakers in various portions of the United States, who seemed to hav as many reasons for not attending the meeting as an ungrateful set once bid welcome to a marriage feast. The business transactions were interlarded with denunciations against war and capital punishment, and in which General Grant was lauded as a peace man and almost a Quaker in accumulating money; that the late General Zachary Taylor was really a peace man, but the inhuman James K. Polk would make him go to war.

They seemed to be very much exercised in their minds in regard to a tent which they had loaned to a party in Connecticut who were about unveiling a statue in memory of a defunct general.

At this juncture a note was read, that T. B. Wakeman, a peace man, would speak if desired. This seemed satisfactory to all. Mr. Wakeman spoke feelingly in depreciation of war, but in the course of his remarks incidentally mentioned Voltaire. They seemed horrified, and commenced coughing and buzzing to each other, while an old lady in a bombazine gown began to count the money in the hat. It being past ten o'clock, the boss Quaker gave the young feminin Indian permission to speak.

The queen of the Lava Beds bounded upon the platform, evidently vexed at having been held in restraint. I giv her speech, as reported by your humble scribe:

"White folks, I come before you to plead the wrongs of my people. I know my forefathers once owned the ground I stand upon. I know with gun, powder, and ball, as Joshua did in Canaan, you drove us from New England. I know as the serpent beguiled our common mother Eve, so did William Penn beguile my ancestors in Pennsylvania with soft, honied words; both equally effectiv in robbing my people of their homes. You pretend to love us, but it is our land you covet. You giv us what is not yours to giv; then you giv us farming implements, then you steal our tools, kill our buffaloes, and drive us again toward the setting sun. My people hav no resting-place. Their hunting-grounds are gone; their homes are desolate; their heart is in their mouth. You say we are cruel to children, but since I hav been in New York I hear white men kill five thousand little children every summer. You say we don't love the Great Spirit. My people hav but one god; white people hav a great many gods. Every morning my people watch the rising of the sun, and we bow our heads in mute silence. Our god is better than yours; it shines on all my people, while your god permits you to shut your people up in shops, and the sun only shines on the rich—"

She was breaking out anew, but the elders seemed to think they had had enough, and threw up the sponge.

This young girl was eloquent, speaking good Engglish, in choice vocabulary. It is the boast of the Quakers that there was never a Democrat in their ranks. For double dealing, the Quaker can giv the Jew odds and beat him. The capital of New Bedford and Fall River, Mass., is in the hands of the Quaker fraternity, and in no two cities are the working classes so besotted and degraded. Macaulay, the English historian, describes William Penn in no enviable light, and for two hundred years hav the heirs of Penn drawn an annual pension of $20,000 from the toiling masses of Great Britain. Like almost every other sect, the Quakers are divided—the Hicksites and the Orthodox—and their love for each other is "love to hatred turned." The state prison at Concord, Mass., contains a goodly representation of Fall River Quakers. PAXTON.

Superstition a Contagious Mind Epidemic.

No satisfactory estimate of the injury superstition has done in the world can be given us. What an awful shame and dishonor it is to the present age that so many well-developed brains, with such excellent faculties, are lying dormant, while, if they were stirred up into activity in the search of truthful knowledge, what wonderful results could they accomplish! When nature and reason are locked up in dormancy, passion and humor govern the mind, and vice and folly are the result, besides depriving posterity of their lawful legacy.

Young people possess good sense, a good memory, well balanced mental faculties, and excellent physical constitutions, capable of pursuing almost any profession. But this is not allowed them. They must degrade themselvs by crawling with knees and face in the dust. Instead of attending a dissection, of frequenting the courts of justice, of studying the natural sciences and human morality, they are compelled to spend all their spare time by crawling in the dust, by soliloquizing the beads, and by foolishly worshiping an unknown being. Thus they become downright slaves, and remain an example of talents utterly destroyed.

It is to this impertinent barbarity the world owes its whole race of slaves. Nature never made a slave. He is always made so, either by himself or by others. Were men at liberty to assist in nature's operations, what wonderful results might we expect! The names of the truly great, whose honors will liv on in the memory of posterity, would not then be so few, nor stand so alone and far between. Many of our poet-asters would then be poets, and our degraded private worshipers be renowned public orators.

A shudder of disgust runs through our system when we reflect upon the conditions that surround us, and more so when we discover that yet, perhaps, many generations must pass away before manhood can be thoroughly expurgated of this contagious mind epidemic.

A contagious mind epidemic? Certainly. When we inquire into the nature of contagious diseases, and compare them with the rapid spreading of superstition, the deep root it takes in the mind, and its fatal effect on both mind and body, we cannot giv it a more appropriate name.

But why contagious? Because of the powerful effect fear, sympathy, imitation, etc., hav upon people, and especially when assembled together. In such cases, if one becomes affected with a mental derangement, it is apt to run through the whole. Zimmerman's work on "Solitude," we are told, contains an account of similar manifestations. He says: "I hav read in a good medical work that a nun in a large convent in France began to mew like a cat. Shortly afterward other nuns also mewed. At last all the nuns mewed together every day at a certain time for several hours together. The whole surrounding Christian neighborhood heard with equal chagrin and astonishment this daily cat concert, which did not cease until all the nuns were informed that a company of soldiers were placed before the entrance of the convent, and that they were provided with rods, and would continue whipping them until they promised not to mew any more." And again: "A nun in a German nunnery fell to biting all her companions. In the course of a short time all the nuns of this convent began biting each other. The news of this infatuation soon spread, and it now passed from convent to convent throughout a great part of Germany, principally Saxony and Brandenburg. It afterward visited the nunneries of Holland, and at last the nuns had the biting mania even as far as Rome."

Our Salem witchcraft, with the history of which every schoolboy is familiar, was a similar excitement. Many more accounts of parallel instances could be given. But who that has ever reflected upon the mental excitements created at some of our religious revivals, or their so-called "getting religion," would not say that it is brought about in a like manner? By fraud and imposition the passions are being worked upon. A would-be pious impostor stands before them threatening, coaxing, crying, and praying to induce them to come forward to receive their good Jesus. Then comes forward a physically weak and mentally disordered one, then another, and another, until at last the whole assembly is in an uproar, each maniac crying, praying, screaming, and tumbling in a most frantic manner. How strange that people who consider themselvs elevated above the lower animals seek such society and encourage such degrading feelings. But when one views the obstacles that surround them, how from their earliest childhood superstition is forced upon them, how they are frightened with the horrors of burning human souls with brimstone in hell forever and ever, our wondering is changed into pitying. The law of the United States allows each individual to worship God as he or she pleases. This law, however, is of little or no value, as long as ignorant and fraudulent impostors are allowed to impose their particular belief upon innocent persons, and especially upon little children long before their reasoning faculties are sufficiently developed to understand or reason upon what they are told they must believe or be damned. Very few of the old people will ever outgrow their superstitions; but the young, growing-up generation must by all means be prevented from following the old and worn-out paths.

But even on this point, too, the enemy is on its guard. Not long since I heard one of these impostors assert from the altar to a large audience that if the children did not grow up religious and good Christians the parents must answer and suffer for it. And if parents could not persuade or compel them to believe in and adhere to the rites of religion, they should cast them from them, drive them from their door, and hav nothing more to do with them. Can this inhuman wretch possess one spark of parental love? And had he ever a parent he loved? Is he, in order to uphold his superstition, to prevent the forts of hell from prevailing against his tyrannical dogmas, really come to the necessity of commanding a father to cast from him his son, a mother to drive from her door her daughter, and perhaps compelling them to either beg, steal, or starve? Do these pious black-coats still thirst for the blood of those who cannot believe their absurdities? Are they yet willing to crucify, stone to death, and burn at the stake those who do not feign themselvs hypocrits, nor hesitate to express an honest thought? Are they still unwilling to admit that mankind can no more believe alike than they resemble each other in looks? Is it thus they disturb the quiet of an aged parent by stimulating his conscience into worrying until his gray hairs seek and find rest in the grave because he sees his children growing up unable to swallow the medicin administered by these theological quacks? They spare no pains in proclaiming what a gross sin it is to read the works of the so-called Infidels and Atheists, and in decrying them as being utterly false and absurd. Let us suppose for a moment that these arguments are false and groundless. Then what need they fear that the reading of such works will lead us astray from truth? By such fears do they not represent us as being void of reason and common sense? as being unable to discern truth from falsehood, and that they themselvs only are gifted with such talented endowments? Oh, how long will people allow themselvs to be told by the clergy (although in a polite way) that they are fools and void of understanding? Falsehood cannot be clothed so as to escape detection. Nature will reveal and expose it, and "truth crushed to earth will rise again."

In my communication to A. B. Bradford, which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 26th ult., you spelled my name John K. Kirt, but, as I hav always been told, it should be JOHN H. HIRT.

French Creek, Iowa.

The Infamous Russell Law.

From the Worthington, Minn., Advance.

Dr. James Cooper writes from Bellefontaine, Ohio, under date of May 6th, to the Banner of Light, as follows concerning the infamous Russell law passed by the Ohio Legislature taxing mediums $300:

"The 'Russell law' is creating quite a sensation in this state. Russell is a bigoted Methodist, I understand, and the whole measure is a Republican one. There are not less than twenty-five thousand Spiritualist voters in the state—four-fifths of them life-long Republicans—and I find that correspondents and those with whom I hav conversed on the matter, without an exception, will refuse to vote the Republican ticket under such circumstances, while the larger number will vote directly against it. Without the Spiritualists in the reserve (northern part of the state), the large Republican majority in that section will dwindle down to nothing.

"Besides, the course pursued by our Republican legislature in passing the law that puts our clairvoyants, mediums, and seers on a par with fortune-tellers and astrologers, of the fortune-teller type, and makes them out worse than the sellers of intoxicants by taxing them higher than the liquor sellers, will hav a corresponding effect politically among Spiritualists outside the state.

"Ohio, always considered one of the most Liberal of states, has been disgraced by her Republican legislature passing the most illiberal and bigoted law (so far as we Spiritualists are concerned) of the age."

This letter certainly has the right ring. The Liberals everywhere must organize and stand together or their liberty will be gone and they will be bound hand and foot and chained to the chariot of bigotry.

It is a burning shame and disgrace that the Republican party, once so progressiv, once the party of liberty, should hav become the party of bigotry, intolerance, and class legislation. A Republican majority in the Ohio legislature passed this infamous Russell bill; a Republican majority in Congress passed the infamous Comstock law, under which a number of men hav been sent to prison for publishing Liberal views upon religious and social subjects; Republican majorities in a number of states hav passed the notorious "doctor's plot" laws discriminating in favor of one system of practice and against another; a Republican judge, in Pennsylvania, decided that an Atheist, that is, one who does not believe in a personal God, was incompetent to testify in court, and wherever we turn we see the party that we hav all loved and fought for so many years, striking us right and left, hip and thigh, in the face and in the heart, and laughing us to scorn when we protest or ask relief.

We speak as a Republican, as one who for more than twenty years has supported the Republican party, and we, for one at least, will put in an indignant protest.

Almost in silence these outrages are burning and rankling in the hearts of Liberals, and it will not be long, at this rate, until some event will furnish the watchword and the rallying cry, and the Liberals will rise in every precinct in the country and will slaughter and bury the Republican party forever.

To Joseph Cook.

"What is a ship without a sail?
Adieu, my lover, adieu!
What is a monkey without a tail?
A dude, my lover, a dude."
What is a grindstone deprived of grit?
Look, Monday lecturer, look!
What is a preacher bereft of wit?
A Cook, poor sinner, a Cook!

Two witty Chicago preachers were one day talking about getting new bells for their respectiv churches. The Presbyterian said unto the Baptist clergy, "You ought to get a diving-bell." The Baptist replied, "True, and you ought to get a fire-bell," and they both laughed, and the dinner bell rang, and the belles of their congregations requested them to step out and eat their weight in yellow-legged chicken.—Cheek.

Two churches at Reading, Pa., were entered recently and the contents of the contribution boxes stolen. This incident should teach us that it is wiser to invest your money in the savings bank than in the contribution box. However, perhaps it isn't necessary to warn people against putting their money in the latter.—Rochester Post-Express.

Is "Mind-matter" Mind? Or Is Mind Matter?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Much has been written on this subject of late, and, at the risk of increasing confusion, I venture upon "a new departure," and offer a few thoughts for your consideration. We shall not follow friend Townsend through all his speculations. He reasons well, and if his premises are true, he is all right. For the old immaterial God, he givs us "universal mind-matter," and thinks it an improvement. Just how this "mind-matter" originated doth not appear. But it did not originate, for "it is primordial—infinit—eternal;" "givs to matter, potentiality and law;" "shaping and controling all;" "acts for a purpose; individualizes itself in finite minds; originates matter and law; is an indispensable part of matter; has design and will-force; is the intelligent author of nature; and we are co-workers—immortal participants with this great author in the bounteous disposition of matter which constitutes creation," etc. And though "it acts dynamically," I fail to see in dynamic force any intelligence. It is all, however, very nice if true, and many may find comfort in the thought of being immortal participants and co-workers with this great "origin and source of all minds," this infinit intelligent author of nature; and in the faith that their spirits or "mind-matter," being immortal, must take on at death a separate, independent, intelligent, and invisible existence, and so perpetuate individual selfhood forever. But if this be true, it is a fact of nature, and we shall know in due time. And if there be "invisible intelligence" that exist as material entities, and if they, and all else, must be matter or nothing, then does matter think, and matter is "all in all." And that's just what's the matter with matter. And that's matter enough. It will not do to say that there is a mind still back of this invisible ghost or intelligence, which uses it as an instrument. For it is admitted that mind, spirit, and mind-matter are synonymous. And if it be a material entity, then it must be subject to all the laws of matter, change, etc., and cannot forever maintain its identity. While if "mind-matter" is not mind, then it does not solve the mind problem. And mind is left outside of and independent of matter, and is consequently nothing. Now, it won't seem as difficult to conceive of a mind outside of and independent of a living material organism, as to set up a God outside of and independent of nature.

These two propositions being correlativ, the one is the legitimate child of the other. Both are vague, incomprehensible, and eminently orthodox. They are the great superstition—the great overshadowing ghost. And after all, it would seem that nothing so well as no-thing can solve the ghost problem. Put nothing in the place of the ghost and you solve it every time, even the trinity. Now, the great superstitions hav come from man's ignorance of nature, and his proneness to attribute all unexplained phenomena to the agency of intelligent, invisible spirits. And can we attribute "Spiritual phenomena" to the same agency and expect to escape the suspicion of being a little superstitious? Townsend says, "All potentiality infused into us, for art works, has its origin exclusivly in our minds." But (admitting that) what has the mind to do with the origin of gravitation, cohesion, perception, conception, growth, digestion, assimilation, respiration, circulation, secretion, and other functions of our living bodies, even decay and death? These forces not only act independently of mind and will, but often in spite of them. And all that mind can do is to acquaint itself with nature's laws, control them when it can, and yield to them when it must. Again: The Spiritualists disclaim supernaturalism. But when they say "the spirit of man is that refined essence of intelligence which had its birth in the spirit of God," it seems harder to understand the definition than the thing defined. When a drop of the great spirit becomes the spirit of a man, "it can go out of him and back at will during life. And when it goes out to stay, he's dead." And though it be a material organism, it is "susceptible of infinit expansion"—which is "spreading it out pretty thin." If it be material, why strive to keep up a distinction betwixt "mind and matter," "soul and body?" Why say it has a material body? Is it because a real material spirit would not answer your purpose, as it would be subject to change and all the laws of matter, and could not by any possibility retain its identity or selfhood—could not be immortal? Is that it? If not, then why prate about "mind and matter, soul and body, the spirit of God, the deific mind," etc.? Why not say plainly that a living body is a living soul, and that all mind entities, or soul entities, without a living sentient physical organization, are phantoms, myths? Just how this soul or mind-matter, which goes out of every living creature at death, may liv on forever without getting mixed, decomposed, or lost, like the drop in the ocean, or how it "tears itself away," doth not appear. Yet it must be done, or immortality is a failure. We shall not attempt to solve it, but, laying aside all vagaries, will try and come right down to our work, and in the light of science see if we can tell what mind is. Now, it is said we hav five senses, whereas we really hav but one, and that one is the sense of feeling. And it is by cultivating this sense, and "ringing the changes on it," that all the phenomena of sense, called perception, consciousness, thought, mind, soul, or spirit, are made manifest. And wherever there is a nerve that feels, there is a corresponding thought or consciousness. And there appears to be no thought or consciousness anywhere else. We know of nothing which possesses sensation, save the living nervous organism; while sensation is to every living creature the "all in all," the ego, the I.

Now, to feel is to perceive; to perceive is to be conscious; to be conscious is to think, and to think is to possess mind; thinking is mentality; what, then, is thought? Mind? Don't you see that sensation, perception, consciousness, thought, and mind are one and inseparable? different names for the same thing, or different phases of the same thing? Take away either and see how much you will hav left; and when you see that nothing is left, you will perceive that mind is no more a material entity than is sensation, and that every emotion, impression, perception, or sentient condition of the nervous system, is not "mind-matter," but mind—the synonym of sensation, consciousness, or thought. The nervous system is a material organism, but its impressions, motions, or perceptions are not; and as thought is but an impression, mode, or condition of consciousness, it is not matter, but a condition of matter; while if thought is mentality, and is also sensation, then to say we think with our mind is to say we think with our thought or consciousness; whereas we think with the same agency with which we feel; and if thought is material, so also is feeling; all the sensations we feel, or all the thoughts we hav, and all we are mentally or consciously, all hav a being here as a grand whole or unit; and to take away one is to take away all. All come to us by virtue of a living, sentient, material organism, and all are conditions, modes of action, of that organism. And when we come to understand the nervous system better we will see fewer spirits, and look more within ourselvs for the explanation of "spiritual phenomena;" and, instead of "the spiritual idea being the only key to unlock the whole mental fabric," the mental fabric will be the revelator of the "spiritual idea;" while the more attenuated the "mind-matter," the more difficult will it seem to keep the individual minds from mixing, and we will see too that immaterial mind entities are the only "spirits" that are immortal. Conscious life is not a "primordial element of nature," nor an entity; but it is a condition, or mode of action, and, like a flame, must constantly be supported or go out. We do not even think to-day with the thoughts of yesterday; but our thoughts come and go like the light of the sun; we can duplicate or repeat them, but we hav no mental storehouse in which we can store up thoughts for future use as we do corn in a crib. The brain is prone to repeat its action; and its ability to do so, so as to reproduce a former thought, is all there is of memory; and when we cannot so repeat we say we hav forgotten. Now, if all that is is matter, let us say so and stick to it; and if it is matter or nothing, hav we not been trying to make something out of that nothing long enough? Many hav made a good living out of it; now "let them look to their laurels." The gases or ghosts that arise from the bodies of the dead are material, but dumb, and we don't care to live in close proximity to them; they are to be shunned as evil spirits; but, take all the mind-matter of the universe, and put with it all the matter you can get out of thought, and then you can put it all in your eye, the only place where that kind of matter exists.

F. N. Albright.

Somerset, N. Y., May, 31, 283.

No Sunday Trains.

From the Daily Journal of June 5th.

"Sunday trains on the Housatonic Railroad were stopped to-day by the Massachusetts authorities. The clergymen of Berkshire county, Massachusetts, presented a petition against the running of trains on Sunday, but the railroad company disregarded them."

The above dispatch shows with what tenacity the paid peddlers of idiotic inspiration see faults in the action of the creature which the creator constantly practices. Had the laws of nature been submitted to these narrow-minded zealots, gentle zephyrs would hav been hushed, murmuring brooks stilled, growing vegetation checked, in fact, everything from the great systems of worlds above us to the life movement of the smallest insect, whose existence begins and ends in the single breath it draws, would hav had to assume a condition of inertia from Saturday night until Monday morning. The advance of intelligence against the restraints of intolerant bigotry has had a continuous fight for centuries, and it is by no means ended. The cowled monk has given way to the sleek, well-fed priest and parson, but it is the same sanctimonious block before the wheels of progress that sacrificed a Galileo or issued a bull against the comet.

The large stone hand of an idol in a Chinese temple recently fell off, severely injuring a worshiper beneath. "Satan finds some mischief still for idol hands to do."—Burlington Free Press.

"Our Father in Heaven."

[The following poem, which originally appeared in The Truth Seeker, has been extensivly copied recently in the Freethought papers. We republish it by request.—Ed. T. S.]

1 Kings, xviii, 27.

"O God, have mercy!" a mother cried,
As she humbly knelt at the cradle side.
"O God, have mercy and hear my prayer,
And take my babe in thy tender care.
The Angel of Death is in the room,
And is calling loud for my babe to come.
Thou, thou alone, hast power to save;
O God, have mercy! 'tis all I crave."

. . . . . .

A tiny grave, 'neath a willow's shade,
Telleth the answer the Merciful made.

"O Father in Heaven, protect my boy
From the wiles of Folly, from Sin's decoy;
From the snares of Temptation in Life's dark sea.
Guard him and keep him pure for thee."
So a mother prayed as her darling one
Went forth to battle the world alone—
Alone, save the blessing his mother gave,
And that prayer to God to keep and save.

. . . . . .

A murderer's gibbet, high in air,
Answered the trusting mother's prayer.

A father and mother knelt them down
Together, before the Eternal One,
And with trusting hearts implored that Heaven
Would guard the flower its grace had given—
Would keep their blossoming daughter pure,
And guard her aye from the Tempter's lure;
And from every stain would keep her free
As the lilies that bloom in eternity.

. . . . . .

A self-slain lost one, seduced, betrayed,
Was the only answer Heaven made.

A beautiful maiden knelt to pray
For the life of a loved one far away—
Away in the fields where life and death
Hang poised in the scales that tip with a breath:
"O Father of Mercies, protect the heart
Of him I love from the foeman's dart.
When the death-bolts rain on the charging field,
Be thou his strength and guide and shield!"

. . . . . .

A mangled corpse and a soldier's grave
Were the answer the Father of Mercies gave.

The night was dark on the ocean's breast,
And the waves rolled high in wild unrest,
Where a stately bark was dashing on
Toward a breaker's crest, with the rudder gone.
Around the capstan, in wild despair,
The crew had gathered, and joined in prayer
To Him who only had power to save
To deliver them from a watery grave.

. . . . . .

A crash and a gulping wave alone
Were the answers of the Omnipotent One.

At noon of night, in the city's heart,
When slumber reigned o'er home and mart,
The fire-fiend burst from his secret place,
And wrapped all things in his fierce embrace.
Oh, then how many a frenzied prayer
To heaven for safety rent the air—
For homes! for lives! for loves—and then
The flames that crisped them sneered, "Amen."

. . . . . .

Homes, friends, and loved ones, crisped and charred,
Told how Heaven the prayer had heard.

From the earliest dawn of Nature's birth,
Since sorrow and sin first darkened the earth;
From sun to sun, from pole to pole,
Where'er the waves of Humanity roll,
The breezy robe this planet wears
Has quivered and echoed with countless prayers.
Each hour a million knees are bent,
A million prayers to Heaven are sent;
There's not a summer beam but sees
Some humble suppliant on his knees;
There's not a breeze that murmurs by
But wafts some faithful prayer on high;
There's not a woe afflicts our race
But some one bears to the Throne of Grace;
And for every temptation our souls may meet
We ask for grace at the Mercy Seat.

. . . . . .

The beams smile on, and Heaven serene
Still bends, as though no prayers had been,
And the breezes moan, as still they wave.
"When man is powerless, Heaven cannot save."
—Charles Stephenson.

In the North American Review for July, President Julius H. Seelye writes of "Dynamite as a Factor in Civilization," taking of the subject the reassuring view that dynamitism, being merely a sympton of present discontent, is necessarily a transient social phenomenon, which will quickly disappear as the institutions of government are brought more into harmony with the interests and aspirations of the masses of the people. In "The Last Days of the Rebellion" Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan recounts the operations of the cavalry divisions under his command during the week preceding the surrender of Lee, and offers a highly important contribution to the history of the late war. William S. Holman, M. C., makes a striking exhibit of "The Increase of Public Expenditures," and insists upon the necessity for unceasing vigilance on the part of the people, lest the burdens of governmental administration become intolerable. "Democracy and Moral Progress," by O. B. Frothingham, is a philosophic forecast of the probable outcome of "government by the people themselvs." Z. R. Brockway, superintendent of the Reformatory at Elmira, N. Y., points out some "Needed Reforms in Prison Management;" Thomas Sergent Perry writes of "Science and the Imagination;" Geo. E. Waring, Jr., of "Sanitary Drainage;" Elbridge T. Gerry of "Cruelty to Children;" and finally there is a Symposium on "Church Attendance"—the question whether the churches are growing to be less of a power for good now than in former times—the symposiasts being "A Non-Church-Goer," Rev. Dr. Wm. Hayes Ward, Rev. Dr. James M. Pullman, and Rev. Dr. J. H. Rylance.

Notes.

It diminishes Beecher's power when he utters truth.—Christian Advocate.

Is that the value the Methodist church places upon truth, "Dr." Buckley?

A Boston religious professor is sedulously searching for the Garden of Eden, and thinks it will be found somewhere in the Arctic circle. We never gamble for money, but in this case feel willing to wager a bushel of apples—and a snake or two—that he doesn't find it.

The editor of a religious paper is shocked at the idea expressed by the Rev. Mr. Duryea, that Pelagianism is the "natural consequent" of Arminianism. This theory is certainly atrocious and fully as startling as would be a declaration that, pushed to its ultimate analysis, tweedle-dum might sometime come to mean the same as tweedle-dee.

It turns out that the super-religious people of Berkshire, Mass., who stopped the passenger trains from running Sunday allowed the milk trains to continue, as they did not want to waste a few dollars' worth of milk. When it comes to a contest between piety and the pocket-book, the latter wins nine times out of ten. The Christian religion makes people act very queerly.

During the festivities incident to the coronation of the czar of Dussia, the mayor of Moscow took occasion to express the hope that the people of Russia would soon enjoy the benefits of a constitutional government. For this utterance he was doomed by the czar to a permanent exile. The subjects of the czar should look forward with cheerfulness and hope to the time when that despot shall go the way of his father with the aid of dynamite. Nihilism, anarchy, revolution, anything, is preferable to tyranny like this.

The committee of Plymouth church in Scranton, Pa., investigating the recent conduct of the Rev. John Hudson, hav been at work for some time, and hav reached a conclusion which for the present they decline to make public. Hudson's license to preach will be revoked. The investigation brought to light that the young preacher was guilty of immoral conduct, as first charged. It is always gratifying to see ministers leaving the pulpit, but it would be more pleasing if they could manage to get out head first, instead of the other way as in this case.

The Mormons probably take the palm for making fools of themselvs. Seven men and women at Rutherford, N. C., having been converted by some missionaries, were baptized in the faith of Brigham Young on the 15th inst. The rite was very appropriately performed after dark. The converts took off their clothes in a small building adjacent to Duncan's Creek, and, in a naked condition, proceeded, in company with the missionaries, to the water. Many persons were present and looked on. After the ceremony a committee of citizens waited upon the Mormons, and gave them notice to quit the country at once, on pain of summary punishment. Several of the women in the party, it is said, are quite pretty, and hav borne good characters. The Mormons gave assurance that they would leave the next day for Utah.

The beauty of Mrs. Langtry, the Jersey Lily, is not worthy of remark when we consider the personal attractions of the ancient Sarah, the wife of Abraham. In the Bereschith Rabbath, according to an exchange, we are informed that when Abraham came to Egypt he shut up Sarah in a box; but at the custom-house the officers asked him to pay duty on his luggage. "What is it, wares?" asked they. "I will pay duty on them," answered Abraham. "Is it gold?" "Also on gold," said he. "Is it pearls, then?" "I will pay duty also on pearls," answered Abraham. "This will never do," said the officers. "Open thy trunk!" As Abraham opened it, the whole land of Egypt was lighted up with Sarah's brilliancy! It is no wonder that King Abimelech, the Freddy Gebhard of his day, went wrong when he saw her! Such beauty as hers must hav been rare even in those times.

A Catholic priest is suing the estate of Peter O'Hara for $20,000 in the Brooklyn courts. It is claimed that the widow O'Hara left $16,000 to a priest named Maguire to hav masses said for the repose of her husband's soul. Maguire died, and Priest Kenney said the masses. He charges more per mass than Maguire did, so that the $16,000 has been swelled to $20,000; and it is he who has brought suit. If it costs this large sum of money to save the soul of a Catholic, how many must, for the lack of it, go to hell and be damned? We trust that Mr. Kenney will not recover the amount sued for. He knows as well as we do that he has not given the value of it, even if it is believed that he has said the masses he claims to hav said, which is doubtful. Twenty thousand dollars! The difference between the orthodox heaven and hell as places of residence does not represent half that sum!

After long and laborious thinking on the subject, the Advocate, Methodist, concludes that "an excess of animal spirits in youth is not a portent of evil." Probably the editor has read to surfeit the Sunday-school books in which all the good little boys hav prematurely put on wings, and has arrived at the conclusion that it is preferable to hav animal spirits and no wings to dying for lack of energy and be ornamented after the fashion of angels. A "change of heart" used to mean to the Methodists the elongation of the face, a solemn mien, mouth puckered and corners drawn down, and a sanctimonious, I-hav-thrown-myself-on-Jesus expression. A smile was a misdemeanor, a laugh a crime, and the perpetration of a joke a capital offense. Religion meant the utter abnegation of selfhood, the abject renunciation of thought. To the pious, men were nothing, God everything. Abasement was their natural state. We are glad to see that even the Methodists can let a man laugh without incurring eternal damnation—in their minds. It is a sign of progress all the more gratifying because unexpected.

"The most dangerous enemies of the church," says the Christian World, "are not Infidels and 'worldlings,' but hypocritical Christians. One backslidden minister strikes a more thrilling blow at the church than a dozen of Ingersoll's most eloquent lectures." Whom does the Christian World mean when it talks of hypocrits? Certainly the charge cannot be brought against those eminently pious Christians now reposing in the various state prisons, for they one and all remain as good Christians as they were before they were detected and punished. They believe the apple story, the overshadowing story, the resurrection myth, and these three constitute the chief glories of Christianity. The Christian World's language does not apply to these, and it must mean such men as Newton. But did the Christian World ever stop to consider that Ingersoll's lectures may hav been the cause of Newton's Radicalism? We agree with the Christian World that "it is an ominous sign that so many ministers are departing from the old faith," but it is ominous only to the church. The truth is bound to be a gainer every time a minister plucks up courage to renounce the whole or part of his creed. But it is the outspoken Infidels who call the ministers' attention to the fact that the world has swept by them, and if they want to keep up with the procession they must dismount from their old hobbies and jump aboard the cars.

In the last decade, as is shown by the census returns, the population of the United States increased thirty-one per cent. The Congregationalist church, during that period, increased only twenty-three per cent—at least, so we are informed by the Rev. Charles F. Thwing. But both these percentages must not by any means be reckoned on the same number. The percentage of gain in population is thirty-one per cent of over 38,000,000, amounting to about 12,000,000. The twenty-three per cent which the Congregationalist church gained was figured from a much smaller number. The Encyclopedia Brittanica givs the sittings in that church, 1870, as 1,117,212. A "sitting" is the room occupied by one person. Therefore the Congregational churches in 1870 could accommodate 1,117,212 persons. It would be, we think, a fair estimate to say that churches generally can seat twice as many persons as they hav members. Hence we may reckon the membership of the Congregationalist church in 1870 to hav been 553,540. Twenty-three per cent of this number is, approximately, 127,280, which figures represent the number who hav joined this branch of the Protestant church within ten years. Thus we hav 127,280 persons who hav gone into this church, and 10,730,000 who hav stayed out of it. The mission of the Congregationalist denomination is to save the world by absorbing all the inhabitants of the earth. Does it feel encouraged by these statistics? And if only about one in every ninety persons is absorbed, how long a time does it expect must elapse before its object will hav been accomplished and all mankind are effectually saved?

The Sunday Closing law is bringing about its legitimate results. Patrick Reagan kept a saloon at 404 Madison street, in this city. On the evening of Sunday, the 10th, Policeman John W. Smith, dressed in citizen's clothes, entered the saloon, and saw the wife of Reagan draw three glasses of beer from a keg, and three men who were playing cards in the room drank the beer. Smith put his finger under the tap of the keg, tasted the liquid, pronounced it to be beer, and informed Reagan that he was under arrest. Reagan objected, and Smith shot him to death. Smith was arrested, and will be tried. The coroner's jury decided that the shooting was unjustifiable. In his charge to the jury the coroner said:

"When a man clothes himself in attire which disguises his position, and then watches to detect a trivial offense like that imputed to the deceased, his conduct cannot be too harshly viewed. Such demeanor is cowardly, and those guilty of it are likely recklessly to use dangerous weapons. The police force of this city are a class of men of brave nature and chivalric bearing, and ought not to be disgraced by being put to ignominious duty."

To these just strictures the jury added:

"We also desire and wish to express our condemnation of the mode and spy system practiced by the police in detecting violations of the Excise or Sunday law, and if the law warrants the same, it should be speedily changed."

This Excise law is one of the Comstock variety that countenances any sort of meanness. Nothing is more despicable than the spy system of detecting violations of law. Here in this case a human life has been sacrificed to the bigotry of fanatics. The selling of a glass of beer on Sunday or any other day is not a crime, and cannot be made such by all the statute laws ever passed, and this fact will hav to be recognized before liberty can be considered safe. Dr. Dio Lewis was right when he called it a vice, but the act of selling liquor is no more a criminal one than that of selling spruce gum. The Sunday law is a curse and a disgrace, and should be repealed. Prohibitionists may hav a worthy object in view, but they lose sight of liberty when they endeavor to enforce temperance. When a man may be shot down in his own house for drawing a glass of beer on Sunday, it is time to ask where we are drifting to—whether toward the enjoyment of freedom or away from it.

The New York Mail and Express is a paper of no earthly human interest, and we rarely expend two cents for its purchase, so we missed the following choice morsel till it had gone out through the country press and was sent in by a friend. We reprint it simply that the editor may be enlightened:

"The state convention of Freethinkers, which creates a bad odor in some locality once a year, is to honor Rochester with its presence this summer. Rochester is famous for the excellence and abundance of its beer. In order, if possible, to create a sensation, the association has issued a challenge to the 'orthodox church of the United States, or either branch of it,' 'to send one of their representativ men as a missionary, to make an address defending or sustaining the claims of the Christian religion or against "Infidelity," or both, as he may choose.' The association guarantees to return the missionary alive and in good physical condition. The secretary's name who issues this proclamation is Green. He evidently supposes that the orthodox church in the United States is composed of two branches. If not, why his use of the word 'either?' He also seems to suppose that it—the church—will be foolish enough to send their—the church's—representativs to a convention whose title to notoriety in the past has been mainly in its indecency, and in the fact that it had one Bennett, for a parson—a person with whom Mr. Anthony Comstock and his society waged a fierce and, we believe, a successful war. The Freethinkers would do much better to engage a schoolmaster to giv them—or their secretary, at least—some practical instruction in the art of writing the English language correctly."

In the first place the convention never emits a bad odor. Unlike the church camp-meetings, it does not produce an increase in the infant population nor a decrease in the number of chickens on the farms about. Its members do not wrangle so fiercely as the ministers at the late Baptist convention. Its challenge to the clergy is in good faith and dead earnest, and is to either the Protestant branch of the orthodox church or to the Catholic branch of the orthodox church. Very few well informed people will contend with much vigor that these two branches do not exist in this country. We admit that it would be better for the country if they did not exist, but they do, very much to the curtailment of our liberties. The Association will guarantee the physical well-being of the missionary, but mentally he will be a wreck. At one of the previous conventions a Catholic priest ventured to the platform, and while he acknowledged the courtesy of his treatment, he afterward came to the conclusion that it would hav been as well for his church if he had kept still. But when the Mail and Express charges the convention with indecency it descends to a low slander unworthy of any but a professional religious paper. It was generally known that the Mail and Express was weak, not to say brainless, but it has had credit for being honorable in its feeble way. This charge dissipates the illusion. Mr. Bennett spoke some in former years before the convention, but never as a parson, for parsons usually talk about something of which they are entirely ignorant, which Mr. Bennett never did. And it is generally believed by those best acquainted with the facts that Comstock's success was of a kind that left him little consolation. A few more successes like it would hav permanently retired Anthony Comstock from his business of persecuting Infidels. Secretary Green's grammar, as quoted, is correct and cannot be shown to be otherwise. We hav to say the opposit, however, of that of the Mail and Express. A writer who uses the word "church" in both the singular number and the plural in one sentence is not qualified to criticise the English of another. The word may be properly used as a collectiv noun in either number, but it is a direct violation of one of the first rules of grammar to use it in both numbers in the same sentence. We do not belong to that class of verbalists who are sticklers for anything more than an adherence to the fundamental principles of composition, but we should consider ourselvs guilty of a barbarism if we were to let a thing of that kind go into print. If the editor of the Mail and Express wishes to teach Brother Green how to write English, he is, of course, at liberty to do so for what he can make out of it; we giv him this lesson free.

We hav Charles Watts's paper, the Secular Review, on sale. Yearly subscriptions also received. Price, single number, 7 cents; by the year, $2.75.

Lectures and Meetings.

M. E. Rose, of East Rodman, N. Y., is making arrangements to get up a two or three days Freethinkers' meeting in that place the last of July. So soon as the arrangements are perfected they will be announced in The Truth Seeker and other Liberal papers.

The Waterloo yearly meeting was well attended this year. Five or six hundred people were present on Sunday. The speakers were J. H. Burnham, J. H. Harter, Cornelia Gardner, Myron W. Jenkins, and H. L. Green. This was the thirty-second annual meeting.

W. S. Bell's line of travel eastward will take him through Burlington, Iowa, Peoria, Ill., Indianapolis, Ind., Cleveland, Ohio, and Buffalo, New York. He hopes to make arrangements with the Liberals to deliver Sunday lectures in each of these places. His address up to July 4th will be care of Mrs. Cornelia Boecklin, Burlington, Iowa.

Obituary.

Died, on Thursday, June 15th, of apoplexy, Hiram Hollenbush, of Reading, Pa.

Mr. Hollenbush was born on December 7, 1822, and was consequently in the sixty-second year of his age. He was a cabinet-maker by trade, but had not worked at the business for many years. He had resided in Reading during the last quarter of a century, devoting his time to the study of scientific subjects, and earning his livelihood by his profession as a chemist. Besides his devotion to chemical studies, he was a geologist and mineralogist, and was conversant with the sciences of astronomy and botany. He also paid considerable attention to microscopical investigations, and had a large collection of various ores, minerals, and specimens of the vegetable and animal kingdom. Mr. Hollenbush was a mechanical genius, and was the constructor of a large telescope of his own invention, making every portion, and even grinding the glass for it himself. The deceased leaves a wife, but no children. In early life he was a member of a church, but in later years he was a Freethinker. He expressed a desire that no clergyman should officiate at his funeral, and in deference to his wishes no religious services were held at the obsequies. The deceased was a modest and unassuming man, of a temperate disposition and exemplary habits.

Translation.

The Tomb of Fanaticism.

[An examination of Lord Bolingbroke's doctrines. Written by Voltaire in 1767 and translated from the French by Avery Meriwether.]

CHAPTER XXXVI.

A SUMMARY OF PAPAL USURPATIONS.*

The multitude of barbarians had reduced Europe to a deplorable state indeed; and amid all this darkness only the times of Theodoric and Charlemagne were noted for a few good laws. Still Charlemagne, who was one-half French and one-half German, performed barbaric acts, such as no sovereign of to-day would dare to soil his reputation with. Only the dull writers belonging to the Romish sects ventured to praise a prince who slew one-half of the Saxons in order to convert the other half.

The bishops of Rome, during the decadence of Charlemagne's family, began to assume a sovereign's power, resembling that of the califs. They wished to unite the throne and altar. The ignorance and dissensions of the masses of people favored, for a short time, this movement. The bishop of Rome, Gregory VII., was the one who carried out these designs with the most insolence. Happily for us, William of Normandy, who had usurped our throne and had covered our country, more than himself, with glory, repressed the insolence of Gregory VII., and prevented us for some time from paying St. Peter's pence, which at first we had given as alms, and which finally the bishops of Rome had exacted as tribute.

All our kings did not have the same firmness, and when the popes, who had so little power in their limited territory, became masters of Europe by means of the Crusades and through the monastic orders, when they had deposed so many emperors and kings, after they had converted religion into a terrible instrument which could overreach any sovereign, our island beheld that worthless King John declare on bended knees obedience to the pope and swear fidelity at the feet of the legate Pandolfe, and obligate himself and his successors to pay to the bishops of Rome an annual tribute of one thousand marks,† which almost equaled the entire revenue of the crown. As one of my ancestors had the misfortune to sign that treaty—the most infamous of treaties—I feel compelled to speak of it with more regret than any other person. This is the amende honorable I owe to the dignity of a disparaged human nature.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

THE INCREDIBLE EXCESSES OF CHRISTIAN PERSECUTIONS.

It cannot be doubted that the new dogmas invented every day, contributed much to strengthen the papal usurpations. The hocus pocus,‡ or transubstantiation, the very name of which is ridiculous, little by little became established, although it had been unknown during the first centuries of Christianity. We can imagine with what veneration a priest or a monk was looked upon, who made a god by four words, not only a single god, but as many gods as he wished. With what respect bordering upon adoration should we regard that one who made himself master of all god-manufacturers? He was the sovereign of the priests, he was the king, he was god himself. But at Rome, they still say, when the pope officiates: "The venerable one carries the host."

But in the midst of that mire, into which the human race in Europe was plunged, there arises to my recollection the men who protested against the new things; they knew very well that, during the first centuries of the church, no one ever pretended to change bread into God at the last supper; that the communion performed by Jesus was with a tender piece of lamb baked with lettuce; that this did not resemble the communion of the mass; that the first Christians looked upon these forms with horror, and that the same were prescribed by the famous council at Frankfort under Charlemagne.

Many other points of belief were equally as revolting. Some men dared to doubt that the pope, as much of a god as he was, had the right to depose a king for having married his god-mother or his relation to the seventh degree. They secretly reject some of the points of the scheme of Christian creation, and admit others, none the less absurd, like unto those animals some people think are formed from the slime of the Nile, which have life engrafted in one portion of their bodies while another part is still being engendered from the mud.

But when those who thus differed with the great majority wished to speak, how were they treated? In the East the Manicheans were persecuted for six centuries before they were exterminated. Under the regency of the Empress Theodora, a devotee and a barbarian,* more than a hundred thousand people were killed.

The western people, understanding this in a confused manner, were accustomed to call all those people Manicheans who denied any of the dogmas of the Roman church, and treated such in the same barbarous manner. Thus Robert of France burnt out the eyes of the confessor of his wife. Many other priests suffered as well.

When the Vaudois and the Albigenses appeared they were called Manicheans, in order to render them all the more odious.

Who does not know of the frightful cruelty exercised in the southern provinces of France, upon those unfortunate people whose only crime was denying that anyone could create a God by words?

And, finally, when the disciples of Wickliff, of John Huss, of Luther and Zuinglius, wished to shake off the papal yoke, it was known that all Europe was divided into two classes, the executioners and their victims. The early reformers made possible the Christians of the fourth and fifth centuries; after having been persecuted, they in turn became the persecutors. The number of civil wars which have been occasioned by Christianity amounts to more than a hundred. Great Britain, my country,† has been sacked; the massacres in Ireland are equal to the massacre of St. Bartholomew, for I am not assured that more horrible crimes have not been committed, or that more blood has been shed in Ireland than in France. The wife of Sir Henry Spotswood,‡ and sister of my great-grandfather, together with two sons, was slain, so in this "important examination" I have ever born in mind that I avenged myself as well as the human race.

What shall I say of the Inquisition which still exists? The sacrifices of human blood, for which we hav reproached the people of ancient times, were less numerous than the blood-lettings with which the Spaniards and Portuguese have stained their acts of faith.

Is there anyone grown so weak as to compare that sickening record of destruction and carnage to the martyrdom of Saint Potamienne, of Saint Barbe, of Saint Pionius, and of Saint Eustachius? We have weltered in blood, like hungry tigers, for ages, and now we dare to blacken the Trojans and the Antonines with the stain of persecutors!

The feeling comes upon me at times to show the priests the magnitude of all the persecutions to which our ancestors were subjected, but when I do this I am told in a chilling manner that it was a good tree which produced bad fruit. Then I reply: "It is blasphemy to pretend that a tree which has borne such poisonous fruits was planted by the hands of God himself." In truth, there is not a priest who should not cast down his eyes and blush in the presence of an honest man.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

* My Lord Bolingbroke does not speak fully of the tyranny of the popes. Gregory, surnamed the Great, burnt all the Latin authors he could find. There still exists a letter of a bishop of Cagliari in which he says, "I wish we had the force to compel all the pagans in Sardinia to be converted" (1771).

† The legate stamped upon the money before taking it. Our little island was at that time a very servile country. We were, in truth, serfs of the pope. What infamous slavery! Great heavens! we are not yet sufficiently avenged. We have sent our war vessels to Gibraltar, but we have not yet sent them to the Tiber! (1776.)

‡ This is called hocus pocus by a juggling of words. They are two Latin words abridged, or, rather, bungled together, from the Latin mass, hoc est corpus meum (1771).

* Is it possible that this horrible persecution, which anticipated St. Bartholomew, is so little known? Is it true it is lost in a multitude of such. Though Fleury did not omit to mention that occurrence in his forty-eighth book, treating of the year 850, he only speaks of it as a very ordinary affair. Bayle, in his article called "Paulicians," thought sufficiently of it to give it mention. The Paulicians escaped that massacre to join the Mussulmans, and assist in destroying that hateful empire of the East, which knew so well how to persecute but did not know how to fight. But the capstone of all Christian atrocity was declaring that she devil, Theodora, a saint, and celebrating for a long time her fete day in the Greek church (1771).

† Another one of Voltaire's artful modes of diverting the reader's attention from the real author of this work. He speaks of Great Britain, and then adds the words, "my country," in order to lead us to believe that it is Bolingbroke who writes.

‡ Lord Bolingbroke has good reason for comparing the massacres in Ireland to those of St. Bartholomew's day; for my part, I believe that the number of victories in Ireland surpasses the number of those assassinated in France.

It was judicially proven by Henry Shampart, James Shaw, and others that the Catholic confessors had threatened the pains of excommunication to those who did not kill all the Protestants, including their wives, children, and their confessors, even enjoined them not to spare the cattle belonging to the English. This reminds me of those holy people, the Jews, about the time God destroyed Jericho.

There was found in the pockets of Lord Macguire, when he was captured, a bull of Pope Urban VIII., May 25th, 1643, which promised to Irishmen a remission of all their crimes, a release from all their vows except that of chastity.

The Chevalier Clarendon and Chevalier Temple said that from the autumn of 1641 to the summer of 1643 there were one hundred and fifty thousand Protestants assassinated, and that not a child or woman was spared. An Irishman named Brooke, who zealously defended his country, pretended that there were not more than forty thousand slain. Let us take the average and we will have eighty-five thousand victims in one and twenty months (1771).

THE Philadelphia papers pay over $600 for telegraphing one of Spurgeon's sermons each week. It doesn't speak flatteringly of the church-going habits of Philadelphians when a sermon is the most sensational news that can be procured for their delectation. —Boston Transcript.

The Difficulties and Demerits of Spiritualism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Like many readers and correspondents of the THE TRUTH SEEKER and perhaps unlike as many, I am a total disbeliever in Spiritualism, or a "future life" of any description. I hav read many—perhaps all—of the articles on this subject that hav appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER since early last November, and although ingenuity, care, and, I regret to say, ill-nature seem to hav been unsparingly used, I do not think that the simple arguments of Mr. T. Winter hav been answered.

The friends of Spiritualism must remember that there is at the outset of the discussion at least one disadvantage under which they labor that, of itself, strongly tends to unfavorably impress those who are as yet undecided in regard to whether Spiritualism is true or false. I refer to the inability or indisposition of alleged spirits to manifest themselvs publicly, in the light of day, and to any but the believers in their existence; as Thomas Paine said, "a thing which everybody is required to believe requires that the proof and evidence of it should be equal to all, and universal." This peculiarity of the spirits has always been suggestiv to my mind of the dogmatic assertion of many Christians who tell me that God will speak to me through my heart, but that I must believe in him first. What I say to the Christian, I say to the Spiritualist: "No; I want the manifestation first; if I am foolish enough to believe before I hav the evidence, I am foolish enough to believe without evidence, and my opinion or belief in either case would be worthless, because it would be the opinion of a fool." Furthermore, as there hav been times in my (earlier) life when I really did think I felt a god working in my mind and influencing my conduct, and now I know that I was mistaken—carried away by my religious enthusiasm—in the same way I think that Spiritualists are in very much the same condition; that they are, as a class, highly enthusiastic is proved by the too frequent offensiv, even vindictiv, character of their defenses of their belief. If it be asserted that occasionally a person is converted to a belief in Spiritualism, who had theretofore been unprejudiced in favor of the belief or even prejudiced against it, I liken him to the occasional Freethinker who, strangely enough, is converted to a belief in the Christian religion; so that even if I had all the evidence that intelligent Spiritualist claim exists, I could still disbelieve in a future life, and in my jndgment for good reasons.

Probably the best argument against the possibility of a future existence is that of D'Holbach, who, in one of the most admirable anti-religious works ever written, says in substance: "Everything proves to us that we feel, think, acquire ideas, enjoy and suffer, only by means of the senses, or material organs of the body. Admitting even the existence of the soul, we cannot help acknowledging that it depends entirely upon the body, and undergoes, with it, all its vicissitudes; and yet it is imagined that this soul can act and feel without the assistance of the body; that this soul, freed from the body and disengaged from its senses, can liv, enjoy, suffer, experience happiness, or feel excruciating torments. The human body after death is a mass incapable of producing those motions of which the assemblage constituted life; we see, to a demonstration, that it has no longer circulation, respiration, digestion, or speech; nothing is more natural or simple than to believe that the dead man no longer livs; nothing is more extravagant than to believe that the dead man is still alive. Is it more ridiculous to suppose that men will eat after death (or even that they must eat) than to believe that they will experience pain or pleasure after the organs, through which alone they are capable of receiving any impressions whatever, are dissolved and pass away in other forms? To say this is to say that men will see without eyes, hear without ears, taste without palates, smell without noses, and feel without nerves."

As D. D. Lake says, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 9th, jugglers exist who can and do perform as great wonders as spirits are said to perform; the simple trick of (apparently) taking, at one time, from a hat many more things than the hat could possibly contain, at one time, is one of them; and when we know to a certainty that many persons engaged in the business of causing spiritual manifestations (so called) are unscrupulous and dishonest, and do not know (for the reason that we cannot see into his mind) that a single one of them is not dishonest, why should we trust any of them?

Apart from the question as to the truth of Spiritualistic doctrins, I am of the opinion that a sincere belief in Spiritualism has a decided tendency to prevent men from taking the interest in the affairs of this life that it is wise and right that they should take; and there is no doubt but that it encourages the unscrupulous to take advantage of one of the holier elements of our nature—I refer to the desire to associate with those that we hav loved and lost.

I do not say, and I do not believe, that a belief in Spiritualism is as idiotic, or as disastrous, or as debasing and depraving as a belief in Christianity; certai nly I hav never heard of Spiritualists going to the awful extreme of murder, robbery, and other crimes to which Christianity has so frequently driven its dupes. But I do believe that when it ceases to be believed in the world will be the better and happier for it. Why should we feel sad at the knowledge that we are never to exist again, any more than at the knowledge that we hav never existed until now? We might (although personally I doubt it) hav enjoyed much more than we would hav suffered if we had existed a few millions of years in the past; shall we therefore devote our energies to regretting that we hav not existed so, and ignore the beautiful present? Of course not; and yet if we did we would be as philosophical as to do the same because we cannot liv forever. If existence is a benefit, whatever of it we hav is so much clear advantage; if existence is not a benefit, a longer or future life is not to be desired. In either case, the Materialist, as a Materialist, has no cause for complaint.

In my judgment, every man and brute should hav enough happiness in this world to compensate him for the afflictions and sufferings of life, and far more. In order for a man to get this, a life of moral rectitude (which Christianity does not affect, except to prevent it), wherein each one strives primarily to refrain from injury; and, secondarily, to affirmativly benefit every sentient being (except a god, if one could exist, for he would be of no consequence to us), should be sufficient. In a majority of cases, perhaps a vast majority, experience proves it to be sufficient. But we know that the battle for the right is not always successful; that a virtuous and upright life does not always produce entire happiness, although, of course, it always is its own reward. This fact is the saddest conclusion to which man has ever been forced; this fact is what makes pessimists and misanthropes of men. Nevertheless, in nearly all of these latter cases, there is good reason to believe that an immoral life would increase the sufferings of the individual, and it is certain that it would increase the sufferings of others, for this would result from the very definition of immorality; so that in every case the safest course is to—

> "So liv that when thy summons comes to join
> The innumerable caravan, that moves
> To that mysterious realm where each shall take
> His chamber in the silent halls of death,
> Thou go not like the quarry slave at night
> Scourged to his dungeon; but sustained and soothed
> By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
> Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

I wish to add, although it may not relate strictly to the subject, that I am fully in accord with the spirit of the editorial, "The Discussion About Science," in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 9th. While these scientific discussions are interesting and important, they are not indispensable, and should not be allowed, on any account, to supersede or in any way take the place of our determined, systematic attack on and, without God's help, ultimate victory over the Christian religion. PHILIP G. PEABODY.

New York, June 11, 1883.

David, the Man After God's Own Heart.

David spent his early youth in the simple and healthy occupation of minding sheep. During this time he learned to perform on a harp, and there is no sort of doubt that it was a Jew's-harp. His skill in the use of the sling first brought him into public notice. Not satisfied with the fame that the killing of a giant had brought him, his ambition drove him on to other and bloodier fields.

The friendly relations between our hero and King Saul were suddenly broken off by a small breach of decorum on the part of the latter, and we hav every reason to believe that this breach was never healed. The young shepherd's would-be father-in-law gave David's betrothed to another man, but offered him his next youngest daughter for the very snug sum of two hundred foreskins (1 Sam. xviii). He accepted the offer, sallied forth, and with the assistance of some underlings slew two hundred inoffensiv Philistines, carved off their foreskins, and returned in triumph to claim his bride. From the very perishable nature of the article used in their manufacture, it is reasonable to suppose that these Philistine coins passed as "fiat money." It is enough to say that this romantic episode gave the subject of this sketch a reputation for killing, and this reputation he ever afterward sustained. Just what these Philistines were doing while the killing was going on is a matter of conjecture. They seemed, however, to hav been neighbors and enemies of Israel, and, of course, deserved killing at any time Samson, David & Co. could find leisure for the business.

In the twenty-first chapter of Second Samuel we are assured in the words of David himself that women had been kept from him three whole days. This is a remarkable incident in the life of this holy man, when we consider his great weakness for women and his extraordinary strength in killing their husbands. As being kept from women was the condition upon which a man was qualified to eat shew-bread, it is safe to infer that David never ate this bread but once. The fact of his having lied to the priest while begging for the bread did not in the least affect his appetite.

Being a man of diversified talents, David appeared at one time in the role of lunatic, and amused lookers on by carelessly scribbling on the doors, his spittle in the mean time falling on his head. It is really humiliating to think that the Lord's right-hand man should hav been reduced to the strait of playing off fool.

It was very unfortunate for King David that he should hav been forced into bad company, for we are told that all those who were discontented and in debt resorted to him for—I suppose, to hav their debts canceled. From the character of these men and their mode of life it must hav taxed the ingenuity of their leader to keep down the suspicion that they were an organized band of highwaymen—concealed among rocks and in caves. These marauders, in one of their plundering expeditions, happened to meet an inoffensiv but wealthy old gentleman named Nabal (1 Sam. xxv). From the best information we can gather, this Nabal was a man who stayed at home and looked after his own affairs; but this worthy course of conduct did not save him from the depredations of David. He was called on for an involuntary contribution for the support of brigandage, and very justly refused to respond. This refusal very much offended the king of tramps, and he ordered his followers to put on war paint. To appease the fierce anger of the leader of these brigands, Abigail, the wife of Nabal, went out, laden with the coveted luxuries, to meet David. She was kindly received by his highness, congratulated on her good sense to clandestinly leave her husband and come out to him. She was also assured that had she failed to come to time, there would not hav been left of her family "by the morning light any that ———." This interesting interview ended by David "accepting her person"—as was his usual custom on such occasions. Ten days later David "blessed" the Lord for removing Nabal, sent messengers to commune with the widowed and injured woman, and finally took her to wife. It may not be amiss to state here that this was the first man's wife that David is charged with seducing.

About this time the king further added to his domestic happiness by bringing into the family circle another wife in the person of Ahinoam (2 Sam. iii). After celebrating this, his second marriage, David indulged his thirst for blood by slaying the Amalekites. It may be he was driven to this nefarious work by the force of public opinion, for we learn that just before the slaughter "the people spake of stoning him" (1 Sam. xxx). This diversion ended, King David again found himself in need of another wife; whereupon, he sendeth and taketh by force Michal, Saul's daughter, whom he had bought for the round price of two hundred foreskins. Michal had been carelessly given away to another fellow, but the fact of her being another man's wife was a matter of no concern to David (2 Sam. iii). The next important step of this model king was to "take him more concubines and wives" (1 Sam. v). His thirst for blood was only equaled by his passion for women. His case of disease, as described in the thirty-eighth psalm, leaves the impression that he was very indiscriminate in his selection.

Like most men, David had his ups and downs in life, but these misfortunes were invariably relieved by the strong arm of his Lord, who never forgot the man after his own heart. For these favors David was not ungrateful, for on one occasion he was so overcome with joy that he entertained the Lord by dancing and leaping before him, "uncovered," much to the enjoyment of the maids also (2 Sam. vi). As this was a single-hand set, it is presumed that his highness displayed all the graceful movements in the old-fashioned "back step and shuffle." These naked didos evidently pleased the Lord, but Michal, David's wife, reproved him for what she regarded as indecent conduct. Entirely destitute of self-respect, this debauchee turned in anger to his wife and assured her that he would be even "more vile and base," when the Lord and occasion required. While it is claimed that this performance was strictly for the pleasure of the Lord, it was a very unthoughtful thing on David's part not to hav selected a more retired place, as by so doing he would not hav outraged the feelings of a decent woman. For the timely rebuke given her naughty husband this Michal was rewarded with barrenness, and "had no child unto the day of her death." But further on, in 2 Sam. xxi, 8, we read about "the five sons of Michal, the daughter of Saul." This sounds like a contradiction, but no matter for that; the Bible says so, and we are not to consider this and divers other contradictions contained in the "word," lest our faith be shaken. If we pay the least attention to contradictions we will be wholly unable to understand the following passages: "And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, Go, number Israel and Judah" (Sam. xxv, i). "And Satan stood up against Israel and provoked David to number Israel" (1 Chron. xxi, 1). These prove conclusivly one of two things; either David was tempted at the same time by both the Lord and the devil to do the same thing, or else it proves that the words "Lord" and "Satan" refer to the same person. I am inclined to the former opinion, that both the Lord and the devil had a census taken of the people, because only on this theory can we explain the difference of 270,000 soldiers given in the two reports as appears from the records (2 Sam. xxv; 1 Chron. xxi). David's "heart smote him after that he had numbered the people," and the Lord, to punish David, "smote" seventy thousand innocent people with death. Truly, "the ways of the Lord are past finding out." For the purpose of building an altar to his very accommodating "Lord," David purchased a threshing floor, and, to his credit be it said, he paid for it, but whether the price paid was "fifty shekels of silver," or "six hundred shekels of gold," we are at a loss to determin, as there is Bible authority for believing it was either or both (2 Sam. xxiv; 1 Chron. xxi).

We come now to an act in the life of David that nobody but the Lord has ever been willing to excuse. He had again set his affections on woman! In this case the object of his lust was another man's wife, but our worthy king was not to be thwarted in his purpose. He was now securely established on the throne, and took the liberty to do as his passions dictated. His first step in this fearful tragedy was to make Uriah helplessly drunk, send for and seduce his wife. At this point the old thirst for blood seized upon David, and not content with outraging a woman, humiliating her husband, and destroying the domestic happiness of both, he determined on murder as the shortest way to put down a social scandal. Uriah, so far as we know, was a worthy citizen, good soldier, and faithful servant, but he stood in the way of his master's lust and had to go. The plan and consummation of this damnable crime are too well understood to need any explanation here. Suffice it to say, the fiendish schemes of this monster were carried out to a letter; he took the murdered man's wife and by her begat the licentious Solomon, whom, we are told, "the Lord loved." We are informed that the Lord was highly displeased at this thing, but his servant David being a man after his own heart, he was forced to pass it by. According to "the statutes of the Lord," this crime of David did not deserve the attention that was given to the case of the man who picked up kindling-wood on Sunday.

Among a host of others, there was born unto David a son whom he named Absalom. This boy from early childhood gave promis of following in the footprints of his worthy sire. Upon reaching manhood's estate he adopted the family occupation of man-killer, and diverted himself with killing his father's slaves just to see them die. The only worthy act of this young man's life was the promptness with which he slew Amnon for having outraged his sister. (It should be borne in mind that this Amnon was also a chip off the old stump.) In various ways this haughty Absalom gave the old man a deal of trouble; but the most unkind cut of all was his intimacy with his father's concubines while this belligerent old gentleman was out on the war path. Whereupon David (to punish Absalom, I suppose,) imprisoned these violated concubines for life (2 Sam. xx). It will not, I hope, be accounted any digression from the main subject to add that this incorrigible son of David was suddenly checked in the killing business by an accident that cost him his life. The records show that he attempted to run over a tree.

The dying declarations of the red-handed David were in keeping with his life. His last thoughts were mingled with blood. He breathed out his life with imprecations upon the head of his faithful servant, Joab, and to Solomon he gasped this last injunction, "But his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood" (1 Kings ii).

Think of it, his last breath was stained with blood! How fitting these dying words, how appropriate these deathbed curses, to close the life of a man who had been a terror to friend and foe! We are assured in 1 Kings xi, 4, that the heart of David was perfect with the Lord. If this be true, we should trust that the world will never again be cursed with the presence of such perfection.

By the church David is held up as a bright example. Do you think his example a good one? Could you hope to follow in the footsteps of such a man and be considered respectable? Could you hope to imitate his example and escape the gallows? Rather than believe such a fiend the inspired instrument of God to sing psalms, I should regard him the very impersonation of all that is bad; his avarice extended to the plunder of nations; to his lust there was nothing too sacred to sacrifice; in cold, calculating crime, he stands almost without a rival. F. B. DOYLE.

Bowersville, Ga., May 29, 1883.

WHILE we hav the most profound respect and the very highest real regard for an honest, upright, intelligent and level-headed reverend, we do so despise, scorn and detest hollow-hearted hypocrisy and criminal cant that we will not for one moment hesitate to strip the paltry shreds and patches of false pretense from any dizzy dude who may attempt to masquerade in the stolen garments of ministerial honesty.—Gouverneur Herald.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - JUNE 23, 1883.

Some Ecclesiastical Questions.

RALEIGH, ILL., June 13, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You would confer a favor on a subscriber if you would giv in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER the dates, as near as can be ascertained, of the organizations of a few of the different religious denominations; say Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, etc.

Yours, J. D. FAIR.

The organization of the Baptists is clouded in obscurity. They were first called Anabaptists by their opponents. Zwingle named them Catabaptists. This was in the sixteenth century. The Protestant council of Zurich, which was itself in dread of persecution by the Romish church, passed a decree that any person who should administer anabaptism should be ...wned. The Baptists had to keep their sectarian... the shade on this account for many years. ...terian brethren were too extreme in the ism in ... nd Fox relates that "the registers Their Presby... of certain Dutchmen count- doctrin. In Engla... en were put to death in of London make mention... 35; the other ten ed for Anabaptists, of whom ... our Anabap- sundry places in the realm, anno 15... bare repented and were saved." In 1538 "... tists, three men and one woman, all Duten, fagots at Paul's Cross, and three days after a man and woman of their sect were burnt in Smithfield." During the whole of the sixteenth and the greater part of the seventeenth centuries the Baptists were persecuted to death in England. The last man burnt for heresy in England was Edward Wightman, a Baptist. The execution took place at Litchfield, April 11, 1612.

Methodism, another branch of Christian folly, was started in England in 1729 by Messrs. Wesley and Whitefield. They were called Methodists on account of their regularity at devotion. There are several distinct varieties of Methodists, but their general habits are alike. The preachers are noted for their industry in seducing servant girls and "sisters" of the church. This is probably the reason why the preachers are allowed to stay only three years with one flock, it requiring about that time for the husbands to find out the nature of the animal. A longer acquaintance would lead to trouble. The female members work slippers and things for the minister, and pay a great regard to his welfare. The male members are mostly old men. The deacons are the biggest hypocrits out of jail, and will cheat worse in a horse trade than an ordinary sinner. It is believed that the Methodists' love feasts and camp-meetings bring more souls into the world than their prayers can save, unless the prayer works overtime. For "a bill of particulars," such as Beecher's lawyers demanded, see "Crimes of Preachers," and for further information about the sect ask the Rev. J. M. Buckley, or read the Christian Advocate, a mining journal published around the corner on Broadway.

Presbyterianism has been a more or less activ evil for several hundred years. The bolder Presbyterians claim that Christ founded their church, but as the Catholics make the same claim, and as Christ did not found two churches, the faithful are in doubt. The Waldenses, of whom several thousands were butchered by the Catholics, were Presbyterians, without, however, the addition since built on by Calvin and Knox. Modern Presbyterianism dates from these twin infamies. One of the strictest Presbyterian rites ever performed by Calvin was the burning of Servetus on the 27th of October, 1553. Strict Presbyterianism may be said to date from that time. Talmage is a Presbyterian. He would like to burn Col. Ingersoll since the latter published his book of "Interviews," but will not be able to until the National Reform Association gets an amendment to the Constitution authorizing the carbonizing of heretics.

Among the pleasant things believed by the Presbyterians is that God has appointed the elect unto glory and none but the elect are saved from hell, the rest of mankind having been passed by and ordained to dishonor and wrath for their sin of being what God made them. This is done to the praise of God's glorious justice. The Presbyterians also claim to believe that our first parents were put in a garden by God, where they, being "seduced by the subtlety and temptation of Satan, sinned in eating the forbidden fruit. This their sin God was pleased, according to his wise and holy counsel, to permit, having purposed to order it to his own glory. By this sin they fell from their original righteousness" [original righteousness is good] "and communion with God, and so became dead in sin and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body. They being the root of all mankind, the guilt of this sin was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature conveyed to all their posterity, descending from them by ordinary generation. Every sin, both original and actual, being a transgression of the righteous law of God, and contrary thereunto, doth in its own nature bring guilt upon the sinner, whereby he is bound over to the wrath of God and curse of the law, and so made subject to death, with all miseries spiritual, temporal, and eternal." Unbelievers cannot appreciate the consolation to be found in this belief, but it is undoubtedly great, or such a kind and loving man as John Calvin would never hav promulgated it.

The Unitarians are different from the Presbyterians. They date back to Arius, who lived in the third and fourth centuries. Servetus was a Unitarian. There were quite a number of Unitarians scattered over the continent in the sixteenth century. They did not say much, as, like the Baptists, they stood in considerable bodily danger from their more orthodox brethren. In 1550 Unitarianism spread in England so fast that the churchmen became alarmed and "thought it necessary to suppress its expression by rigid measures." These rigid measures consisted in tying a Unitarian to a st... ke and kindling a fire around his feet. Cold feet were co... sidered unhealthy, and the ...sbyterians and Episcopa... ians and Catholics took ... Unitarians never suffer... d from them. If the Pr... ected and cried out, ... the kind church- care the ... ir tongues, so th... ears of them- Unitarians co... might not b... e shocked by men pulled out the... stake ap- selvs, the servants of God, ...ght of the ...yterians hearing these cries. If the s... Pr...sb... Unita- palled the timid Unitarian, these lovin... the ... and Episcopalians applied a hot iron to ... ...dox- rian's eyes. In fact, there was hardly any ortho... kindness these churchmen did not perform for the Unitarians.

Episcopalianism dates from the reign of Henry the Eighth. Henry was originally a Catholic. The pope thought a great deal of him then. He showed his piety by burning William Tyndal, one of the translators of the Bible. But Henry and the pope finally disagreed and Henry set up a church establishment of his own. By every good Catholic he has since been called Old Harry the Eighth. This was substantially the same as the present Episcopal church of England. He proclaimed himself the head of the church, and proceeded to make it warm for all Protestants who would not recognize him and for the Catholics. To spite Harry the pope sent John Fisher a cardinal's hat. To spite the pope Harry took off John Fisher's head, so he could not wear the hat. The amenities between distinguished theologians hav ever been very touching. To maintain his religious supremacy Henry roasted a great many people alive. The historic fires of Smithfield had an abundance of fuel during the reign of this churchman. Henry had six wives, two of whom he murdered. He was a very pious man.

There are about two hundred other sects scattered through Europe and this country. The Bible is like a fiddle, capable of producing an infinit variety of tunes, according to the skill of the performer. Its limit has not yet been reached.

If desirable, we can resume our history at some future time.

SOME people may regard Mr. Truesdell's book as a big sneer at Spiritualism, but the author's long and laborious term of mediumship would seem to contradict this impression, for if Spiritualistic phenomena do occur he ought to be by this time fully convinced of the fact, and an honest medium would not ridicule the power which convinced him of the reality of immortality. But the friends of Spiritualism will often find themselvs wondering what the purpose of the author in writing it could be, while the enemies of that "science" will laugh and say, "I told you so." At any rate, the book must be regarded as a truthful account of how spirits manifested their presence through Mr. Truesdell, and the question likely to occur to the honest investigator is, Are all the mediums like him?

Hedging.

So long as the discussion of eschatology—the doctrin of the things pertaining to death and the state after death—was confined to Joseph Cook very little attention was paid to it by sensible people. But now the Andover professors are at it—indeed, hav made it an issue in electing one of the professors of the college. It seems that a part of the New England theologians hav been affected by the advance made in theological matters, and the consequence is what they call a "New Theology," which teaches that there is "probation" after death; that even believers are not sinless at the moment of death and must pass through an intermediary state before entering into perfect blessedness; that the wicked, who hav not accepted the gospel in this life, will be granted a period of probation in which they may accept it after death; and that it is not clear about the punishment of the impenitent being unending, since the ultimate fate of individuals is veiled in mystery, as well as the question whether all will attain the blessed goal or not. The "Old Theology" teaches that there is no probation after death; that the righteous at death are freed from all sin and enter immediately into eternal saintship; that the wicked enter at once upon severe and eternal punishment. The "New" school evidently is trying to "hedge," but it seems to us they might as well go back to Catholicism, for according to their own ideas they will go to its purgatory for a brief time when they come to die.

It seems curious that grave and learned men can calmly discuss such subjects without a sense of the ridiculousness of their position stealing over their minds. We would suggest to them that before wasting further time on this matter they definitly settle the following questions:

1. Is there a God to punish man?
2. Has man a soul to punish?
3. Is there a hell in which the soul can burn?
4. Is there a heaven of rewards?

When these questions are settled with definitness and to the satisfaction of the world, it will be time enough to discuss the eschatological subtleties raised ...v the German theolcgians and dragged across the b... by Cook. The scientific world has certainly writ... d three of these questions in the negativ. answers. Andover commencement exercises last At the ...wly installed professor of "system- week, the n... said that "the malady of our atic theology" ...n—more dangerous than Infi- times is Agnosticis... reaching hav thrown a gla- delity. Defects in p... Christian beliefs. A the- mour of vagueness over ... d to be esteemed con- ology which is chiefly concern... n orthodox succes- sistent, to trace the pedigree of a... is certain that sion, is decaying with dry-rot, and is ... fire." Just men will cut it down and cast it into the ... nosticism what the lecturer meant by saying that Ag... is more dangerous than Infidelity it is hard to see. It is like saying Infidelity is more dangerous than Infidelity, for Agnosticism is as complete a denial of Christianity as ever the most eloquent Infidel made. Agnosticism says, I know nothing of your God! and who can say more? The non-existence of that which never did exist does not need to be disproved, and the Agnostic is only an Atheist occupying a more logical position. When the Christians come down to plans and specifications of their deity, as is done in the Bible, it is the easiest thing in the world to show that such a deity is unreasonable and impossible, and that has been done over and over again, until but few defend the Old Testament God. He is such a monstrous absurdity that his existence has been given up or modified in accordance with improved theories, so that his best friends would not know him. With theologians now-a-days God is the unknown quantity. Whatever they do not understand is God. The word hides their ignorance instead of expressing their knowledge. This "glamour of vagueness" is general in the churches. Even Beecher, who talks so much about God, has never clearly defined what he means by the expression, and it would seem reasonable that until a preacher learns the meaning of a word he should cease using it.

With the Christian religion fast breaking to pieces, its foundations one by one being removed from under it; with the question of the day not so much as to what becomes of man's soul as whether he has a soul at all, these Andover professors appear to most people in the light of a dignified body of men solemnly fighting the shadow of a windmill.

Mr. Beecher's Bad Advice.

Mr. Beecher came out again last Sunday with some plain truths which will probably win for him the solid hatred of the preachers who either do not know or do not dare to say what he does. "Christianity," he says, "is not to be tested by creeds, but by conduct, and the reality of the gospel taught by schools and churches is to be judged by its fruits, by its effect. Many churches to-day are guarding the bones of their ancestors and doing almost nothing else. The living institutions of Christianity hav been in the first instance its power and in the second its damnation. I am bound to say that in the history of the world, while religious institutions are valuable and hav done a great deal of good, they hav, perhaps, done more harm than they hav good. There are churches where people get together because they are so good, and they let the rest of the world go to damnation. Unless they can hire some missionary to go and preach to them such churches are of no use. A church needs the poor and the sinful among its members. A church is strong in that it has in it something of everything. I do not disown creeds—particularly my own. (Laughter.) But I criticise them in that they are partial. The power of the creed is relativly small; the power of the spirit of humanity is relativly great. A good life cures a bad creed. This principal of electiv affinity is one of the great social dangers. I look with very great interest at the change going on in Great Britain—at the change that will come when every man in Great Britain has the suffrage. The tendency of the times is toward Infidelity among the laboring men; the first result of intelligence is that they repudiate the churches. I notice that the workingmen from Great Britain are to a great extent Infidel. The laboring classes that think are tending to think themselvs away from the house of God, and are substituting other institutions of their own, and this, if not arrested, will be fatal to them. If they throw away the church, let them at least save the Bible. The New Testament is the cradle of liberty. The hope of the poor and the laboring men is in that gospel which says: 'I was sent to preach to the poor.'" Just why the workingman should "save the Bible," or how the New Testament is the cradle of liberty, Mr. Beecher forgot to say. The Bible is the great upholder of slavery. It teaches servitude in almost every verse from Genesis to Revelation—servitude to masters, submission to rulers, a cringing to God. Christ's teachings were the texts of slavery-sustaining preachers. The working men of Engla.d hav for centuries been crushed by "divinely appointed" kings and robbed by kingly appointed divines, until they are sick at heart and despairing of getting justice. It is the universal teaching of the church that men should be "content in the positions in which God has placed them." It is the teaching of Infidelity that every man should improve his condition. Which of the two is the more likely to better the fate of the working man? It is poor comfort for the laborer to be told to go back and hold on to that which for hundreds of years has kept him miserable.

The Monument Fund.

The amounts received last week are as follows:

Prev'sly acknowl'd,	$915 92	Thomas Paine Frank,	2 00
J. N. Newman,	25	H. Willis,	1 00
H. L. Fairchild,	5 00	Mrs. Rettie Sporl,	1 00
Mrs. D. L. Burrows,	75	L. A. Wolfe,	1 00
J. Burrows,	75	S. Graham,	1 00
Charles Naumann,	1 50	S. P. Putnam,	5 00
A. G. Phillips,	5 00
		Total, - -	$940 17

PRAYER meetings in Arkansas are not the humdrum affairs that they are in California, and every effort is put forth to make them attractiv. At a prayer meeting in Gainesville a deacon and an elder, finding the fervor of the congregation waning, drew their six-shooters and popped away at each other. As the Holiness Band at Oroville complains that it is not greeted with proper enthusiasm, it might be well for some Orovillian to turn his six-shooter loose during the service. We would suggest that he point the weapon in the direction of the Holiness Band.—San Francisco Post.

For Mr. Bennett's Monument.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Gladly do I contribute my mite in memory of the noble dead. Whatever else may be done hereafter of ampler usefulness, this certainly must be done now. Over the grave of him who has fought so valiantly for truth should be placed the record of his life, and the symbol of our undying remembrance. The monument is of supremest value, for every time we look upon its gleaming stillness it will stir "thoughts that lie too deep for tears." How wonderful, how beautiful are the dead! They sit in awful sovereignty in the undecaying past. They touch our hearts as the living never can. All that is highest, best, noblest, shines upon their serene foreheads. They are kings, and it is fitting that the veneration which is so deeply within us should come forth in the white radiance of enduring stone. We love to stand by the graves of the departed, to make pilgrimages to their silent resting-place, to gather the flower that may bloom over their lowly home, to hear the winds breathe music as they touch the sacred sod, to see the light shimmer from the o'er-arching firmament, and bathe with splendor the narrow couch, so that it seems a jeweled bed indeed. We cannot forget the unseen ones, and in unison with nature we would build over them the material tokens of our love. While earth brings its flowers, we would bring the lofty work of our own hands, that the spirit of the dead may be flashed forth in beauteous symbol, and over the very dust of their bodies may be witnessed the greatness of their victory. In the marble we place our abiding faith; in it we put our most precious belief. It is not stone merely—it is the visible center of a measureless universe of thought and feeling.

There is indeed a raising up of the dead in a most wonderful and noble sense. They do grow upon us day by day and year by year with a vaster significance. When they first pass away and the cold earth is pressed upon their bosom it seems as if they were utterly gone. The grave is like an iron prison that holds them with relentless grasp. But when the storm of grief is past and the great life of the universe rolls once more in its accustomed channels, something deep within the heart of man takes away the stone that is upon the tomb of our dead, and they come forth, gracious and majestic, with a new effulgence, and liv in our lives with a sweetness and glory never possessed before. Their faces are with us again, their voices, their thought, their actions, their innermost spirit. In a most natural and beautiful way there is a resurrection which the old myth but faintly expressed, but which the new truth will make infinitly suggestiv and luminous.

And thus our noble hero is more a life to us than ever before. The winter has passed by, and with it the gloom of death. The spring and the summer hav come, and with them the flaming forth of his nobler and dearer presence. Like the blooming of the flower his memory takes to itself a new delight and glory. With the advancing wonder of the year, the blue of sky, the green of earth, the sheen of dancing waters, the melodies of trees and birds, the play of winds and sweep of star-inwoven clouds, come great and shining thoughts of him who is dead. Dead, we say, yes, because his body is moldering in the earth, but living, ah, living! because his spirit is chainless with all forces of the universe, and every throb of his life is imperial in the universal movement of the race.

Amid this exuberance of nature, clothing the world with new grace, let us put the white and marble blossom of our reverent love. Let it flow forth and crystal from a thousand hearts all over this broad land. Let it be representativ of the faith and hope that is in us all, and of that joy of truth wherein we conquer death. The stone will not be a senseless mass; it will be forever lighted with the glory of the cause for which the martyr died. There shall be a soul within it touching our soul to sublimest passion. How eloquent will the silence of that marble be! Year by year, amid the city of the dead, it shall be the illustrious champion of our cause. In summer's sunshine, in winter's storm, it shall vindicate the memory of the heroic dead. To many a pilgrim it shall be a radiant sign. Its steadfast finger shall be the emblem of man's immortal struggle. When the flowers of summer pass, it shall be a memorial still; and when spring's returning glory shall make the earth one blaze of beauty, with answering luster it shall crown afresh the grave of him who toiled to make human life as beautiful as the reviving world.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

A Tale from the Persian.

From the San Francisco Truth.

CHAPTER I.

Once on a time, in the early history of the Troglodites, a boss carpenter had finished a job for which, according to his contract, he was to receive cash upon completion.

He received, however, a note at ninety days; unable to wait for the maturity of the paper, he hired a pack mule and rowed across the ferry to Wall street.

Here he met with an obliging old acquaintance, whom he had never before seen, who offered to cash the paper in consideration of a modest discount, which amounted to about fifteen per cent.

Delighted at the reduced amount he would thereby be enabled to place to his credit account in his ledger, he proceeded upon his way rejoicing.

Ere arriving at the pagoda of his forefathers, he was met by a Parsee merchant from an adjoining wigwam.

This holy father, learned in all the sacred books, informed the carpenter that his notes had been shaved, and that many of the most noted families of the Aryan, Semitic, and Turanian races, more especially the Semitic, lived upon such food, which he termed shavings.

CHAPTER II.

And it came to pass that the bondman of this carpenter, which in those days was called a journeyman, perambulated toward the attractiv boss carpenter, which in those days was called employer, making an inquisitiv inquiry of the party of the second part, concerning the reward for his toil, which in those days was called wages.

And the party of the second part, which was the master (boss), made answer to the party of the first part, which was the bondman, saying, "Verily I say unto you, I guess I owe you ten dollars; that's eight dollars; that's twenty per cent off; I guess that's all you'll get."

And the bondman made answer and said: "Verily I say unto you, 'The laborer is worthy of his hire;' 'ye shall not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn.'"

And the Centurion answered him and said: "Brother, you be damned; they skinned me out of fifteen per cent in Wall street, and if they shave me, I'll liv off shavings too."

CHAPTER III.

And it afterward came to pass that a great famin came upon the land, which was termed by the wise men of those days a panic.

And among the bondmen there was weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

And floods overflowed the land, of waters, and of men who were called tramps.

And behold, prisons grew and multiplied and became fruitful and replenished the earth.

And behold, there was great rejoicing among the rich and the elders of the land, which, being translated, is capitalists with us.

And, lo and behold, the party of the first part, which was the bondman, was carried forth to Calvary, which, being translated, is potter's field with us.

And the multitude which followed shouted a great shout of starvation, saying, "Of what hath this man died?"

And the multitude answered itself, saying: "He died—he died—well, he died because he lived on shavings, too. Poor carpenter!"

CHAPTER IV.

And it came to pass that the money changers of the Temple of Wall were "clothed in purple and fine linen," and fared sumptuously every day, singing praises to Veuve Cliquot.

And the parties of the second part, under their own vine and fig-tree, shouted hosannahs to Bourbon.

And the parties of the first part, which were the bondmen, went forth on their bier.

And the sirs and high priests of the tabernacle, which, being translated, is political economist with us, who taught in the temples, raised their voices and said: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like precious ointment upon the head, as the dew of Hermon. Behold how glorious is the 'identity of interests!' Hallelujah, to the Lord God of economies!"

And the people shouted with loud voices, "O hell!"

CHAPTER V.

And lo, there came a great darkness over the land.

And the people would fain take to shaving, too.

And in the darkness rose a specter of portentous power.

Having two long legs and a body which went up and down, shaped like a triangle (symbol of equality) and sharp as the sword of Damocles or that of Alexander which cut the Gordian Knot, standing firm and erect upon a platform which was movable.

And the specter took to shaving; oh! 'twas a vigorous barber, who knew all about barbarism.

And beards were shaved, and HEADS down to the neck.

And when the money changers of the Temple of Wall and the parties of the second part saw that they were being shaved, they regretted that they had ever begun the shaving process.

Mary had a little lamb,
Away down south in Dixie.

VICTOR DRURY.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent to new subscribers three months for fifty cents. There is no better way of serving the cause than by getting up clubs of trial subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

HOLD faithfulness and sincerity as first principles. Hav no friends not equal to yourself. When you hav faults do not fear to abandon them.

Literature.

New Books.

THE BOTTOM FACTS CONCERNING THE SCIENCE OF SPIRITUALISM: Derived from Careful Investigations Covering a Period of Twenty-five Years. By John W. Truesdell. With many Descriptiv Illustrations.

Here we hav it at last! The art of producing Spiritual phenomena has heretofore been considered a hidden one, but Mr. Truesdell has shown how any person of ordinary intelligence and dexterity may acquire it. At the start he lays it down as a fundamental proposition that no spirit can manifest itself except through a human organism. This has always been admitted as a fact, but the extent to which it is necessary for the "influence" to make use of the medium's organs and faculties has not until now been so fully set forth. The author does not take the evidence of others upon which to build his explanations. He has spent twenty-five years, and probably twice as many dollars, in a minute examination of the methods employed by the inhabitants of the next world in communicating with the denizens of this. He is also himself a developing medium of rare power, and has been aided in his research by the malevolent though necessary influence in a proper understanding of spiritual phenomena of the Diakka. The Diakka, it may be said, is defined by A. J. Davis as an evil form which wicked persons take on after death, and which accounts for the conflicting statements that sometimes come to mortals through the accredited mediums of departed worth. It is only through Mr. Truesdell's love for the truth, he declares, and by a partial smothering of his conscience for the time, that he allows himself to listen to the unholy utterances of this influence; but if by his sacrifice the cause of Spiritualism shall be finally benefited, he believes he will be amply compensated for his virtual self-immolation. The beneficence of the generally maleficent Diakka, however, is sometimes apparent, as is shown in several instances, particularly in the experience which is related of an impecunious medium, who through it was enabled to secure a sum of money which made it possible for him to indulge in a protracted jubilation in honor of the triumph of the spiritual over gross matter. The case of Mr. Joe Cummings is the one alluded to. The Diakka gave it to the author in the following language, which, for lack of space, we abridge from the book in hand.

"Allowing the spirit of Zoroaster to control Mr. Cummings," [says the Diakka] "and having previously carefully folded a one-dollar bill in his left hand, I conducted my medium to the presence of a wealthy captain, a thorough-bred Spiritualist, and a great admirer of Zoroaster. Personating that ancient character, I said: 'Captain, hav you a one-dollar government note about you?' With some hesitancy the captain produced the bill. I caused my medium to fold it exactly like the one in his left hand, and while the captain was recording the number he slyly exchanged them, and then tore the duplicate into a thousand pieces, which he burnt upon a plate before the astounded captain's eyes, and placed the ashes in one end of a magic box, into the other end of which the original bill was deftly placed without attracting the observer's notice. Joe then put the box on the center table, gyrated about it for a few seconds, uttering incantations, and, suddenly stopping, took from it the borrowed bill. This marvelous proceeding increased the captain's confidence in Zoroaster. Promising still more wonderful manifestations, my medium next struck the captain for a fifty-dollar note, from the corner of which he tore a fragment for the donor to keep until the original should be retured, and then concealed it unobserved about his person, rolling his hands meanwhile to create the impression that the bill was between them. When he opened his hands of course the bill had disappeared, and the captain was duly astonished. The medium then addressed him: 'Captain, I am about to leave you for a short time. But these directions are absolutely indispensable to the return of the bill. Never mention this proceeding to anyone under any circumstances, otherwise the experiment will fail. Hold on to the corner until the rest of the note is restored.' My medium then went to Boston and spent his money freely among kindred spirits in that Athens of America, while the captain remained at home holding on to the little corner of the note, and anxiously waiting for the spirit of Zoroaster to return and materialize the balance. He still waits."

These are not Mr. Truesdell's words, as given him by the evil spirit, but contain the substance of them. The kindness of the hated Diakka toward those whom it chooses to assist, will, we trust, hav been made plain to all by the foregoing narrativ, and all will say with the author, "Great is the Diakka of Davis!"

Mr. Truesdell has also been favored with a sitting with the medium, Charles Foster, his experience at which he details. We lack the necessary space to quote the author's words, but it will be sufficient to say that such were his own mediumistic attainments that he was enabled to discover the modus operandi by which the phenomena witnessed were brought about through Mr. Foster's mediumship, and at his own home he was afterward permitted to reproduce them for the benefit of his friends and to the glory of Spiritualism. He was acknowledged by Mr. Foster to be a developing medium of remarkable powers. He next invested the sum of five dollars each in a number of sittings with Mr. Henry Slade, of New York, an account of whose persecution at the hands of some unappreciativ Canadians will be found in THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 29, 1882. These sittings were so interesting, and go so far to confirm the impression of Mr. Foster, that Mr. Truesdell is unusually en rapport with the spirit world, that we quote the account of them:

"Upon entering his [Dr. Slade's] apartments, I was received by his assistant, who inquired my name and the nature of my business. I gave him the required information, when he requested me to be seated until Mr. Slade should be disengaged. I was not obliged to wait long before the great medium made his appearance, when we at once proceeded to business. We seated ourselvs at a common, old-fashioned dining-table, with leaves extended. Mr. Slade sat at my left, with the corner of the table projecting between us. I had hardly assumed the sitting posture, when a vacant chair, on the opposit side of the table, moved several inches toward me. A picture upon the side wall vibrated quite perceptibly, and without any visible cause. The doctor appeared very nervous, and, grasping my hands in his own, told me that he was afraid of the spirits—that I must hold on to him for protection, and must, in no circumstances, break the circle, or the spirits might injure us both. In a few moments I distinctly felt something touching me and pulling at my clothing, as if there were some one under the table. Directly something came up into my lap, which Mr. Slade said was a materialized spirit-hand trying to reach my neck-tie. I was not in a good position to use my eyes, as the doctor held me very close to the table, although I did get a glimps of something in my lap that looked not so much like a hand as a human foot. Suspecting—in my ignorance of spiritual laws—that the doctor himself was the direct author of that particular phase of phenomenon, I affected to be alarmed, which appeared to please Slade excessivly. Watching my opportunity, when the 'spirit-hand' was playing its most venturesome tricks, I suddenly recoiled from the table, apparently horror-stricken, just in time to detect the doctor in the act of withdrawing from my lap his left foot, which he quickly replaced in his slipper. As my appearance did not indicate anything but terror, and an irresistible impulse to remove myself from the influence of the capricious spirits, the doctor little suspected that I had discovered the means by which they had produced the phenomenon. He then told me that I was a very mediumistic individual, and altogether too sensitiv, in my crude, undeveloped condition, to endure materializing exhibitions of so high an order. After being assured by him that there was no danger to be apprehended from the spirits, through their efforts at slate-writing, I consented to sit with him once more. The doctor then took up a common slate, and, after carefully cleaning both sides, placed it under the leaf of the table, holding it with his right hand, in such a manner that the slate was wholly hidden from my view, while only the thumb of his right hand, with which he grasped the table leaf, was visible. At the medium's request I took hold of the opposit end of the slate with my left hand, and joined my right with the doctor's left upon the center of the table. A crumb of pencil had been placed upon the upper side of the slate before it disappeared from our vision. In this position we waited several minutes, when the sound of writing was distinctly heard. I could plainly see the movements of the cords in the doctor's wrists, indicating to me that he was doing the writing, but I was not sure of this fact, at the time, as he appeared to be very nervous, making many strange and, apparently, unnecessary movements. When the writings ceased, the slate was quickly jerked out of our hands, by some invisible agency, and, during the doctor's effort to regain it, I was quite sure that it was turned completely over. On withdrawing the slate, a short message of trivial import, which I cannot now recall—except the closing words 'Come again. ALLIE'—appeared on the upper surface. The doctor then cleaned the slate, preparatory to another experiment, when a loud rap sounded upon the door, which the medium answered in person, carelessly taking the slate with him. While he engaged in a low conversation with some one at the door, the slate was hidden from my view only for a few seconds, but, during that brief period, I had a deep impression (which I hav since been told was a Diakka influence) that the interruption was pre-arranged with his assistant in order to giv Slade an opportunity to exchange the clean slate for one that had been written upon. The doctor then returned to the table, and, laying the slate down upon it, a little beyond my reach, without exhibiting its under side, we resumed our former positions at the table, he holding both my hands in such a manner that neither of us could be accused of being instrumental in producing the phenomenon. In a very few moments the scratching of a slate-pencil, which I could not definitly locate, was distinctly heard. The noise continued for several minutes, and, when it ceased, a long, well-written communication, addressed to myself, signed 'Henry Truesdell,' was found upon the under side of the slate. As the message contained no information of special importance to me—the writer being a myth—I did not care to preserve it. I then frankly told Mr. Slade that the sitting had been quite unsatisfactory—the physical part being very bunglingly executed, while the communications purporting to be written by the spirits, since they actually proceeded from entire strangers, were to me vague and meaningless. The doctor expressed great surprise at my dissatisfaction, saying that, from a physical point of view, the manifestations I had witnessed could not be excelled in a score of sittings. The communications, he admitted, were not quite so convincing as he had hoped for, a fact which he explained upon the hypothesis that I was too much alarmed to allow the safe appearance of my immediate spirit-friends, and that strangers had, therefore, been substituted to prepare the way. He assured me that the road was now clear, so that, at any future sitting, my spirit-friends would be able to identify themselvs, and to communicate with me more freely. I then promised to obey 'Allie's' injunction to come again. Parting with a five-dollar note, which I thought would fully compensate the doctor for an hour's sitting, I bade him good-bye, feeling a trifle poorer in filthy lucre, but inestimably richer in spiritual knowledge.

"A few months after my first interview with Dr. Slade, I had occasion to repeat my visit to New York, when I again called upon this noted medium. I was ushered into his spacious drawing-room by the same attendant who received me on the former occasion, who made the usual inquiries regarding my name and the nature of my business. I told him the object of my visit, but begged to be excused from divulging my identity at present, saying that the manifestations, should any occur, would be much more satisfactory to me if I could be allowed to remain incognito for a time—at least until the spirits themselvs should disclose my name. Not wishing to assist the spirits in identifying me, in case the medium should not, I took the precaution, before my arrival, to remove my name from the lining of my hat, but intentionally left in my overcoat pocket an unsealed letter which would convey to the physical eye the erroneous impression that my name was Samuel Johnson, of Rome, N. Y. The attendant at once took charge of my outer garment and left me alone in the spirit-room to await the coming of the renowned doctor. Incited by curiosity, I began to look about me, examining every part of the room in a thorough and critical manner. There was, in the apartment, a piece of furniture, resembling a large sideboard, which rested upon legs but a few inches in length. Under this article of furniture I discovered a common slate, upon the lower surface of which there appeared a communication in substance as follows:

"'We are happy to meet you in this atmosphere of spiritual research. You are now surrounded by many anxious friends in spirit-life who desire to communicate with you, but cannot, until you learn more of the laws which govern their actions. If you will come here often, your spirit-friends will soon be able to identify themselvs and to communicate with you as in earth-life. ALLIE.'

"Inspired by what I hav since become convinced was a Diakka influence, I had a strong impression that this was one of the doctor's stereotyped messages, suitable for almost any occasion, and intended for the next gudgeon who might stray into his net. I therefore wrote under 'Allie's' communication, in a bold hand, as follows:

"'Henry! look out for this fellow—he is up to snuff! ALCINDA.'

"(Alcinda was the name of Dr. Slade's deceased wife, of which fact I was cognizant).

"I immediately replaced the slate in its original position, and seated myself in another part of the room. A few moments later the great connecting link between our world and the next—known to mortals as Slade—entered the room. I saw at once that he did not remember having met me before; so I apologized for not giving my name, saying that I would prefer to hav the spirits ferret it out. The doctor was in good humor, and at once promised to do all in his power to aid me in the line of spirit investigation. We sat in the usual manner, at a table situated nearly in the center of the room, around which the doctor had previously placed several chairs. In these, he claimed, the spirits of deceased friends were accustomed to sit. We had scarcely joined hands when some of the empty chairs began to move, impelled, I concluded, by the spirits, through the agency of the medium's long, lithe legs and bare feet, which fact I seemed to detect in his countenance and in the contortions of his visible body. After these physical manifestations were concluded, the doctor brought in, from the adjoining room, a slate, which was the exact duplicate of the one I had seen lying beneath the sideboard, and, placing it under the leaf of the table, we both held it for spirits to write upon. Directly a scratching noice was heard, apparently emanating from the slate. After the sound had ceased, the slate was withdrawn and inspected, when the name 'Mary Johnson' appeared plainly written upon it. I pretended to be a little startled at this manifestation, and probably looked quite serious for the moment; but when the medium told me that Mary Johnson was my sister, I felt in duty bound to correct him, since no such person has any right to claim relationship with me. Not in the least disconcerted by this trivial error on the part of the spirits, the doctor, under the pretext of changing the light, drew the table very near to the sideboard, where the great slate-bate had been concealed by the Diakka. We were again seated at the table, in nearly the same positions already described in the account of my first interview with the doctor. The magnetism was so strong, and the spirits were so activ, that we partially lost control of the slate, and it fell to the floor. Keeping our positions as well as we could, in the circumstances, the doctor reached down his right hand to regain possession of the slate, but the indomitable Diakka was too quick for him, and caused him, instead of grasping the slate that fell, to bring up the duplicate. Several ineffectual attempts were then made to obtain writing under the table-leaf, when it was decided that the force was too strong, and the doctor placed the slate on the center of the table, with the clean side uppermost. He then put some fragments of slate-pencil beneath it, and we again joined hands. A moment afterward the table began to tremble violently, and Slade appeared much agitated when we distinctly heard the spirits writing upon the slate. The sound was unmistakable; even the crossing of the t's and the dotting of the i's could be easily distinguished. This was the grandest victory of my life! Inaudibly I exclaimed, 'Eureka! Eureka!' After years of fruitless search for proof of the immortality of man, at last I had found it. There we were, face to face, as it were, with our spirit-friends, communicating with them as in earth-life, with the unimpeachable testimony of our eyes and ears to establish the fact! At the conclusion of the writing the doctor raised the slate and turned it over in a triumphant manner, when his eyes fell upon the two messages. He seemed appalled! Had a thunderbolt from heaven fallen at his feet he could not hav been more astounded. For several minutes he continued to gaze upon the slate in blank amazement—then, suddenly turning upon me, his countenance livid with rage and excitement, he exclaimed, 'What does this mean? Who has been meddling with this slate?' 'Spirits,' I coolly replied. A moment later this great manipulator of unseen forces was as mellow as a ripe apple. Freely and fully we communed together for an hour or more, upon the all-important subject of my visit. If I had heretofore been suspicious of the doctor, now every shadow of doubt was dispelled. The science of Spiritualism was more thoroughly discussed between us than I had ever before heard it, the doctor taking especial pains to explain to me many of the mysterious methods adopted by the spirits in order to reach those who are yet in the physical form. I was thus highly favored, the doctor informed me, for the reason that the spirits desired more fully to develop my wonderful mediumistic powers. 'It is seldom,' he continued, 'that we can find a person fit to be trusted with the great secrets of our wonderful and delicate spirit-manifestations, but, from you, we are ready to acknowledge we hav nothing more to conceal. You are now qualified to enjoy all the spiritua knowledge that is attainable by mortals. We cheerfully welcome you to our royal ranks as a true and absolute medium through whom we hope to make many converts to our glorious cause.'"

[Here Mr. Truesdell informs us that he went home with a new light bursting upon him. He had learned that Spiritualism was an art as well as a science, and subsequent experiments which he made confirmed that truth.]

But why proceed? The book cannot receive its due at our hands without being fully quoted, and justice cannot be done it by the reader without thoroughly perusing it. Those who remember the discussions which the author has held in THE TRUTH SEEKER with various parties on the subject of finance, will know what to expect as to the style in which "Bottom Facts" is written. There is a streak of inimitable humor running through the book that diverts the mind while it may improve the understanding, and so keeps the reader happy. It may be safely predicted that the work will be as thoroughly enjoyed and as heartily denounced as anything that has been printed in this century. As a parting word we would say that if by a perusal of the foregoing remarks, the reader is enabled to gather exactly what sort of a work is under discussion, he will accomplish more than the writer has by a study of the book itself.

The Colloquium.

I never had read, heard, or thought of a science of of Universology until I subscribed for THE TRUTH SEEKER, some four months ago. Therefore I became much interested in the articles that appeared on that subject, and hav tried to fathom the theory, or theories, of its advocates. But I hav either failed to grasp the principles embodied in such a science or it dwells only in the imagination of a few imaginativ beings. I heartily approve of discussion without quarreling, disagreement without hatred. I love a man whose mind has expanded so as to hav respect for all honest opinions; whose platform is broad enough to giv standing-room for all persons of whatever belief, on which they can discuss and consider all subjects on friendly terms. But when persons go so far as to say there is truth in all sects, creeds, and beliefs, that there is truth and philosophy in every man's opinion, and that, therefore, on those grounds there should be a reconciliation of differences—a consolidation of contradictions, a unity of opposits—they are believing in an absurdity and asking for what cannot and does not take place in all nature. We see certain principles pervading all matter. By principles I mean rules of action inherent in every atom. When we hav discovered principles or rules of action pertaining to matter, we clothe our discovery in words to convey our impressions to other persons. They are called our ideas or opinions. After these principles or rules of action are found to exist with a certainty, they are called truths. Therefore, rules of action, principles, and truths are one and the same. There is only one science then, and that is the science of nature, which embodies all the rules of action pertaining to all matter in all forms. If a person presents an idea that resides only in the imagination, and there is no principle in nature that sustains his opinion, it is a falsehood. Truth and falsehood can never unite. Opposit theories and beliefs never can unite, as one must be false. There is no such thing as harmony in contradictions, or as life being composed of opposits. Nature never contradicts herself. Contradictions only exist in the minds of the higher forms of organization. It is impossible for an atom of matter to contain two principles, or rules of action, anthithetical. If matter contained principles exactly opposit it would make everything neutral, everything dead, and there would be no life.

How can a magnet attract and yet repel?—so say some. But of late we are finding there is no such thing as the law of repulsion. There is no such thing as positiv and negativ electricity. One would neutralize the other and there would be no electricity.

There may be seeming contradictions. We know there are to the uneducated. If I toss a stone in the air it falls to the earth, and we say it was occasioned by the law of attraction or gravitation. Inflate a balloon with gas and it rises. That would seem to contradict the first phenomenon, yet the same law makes the balloon rise that made the stone fall. Different conditions of matter produce different phenomena, but if we understood all the laws we would find there were no contradictions. All nature produces nothing antagonistic. Where there is antagonistic opinions, or opposit beliefs, one must be false. Then what is the Colloquium? What is the science of integralism—of Universology? Is it to take every man by the hand, and say, Walk in brother; I am right and you are right, though we differ from each other? That is the way I understand the believers in such a science.

Yet all through their writings they contradict themselvs, but yet, according to their theory, their contradictory statements must both be true, and, necessary in their statements in order to produce harmony and life to their arguments and science.

Mr. Andrews says "the Colloquium is not a missionary institution, but a conference to come to an understanding as to where we all stand." But what is the use of a conference if all are right and none wrong? Samuel P. Putnam speaks of "different creeds coming forth brighter after a conflict on account of error exposed and truth revealed." But if all creeds are true, if all beliefs are correct, how could there be any errors exposed?

The idea that life is made up of contradictions, that they are necessarily all true, is the most stultifying philosophy ever concocted by any individual. There is only one truth, and the only way there will ever be a reconciliation of differences, a unity of persons holding different creeds, will be to expose all the erroneous ones, and make truth more brilliant, so all will hav to embrace the eternal principles pertaining to all matter.

There is more sound sense in the article written by Otto Wettstein on the subject of "Materialism or Spiritualism," and J. R. Perry's article on "The Three Philosophies," which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 2d, than was ever written about a science of Universology, advocating truth in all creeds and beliefs, no matter how adverse or contradictory.

FRANCIS M. BUCK.

Responsibility of Knowledge.

Advance is hedged by results of warped natures. Monopolies are legitimate fruits of master and slave parentage, and among the myriad small ones that beget and enlink the monstrous few, the fashion monopoly, grown of late to lead and strengthen all that twine round sex-partiality, is largest and has the most baleful influence. Rebellion in that will be ceasing to supply the central arteries of the whole tyrannic system from the life-blood of the whole population. That sham is at once purse robber, health vampire, woman enslaver, and man dementer. That rebellion will be the ethical, reasoning revolution, obviating that of sanguinary force. Evolution has prepared thought and things to unite with human effort in placing humanity in harmony with science, through physical renewal. Defrauding institutions await that renewal—national danger and common suffering urge it pathetically. True social states and civil equity hang upon it; inasmuch as legal fairness would be mockery, merely nominal, without conditions of physical equality. Erst the rib and apple story was devised to uphold sex-caste—how sustained before that epoch, nor Plato, nor Hesiod has informed us. Modern Asia, key of the ancient, givs some clue. But when the serpent and flaming sword lost power, Western artifice adopted reduction of energy. Personal bodily bondage, consuming vigor of muscle, nerve, mind, courage, all potencies of womanhood, has been effectual as force and fable. Now that grows transparent, and knowledge is required. Asking intelligence, while dwarfing its source, reacts inversely, and from the dilemma questions issue whose answers only need applying to evident demands to establish order. Yet, some women, writhing under wrongs, ask what men hav to do with our rights. I ask, What hav they not to do with them, while they alone hold authority—when by wiles they hav kept it, and now, conceding their injustice, still hold it, and raise no encouraging cry against the fashion scheme that crushes us! "Untrammeled womanhood" has oft been pronounced—it means untrammeled bodies as first requsits, or means nothing. 'Tis said the noblest men of to-day are ready to back our reforms. We are pleading for such backers; and as we watch, sigh how long, holders of scepters shall only echo answer. When a dozen of them sing out through the press, whatever befall our little monopoly, we'll sustain woman's emancipation, beginning with her release from death by fashion's sway, it will be the best music that ever blest earth. Best informed women are ready for untrammeling, and only wait the favor of good men. False sentiment and opposing self-interest make it the duty and honor of good men to encourage in advance, and publicly, that practical steps may be understood, timidity dismissed, and renewal of health begin the world's regulation. This is necessity, and is not over-presuming on men's duties in a work they must facilitate because they hav prevented. Many of their pens prove they know our population cannot become reliable till motherhood is energized, which requires natural and full use of every limb and vital organ, and that this demands change in the form of attire. That it be radical, adapted to activ labor and exercise, is well-known need, and not a new idea. How reckless to postpone a work that will lift humanity from the mire of disease and vice, and rectify all troubles as nought else can! Brave men and women, put your thought on this topic into the papers and electrify the torpid and faltering till the pitch of action is reached. To allow considerations of trade and gain to stifle progress in this effort for scientific costume, under present needs and knowledge, is yielding last hopes to greed and tyranny, when in our power to withstand and conquer them by this measure and point of resistance, at once vital, central, and basic. My zeal in the cause increases as I learn what quite foils the common weal and menaces future good. Works must second words. Indignation is useless if lacking in qualities that prompt deeds and change. Practicalized science of health would produce order so peacefully as to create a tenth wonder.

MARY E. TILLOTSON.

The Renegade Von Schleumbach.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your issue of June 2d appears (among "Notes,") an inquiry concerning Mr. Frederick Von Schleumbach, who, having figured as an Infidel editor and organizer of Infidel clubs, is now doing evangelical work in Germany. It givs me pleasure to inform you that I hav been acquainted with the gentleman since 1867, when he lived eighteen miles from here, at a place called Wilkes Barre. Previous to that time, perhaps '64–'65, he was a locomotiv engineer, afterward proprietor of a grocery and provision store in the same place. In 1868 he organized a turn verein in Wilkes Barre, of which he was president (sprecher), and on several occasions I heard him speak in public, finding him to be as pronounced an Infidel as I am. In '69 or '70 he removed to Mauch Chunk, Pa., and edited a paper, but as he found it a poor paying institution, he abandoned his principles to become a Methodist missionary, afterward gaining considerable notoriety as a Methodist preacher, preaching several times in the German M. E. church, of this city. The Young Men's Christian Association was also materially assisted by this gentleman's efforts, and, although he is accredited by his Christian friends with being sincere in his withdrawal from the principles of Infidelity, I hav every reason to believe that he is as ardent an Infidel as ever, only that, finding that Christianity is among some communities more popular than a divergence from it, and, accordingly, pays better, he is as we find him.

Let us, as Liberals, treat a man according to his principles. If he is a Christian, and siucere in his belief, he is entitled to our respect, although we differ from him in matters of belief; but for the man who abandons his dearest principles for the sake of lucre, we can only feel scron and contempt. Since penning the above, I hav encountered another gentleman who knew the party and can verify what I hav written.

H. G. DILLER.

Scranton, Pa.

An Exhibition of Superstition and Ignorance.

From the Hebrew Leader.

Much interest is felt over the trial of ten Jews in a place called Nyreghhaza, Hungary, for murder, alleged to hav been committed a long time since, and, although the accused hav been in prison over a year, there is little doubt they will all be acquitted. It appears that a large number of Russian fugitiv (Jews) emigrated to Hungary, with caused some ill-feeling against them, but the premier refused to take measures to prevent their arrival. Two deputies to the Hungarian Parliament tried to spread alarm among the Assembly by relating horrors of all kinds committed by the Jews in days gone by, and when they were called to order by the president, who declared that what they said would gain for the whole Assembly a reputation of barbarous ignorance, one of them, Herr Puody, declared that such things were not deeds of the past, but that they still happened every day. He then related the story of a girl who had been sent on an errand by her mother and had never returned. Seventy-nine days after her mysterious disappearance her body was found in the River Tisza, and its condition was such that it could be easily supposed she had been thrown into the water nearly three months before. The deputy declared that the mother had been refused a hearing by the authorities, had been sent from pillar to post, and that it was firmly believed in the town that the Jews had murdered the girl in the synagog and had afterward paid the authorities to hush up the whole affair. The premier promised to investigate the matter, and reported on it afterward. It appears that the only witness to the deed was a boy five years old, who had been decoyed from his father's house by a priest, and had testified that he had looked on during the murder, unperceived by his father, by peering through the keyhole. Upon the testimony of this child the man was arrested and eight other persons whom the boy declared to hav been in the synagog while the deed was perpetrated. A tenth person was arrested because he declared the accused was with him at the hour designated by the boy, and, as it was firmly believed the murder took place, it was concluded that he also must hav participated in it.

The body of the girl found in the river was exhumed, and the experts were of opinion that the age and size and also the color of the hair answered exactly to the description of the missing girl, but that too much time had elapsed since her death to admit of an absolute recognition. The accused not only deny having committed the crime imputed to them, but also any knowledge of a murder of this kind. The rabbis say that it is an old superstition of the ignorant Christian folk in that country that the Jews require Christian blood to mix with their Passover bread at Easter, and, indeed there can be no doubt that the whole question was raised and put before the Hungarian government to rouse feelings of distrust and hatred against the Jews. The indictment accuses four Jews of having assisted in the murder. These four are Solomon Schwartz, orthodox butcher; Abraham Buxbaum, a schoolmaster; Leopold Braun, second orthodox butcher, and Hermann Vollman, Jewish laborer. Six more are accused of having aided the murderers. As above stated, these ten persons hav been in prison one year, during which the affair was being investigated by a court clearly disposed to condemn them, while the imperial councillor himself believes them to be innocent. Five more person are accused of trying to screen the alleged murderers, but these are not in prison. A large number of witnesses hav been summoned to giv evidence; the case will probably last several weeks. But the whole indictment is based upon the evidence of the little boy of five, who may hav been told what he believes to hav seen, and whether the result of the trial may be the fact that these men hav been confined for so long a time on such evidence exhibits a case of superstition and ignorance unparalleled.

Letters from Friends.

BUFFALO, June 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 for the Bennett Monument. I am not a believer in monuments, but will go against opinions this (the first) time because it is for D. M. Bennett.

THOMAS PAINE FRANK.

FREDONIA, May 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 for my subscription. Out of all the numerous interesting papers that press my time that I am anxious to read none as yet takes the place of THE TRUTH SEEKER among my instructors.

PLINY SMITH.

NEW BRUNSWICK, June 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find amount for one year's subscription; also please apply $5 to the Monument Fund, as a meager mark of my appreciation toward perpetuating the memory of a good man.

Respectfully, HORACE L. FAIRCHILD.

CALVERT, June 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: One cannot well do without THE TRUTH SEEKER after having once felt its beneficial influence. Herewith please find $2.50, your favor for year's subscription, and please to number me among your regular subscribers, and oblige,

L. A. BERGERON.

CLINTON, May 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I had a little dispute with a friend about Col. Bob Ingersoll. He said he had been or was a member of the United States Senate or House of Representatives, and I said no. Please answer in your valuable paper. A SUBSCRIBER.

[Col. Ingersoll does not occupy any official position. As the leading Infidel of the country he enjoys a higher and better reputation among honest folks than the president himself.—ED. T. S.]

ATTALLA, June 11, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am proud to let you know that THE TRUTH SEEKER stock is looking up a little here. I hav got you one yearly subscriber, and one for a three months' trial. I will do my best to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER on every table in this community. I hav got my papers spread nearly all over this county, and I am satisfied that they are going to do good here. Long may it liv to spread the truth through this God-forsaken country.

W. L. NELSON.

LINCOLN CENTER, June 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: After my thanks to you for so great a salvation bestowed upon us through THE TRUTH SEEKER will you now accept my compliments in form of a five-dollar note, which you may place to my credit if you wish. You will never be tortured in a hell if you do not giv me credit for same, for in consideration of all things, the star of liberty, to wit, THE TRUTH SEEKER, has sent salvation into the hearts of enough of others to amply gratify me. I rejoice much more in the Liberal salvation that Thomas Paine rejoiced in. This world will do me to liv in, and if I do all the good I can I will surely die easy. Such thoughts begot our nation. Did Christ do as much? N. C. FANCHER, M.D.

GIBSON CITY, June 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I chanced to get hold of a copy or two of your paper at the news office, and read them. I liked them, and I want to subscribe for three months anyhow. If the paper remains as good as it is now I want it as long as I can raise money to pay for it. I inclose $1, for which you will please send me the paper and "Crimes of Preachers" from May, 1876, to May, 1882; and please send "Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman." I see a great many books in the Truth Seeker Library I would like to hav, but I am not able to get them now. I am poor and work for a living, but hope to be able to giv something toward the monument. JOHN MCWHIRT.

SUTTON, June 11, 283.

MY DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Please pardon my neglect in not writing to you ere this. Being a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I see you hav received many kind letters of consolation; but among them all none could relieve the sorrowing heart; time can never heal the wound; but they told you of the many friends far away that sympathized with you in you great loneliness. None can feel more deeply the loss of one I knew not than myself. I felt at the time our leader was gone, our ranks broken. We miss him; we miss his voice; but time has taught me there is no change in the worthy paper our hero founded. I know you and Mr. Macdonald must labor hard to make the paper what it is, and I trust success will crown your efforts.

In this you will find $3 50, to be applied as follow: $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," $1 for the Monument Fund, and $1 on my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Many thanks for your indulgence so long.

Wishing you many years of health and prosperity, I remain, Yours respectfully, MRS. RETTIE SPORL.

MELROSE, May 22, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It has been a long time since I wrote you; you will find inclosed herewith $7.50, which please apply as follows: $3 on my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER; $2.50 for one new subscriber for THE TRUTH SEEKER; 50 cents for one new subscriber for three months; $1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." You will make note that I hav not got a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER since last November. Nor do I know whether my third volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World" came to Moose Creek. I hav been distant fifty miles; the snow is very deep in the mountains, so I hav made no effort to reach my mail, and I expect to find it all stored away for me when I call for it, which will be soon, I hope. J. B. THOMSON.

DECKERTOWN, June 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: We hav several outspoken Liberals in this village and vicinity, and a good many more who lean that way very strong, but are afraid of public opinion, hence dare not avow their sentiments. This fall I shall make an effort to institute a Liberal League here. We hav three churches, and the heads thereof are kept in a starving condition from year to year. Somehow or other they don't seem to thrive, and several years hav elapsed since any souls were born into the kingdom. Spirituality is becoming a quality of the past. Priests are losing their influence and Liberalism stalking abroad throughout the land. I will write you sometime why I became an Infidel. I was once Sunday-school superintendent and deacon in a Presbyterian church.

Fraternally yours, L. H. DECKER.

LANARK, June 7, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1.25 for six months. At the end of that time you will please stop the paper until you hear from me again, as I intend moving and don't know where as yet. But wherever it may be, there will THE TRUTH SEEKER be also. If it should turn out that I do not move, THE TRUTH SEEKER may come and liv at the old home. I consider it the best exponent of civil and religious liberty published. I am interested in the writings of your many contributors, and particularly in Mr. C. E. Townsend's about the infinit mind. If he will stop making so many assertions about it, and tell us what he means by his infinit mind—define it so that when he gets done we can understand it and believe in his theory, so that there can be no question about it—if he will do this, it will be the biggest thing that has been done yet. Respectfully yours,

T. H. MONTGOMERY.

HAMMONTON, June 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1 to bring your very valuable paper to us longer. I am sorry we cannot send more at this time, but must be content. Hope to be able to send more ere this runs out. You see we are under bondage to capital, and hav a hard struggle to keep the sheriff off our place.

THE TRUTH SEEKER seems to grow better with every number. June 2d is full of good matter. Paxton, on monopoly, in a previous number, is excellent. I should think he sees somewhat as I hav in Massachusetts. I think D. Bruce good. I hav just opened the last number, and see by it that he we used to call Brother George (Allen) has passed on, and so we go. He was four years younger than myself, and eleven than my partner, whom they used to know as Sally Smith.

Lest I trespass too much on your time, I close with respects to all. D. R. WOLLISON.

MILTON, June 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: For now a number of years I hav been a reader of your paper, and consider it a necessity in my family. The Liberalizing influences that such periodicals hav upon neighborhoods and communities are to observers simply astonishing. Utah fifteen years ago was the very hot-bed of religious fanaticism, bigotry, and superstition. To-day what a change! Hardly a town, village, or settlement without one or more Freethinkers; and where they are outspoken and adopt a wise course in conduct and conversation, the influence has been wonderful. For when Congress has been trying to solve the "Utah question" by passing their several "bills;" for example, the Cullom bill, the Poland bill, and at last the Edmunds bill, what is there accomplished? Nothing at all. Indeed the spreading of good Freethought literature has done and will do more good for Utah and the world than legislation or persecution ever has or will accomplish.

Utah is getting flooded with ministers of all denominations, all lamenting the benighted Mormons, all trying to show up the superiority of their creed, and all accusing each other of not understanding the Bible correctly, but, as Thomas Paine said, all, Mormons included, uniting in saying that Freethinkers don't understand the book at all.

We hav felt deeply the bereavement of our leader and standard bearer, D. M. Bennett. Last summer on his return trip around the world, I traveled sixty miles for the purpose of seeing and taking by hand the man who had so bravely, so unflinchingly, and so victoriously fought so many battles for freedom in this land, which is called (should be) the land of the free. Yours, L. P. EDHOLM.

GRENOLA, June 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In your last edition I see a criticism on the writings of T. Winter, of Cincinnati, by Mr. Peck, in which he claims Mr. Winter to be bigoted and intolerant, and that there is nothing in them that can be called argument. Now, what I want to say is this, that facts are stubborn things and need no argument; and, as to bigotry, large game needs strong ammunition. Let us look at the practical workings of Christianity and Spiritualism. Mr. Bennett, in his article on Materialism and Spiritualism, said that it was estimated that 90 per cent of spirit manifestations were fraudulent. Now, how would Brother Peck like to drink, or advise a near and dear friend to drink, of a fountain whose waters were 90 per cent poison? If t is be true, is Mr. Winter wrong in telling the facts without advancing any argument?

Inclosed find $1 for the Bennett Monument Fund.

L. A. WOLFE.

MELFORD, MINN., June 9, 283.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of this date I notice your article in regard to the Methodist church undertaking to build an edifice some years ago, which finally collapsed for want of funds, necessitating the sale of the property under the hammer and the intended brimstone manufactory's final conversion into an ice-cooler. It may not be uninteresting to yourself and readers to learn to what uses Minnesotians put that class of bankrupt edifices.

Some five or six years ago the Methodists erected a brimstone institution in the village of Dundas, Rice county, and, when completed, dedicated it with due solemnities to the service of the meek and lowly carpenter. Tithes coming in very slowly and the society becoming poorer and poorer, they could not meet their indebtedness, and, in consequence, last fall they were obiged to sell out. This once sacred edifice, where the good man of God was wont to deal out hell and damnation by the square yard to unrepenting sinners, is now used as a dance hall, where the young and lively meet on festiv occasions to "trip the light fantastic toe," and, as their faces flush with the excitement of the dance, and the sound of the cat-gut, they seem to say, "There is far more pleasure in this innocent recreation than could hav been experienced by the followers of Wesley, who formerly bent over the now demolished altar and partook of the bread and wine which an inspired hypocrit told them was the 'blood and body' of the meek and lowly," which never had an existence except in a diseased imagination. The basement, where the sanctimonious brothers and sisters met for evening prayer and rehearsal over and over again, "what wicked mortals" they all were, and where the little children each "Lord's day" spoke their little piece and read, "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, then came wise men," etc., is now a first-class livery stable. "Verily the sun do move." Let others go and do likewise. W. D. COLE, M. D.

ELMIRA, May 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is a welcome visitor to our table. I am the only one that takes it at our country office, and it, the "Age of Reason," and Ingersoll's lectures hav caused several in the last two years, who were doubtful of the scriptures, to become outspoken Infidels. When we organized into a League and began to debate and denounce the Christian's God-book, we were very pugnacious; but we are getting them tamed so they can talk of the myths in the Bible without danger of becoming maniacs. We tell them we expect to shame them out of their dogmatical humbuggery, emanating from ignorance and heathenism. I ask them why they do not instruct their law-makers to make laws to cremate Liberals and all heretics who do not believe ghost and witch stories, if they think they should waste so much time in coaxing a heathen God to do his will that they love so well (because he scares them so badly), who promises even to dig them up out of their graves after a few hundred thousand years, and burn some of them in a fire that will not be quenched. We would as soon preach one doctrin as the other.

We hav a variety of creeds here. The Baptists don't think anybody is safe but themselvs. The Latter-day Saints—or, as formerly called, Mormons—do not propose to risk any doctrin other than their own. They say they know God will save them and heal their sick, and that he does not notice anyone else; but we notice that they get sick and die the same as unbelievers. I would hav to hav considerable of "boot" to trade my devil for their God.

Some time ago I noticed some one asked you if you had read Wilford Hall's "Problem of Human Life." I hav read it. A number of the clergy praise it as the greatest barrier to evolution since the prophets; that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it in these latter days. I would advise all to read it. He uses the Testament as proof of a personal God; and the statement of John the Revelator that he saw souls under the altar in heaven without heads, distinguishing those without heads as the ones beheaded for the cause of Jesus, is his evidence that people hav souls. Then he says he has no controversy with the Evolutionist on the age of the Bible or the book of Genesis. Of what account is the New Testament to resurrect man, if he did not fall through the disobedience of Adam in the book of Genesis?

We are having a struggle here for prohibition. I think it the duty of every reformer to work to restrain drunkenness and thus elevate the human family.

JOEL MCCALLISTER.

MERRICK, June 10, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I hav distributed those leaflets of "Our Father in Heaven," and I gave them to some of the most sincere Christians, and they acknowledged them to be about right. I want 2,000 more, and if every Liberal League and Liberal would get 1,000 or more and send them broadcast among the women and children, they would soon set the world a-thinking (or at least the people). If you would put your "Sweet By and By" in leaflets I would take 1,000 of them, to let some of the people here see that eternal rest would be as pleasant as to be in company with all the murderers that go to that "beautiful land."

Here are some lines composed by the wickedest man on Long Island. If you think they will do for THE TRUTH SEEKER, put them in. Respectfully,

E. HYATT.

The Christian says his God is square.
He waters now our crops with care,
And blessed the land so it increased
A hundredfold, to say the least.

Those Infidels he passes by—
It is with them, "Root, hog, or die!"
Their land's manured, their work done well;
At harvest time good crops they sell,

While many Christians do complain
Their crops are poor, they hav no grain.
Had they not prayed, but labored more,
Much better crops had been in store.

There never was a God on hand
Either to bless or curse the land.
It's man that must prepare the soil,
Then a good crop repays the toil.

Every hour that is spent in prayer
Is lost to man; so then beware!
Now let industry be your guide,
Then all your wants will be supplied.

So we will toil while we remain,
And help humanity to gain
Some useful knowledge of this life,
And to avoid all bitter strife.

CENTERVILLE, June 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the tab that my time is about up on the subscription list, so I inclose $1 to keep my name among the irrepressible ungodly host of truth seekers and truth speakers. I must say I like reading the letters of your correspondents and the various views they giv on the much agitated questions, God and the great hereafter. Now, in plain English, what do any of us know of either? If there is a personal God, or a personality who has ever seen him or it, or heard of him or it, and if God is a person and in human shape, he must of course hav limit and extension. And as the grand principles of science hav demonstrated the fact, so that every little schoolboy who has learned his geography knows and understands, that this world in which we liv and move and hav our being, moves—yes, with wonderful velocity of speed, turning once around every twenty-four hours, and performs its circuit of many millions of miles in its orbit around the sun once in twelve months; now if there is a God, as all the infernal Christian priests say there is; yes, and every beast Mormon, debauching, priestly scoundrel says so, too, I ask, Where is this old Jew God, and how does he keep up with that immense rate of speed that this world is going at to answer all the petitions and senseless mumbo jumbos, called prayers, that hav been offered up for so many hundreds of years? I cannot learn of the first prayer or petition being answered. Just think of the millions of prayers and petitions that were offered up by large numbers of good meaning people in these United States, and also other nations, for the recovery of our late president, Mr. Garfield, but not the first prayer was answered. He went to an untimely grave a murdered man, by a Jew-Bible religious fanatical scoundrel (Guiteau). But Guiteau, like all other murderous scoundrels that hav met their fate at the end of a rope, said there was a God and he was going post haste to him and into the arms of that other fellow—Jesus. My God! what a society this Jesus fellow must hav to be boss over!

Well, Mr. Editor, I must say I admire the letter of Mr. D. Bruce in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and what he says in regard to Brother Winter. Brother Winter will do well to keep cool and calm, and reflect, for there are more things in the divinity of nature's immutable laws than are dreamed of in Brother Winter's philosophy. As for Spiritualism, I know but very little about it, but from what I hav investigated and read in regard to it, I must say I admire it, for Spiritualism is a stanch supporter of freedom of thought and expression; but to me, I perceive the universe is governed by immutable laws—cause and effect. Cause and effect forevermore! And the true god of this world is the grand luminary of day, the Sun. It is the light and life of this world, and without its divine and powerful rays of light and heat, not a head of wheat or a blade of grass would grow, or any kind of fruit ripen or come to perfection upon any of this earth's surface. And then just see how the sun is charging the atmosphere of this earth with electricity and other life-giving principles, too grand and sublime for the mind to comprehend. Talk about the Jew Bible with its vindictiv angry God! Oh, what folly, what folly, and all your infernal theological Bible priests had better heed the warning that is being rung through the land and acknowledge the truths of nature as Freethinkers offer you, or just step down and out, for your services hav long been a dead weight and a sore curse to the world. The past history of Christianity has been dark, cruel, and bloody, and society must and will hav a change, for the time has come for it.

Well, Mr. Editor, I must say that I am glad to see THE TRUTH SEEKER is losing none of its fearless tone. Don't show theology any quarter.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

NAUVOO, June 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Everybody ought to pav for their paper, and that is what I am doing in this case, so you will please find inclosed $5.05—$2.55 due you and $2.50 for this coming year, July 1, 1884.

Now, Mr. Macdonald, a few words for THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is fortunate for us that in this great republic we hav men whose mental spirit, whose body and soul, are devoted and laboring to better the condition of their fellow-men, and this is just what THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by our regretted D. M. Bennett, is weekly promoting. But while this is the mission of Freethinkers, it is to be regretted that a great many people cannot or will not guide themselvs exclusivly by morality, honesty, love, and kindness, and it is striking to a sensible mind to see the fraud, the deceits, in other words, the great wrongs, that are inflicted on mankind in the name of God, in the name of law. When one thinks of it, it is sad to contemplate. It reminds me that Thomas Paine said any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system. It could be applied the same to some of our laws, for I hav already had some specimens of law or justice dealt to me by a respectable divine attorney. It was for a note I gave in charge for collection, the hard earnings of many days' work, amounting to $131, with interest at ten per cent after date until paid. The parties failing to pay me at the expiration of the note due, moved away West. Beforehand I gave them ample time, waiting three years patiently, although I was in the greatest need of money to help me in my financial business. After requesting them very courteously to remit, but all in vain, I deemed it necessary to put the note in the hands of the law for collection. I consulted a certain gentleman of Nauvoo as to whether that note could be collected, and if he would take charge of the services; whatever the fee would be for collecting, he would be paid. He says, "Well, I'll see if it's collectable." Shortly after a certain agent says to him, "The note is collectable." My lawyer says to me one day: "I understand by my agent out there that the note can be collected, so if you want it sent giv me the note and five dollars." "What for," says I. "Because you hav to advance the cost until paid for the execution of the note," I taking his word in confidence as a lawyer. I look in my light pocket-book. I happen to hav just exactly five dollars and my note, as I said, representing $131. But that was not enough for security. But one year from date elapses and no money collected. At the expiration of several months, he didn't even hav a receipt for note and money I gave him to send. I waited patiently until a year rolled round and nothing done. The money that was so collectable had been uncollected, and the agent that was supposed to take charge was dead; hence it was a good excuse for my responsible lawyer. I told him I could not afford to lose my note and five dollars. So when I felt this wrong done me I told him I wanted my note and money back. He says to me: "I don't know when it can be returned. It's in the hand of administrators of the deceased." "And my money," says I, "who is responsible?" Here was the answer given me from a man who professes law and justice: "As to that $5, it will cost you $15 to get the $5." That satisfied me; we dismissed the case. In the meantime these young gentlemen, who belong to the same religion, hav been living at the expense of a poor man, which I kindly trusted them for a year for a fine young horse eight years ago, and the money still unpaid. I hav been informed they are doing well at farming, are attending church, and their ladies are singing in the choir. There is a great favorit song often sung at church. It is something like this: "Come up sinners, come to Jesus, he will wash your sins away." O religion! what a sham thou art! what a tyrannical spirit you advocate—that Jesus pays it all! Anybody of common sense and sound mind can see clearly that it is immorality, and yet, in this last quarter of the nineteenth century, we cannot enter an orthodox church but what we hear the same old refrain sound in our ears. I did not expect to make my letter so lengthy, but I had to go through my little personal story, Mr. Editor. But before I close I wish to say that for all good people, of every shade of belief, I hav the deepest respect and gratitude. I wish them not to misunderstand me, for there are just as good Christian believers now-a-days, just as ready to help their fellow-men, just as honest as any other class of people. In fact, I owe my sincere thanks and gratitude for their respectiv favors very often rendered me by many in my vicinity. Let us not forget that honest industry, the dignity of labor, the true statesmen and legislators, all these, if put to practice faithfully, will lead our nation to still grander prosperity.

Yours respectfully,

ALPHONSE LINGE.

BATTLE CREEK, June 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It was about fifty years ago that an effort was made by the Christian clergy to hav Congress stop the carrying of the mails on Sunday. At that time, mails were carried by stages, wagons, carts, and on horseback, and of course involved weeks of time to get letters throughout the country; petitions by hundreds were poured into Congress, from the clergy and their devotees, to prohibit the transit of mails on Sunday. Elias Hicks at once saw that it was a stab at our freedom and liberty of conscience. He wrote that celebrated report, sent it to Edward Stabler, at Alexandria, to hand it to Richard M. Johnson, chairman of committee, whom the petitions were referred to in Congress. That famous report put a quietus on the Sundayites. Then the Sunday-school was inaugurated in order the better to fasten on the tender minds of young children the Christian idolatry. Not content with this, the clergy hav left no stone unturned to fasten their dogmatic theory of religion on the action of the government. They hav now sprung a tirade on and against running railroad trains on Sunday, and hav actually got one railroad in Massachusetts to stop Sunday trains, and are busy all over the country. The Railroad Age, published at 103 Adams street, Chicago, seems to lend its columns to the clergy in soliciting the opinions of railroad officials; hence if they succeed in stopping all railroads from running, their next effort will no doubt be to prohibit all travel on Sunday. Look at the invaluable benefit street and other railroads are to millions of poor people, operativs of factories living in cities, where millions of people liv in cellars, garrets, and constantly inhaling the miasmas, and seldom getting a breath of pure air, only as the ride in cars, and having no time to spare except on Sunday, when, for a few pennies or shillings, parents can take their children and ride out into the country and get pure air and view nature in vegetation and scenery. Such car rides are of more benefit to humanity than all the churches in Christendom; and yet these pampered, heartless wretches of the pulpit would, if they could, deprive every soul of the benefits of preserving health and comfort, by stoping railroads, steamboats, etc. The action of the Christian bigots know no bounds to their tyranny in order to put a stop to freedom of Freethought and liberty of conscience. The Sunday trains on New Jersey railroads, carrying thousands to the sea shore at a mere nominal rate, are of more benefit to the people of Philadelphia and New York than all the churches and drug stores combined. We hav a community of advents in Battle Creek, who keep Saturday and work on Sunday, and I know of no one that is injured or molested by this socieiy. And there are Christians who despise the Jews and yet take the old musty Jewish Bible and call it the word of God. Such inconsistency to me is incomprehensible. Denounce the Jew and take the only Jewish history extant and come down on the Infidel because he asserts reason, Freethought, freedom, and the universal rights of man! This effort to stop railroads from their legitimate business is a part of priestcraft that should be met and denounced by every well-wisher of our country. I would not oppose a single right that all hav by nature inherited and should assert at all hazard. The clergy know that the bigger the flock the larger the fleece, and few of them but look to the fleece as of more importance than the flock. Christianity must rule our country and all be made to bow to an imaginary God, for I assert that I hav no positiv evidence of a God, and if a Christian's God does exist, I cannot admire or adore a God of such vengeancea s is described in what is termed the word of God. Every railroad company in our country should be on its guard against this wily foe. The Railroad Age seems to be in deep sympathy with railroad employees, who run trains on Sunday, and all such employees are well paid for their work and no one is compelled to run trains. I hav employed scores of railroad men and never found one who refused to run on Sunday when requested to, knowing they would be paid for their work. This last move of the clergy is only a starter in their infamous Christian tyranny to bind all to worship their idol.

One dollar for Bennett Monument. H. WILLIS

A Grave Question Finally Settled.

From the Advocate, Methodist.

QUESTION FROM A CORRESPONDENT: "Is there heterodoxy in the belief that the father of the universe will, in his infinit mercy, finally bring all his children, even the prince of the fallen angels, to a state of reconciliation and happiness?"

ANSWER BY THE EDITOR: There is heterodoxy in that belief.

A PITTSBURG preacher asserted that Shakespeare was a greatly overrated man. Some body should present that clergyman with a copy of the immortal bard's works and spell out the hard words for him.

Poetry.

Dan's Wife.

From the Sunday Mercury.

Up in early morning light,
Sweeping, dusting, "setting right,"
Oiling all the household springs,
Sewing buttons, tying strings,
Telling Bridget what to do,
Mending rips in Johnny's shoe,
Going up and down the stair,
Tying baby in his chair,
Slicing meat and spreading bread,
Dealing out so much per head,
Thankful if she can by chance,
Catch her husband's kindly glance,
Toiling, working, busy life.
Smart woman—
Dan's wife.

Man comes home at fall of night,
Home so cheerful, neat, and bright,
Children meet him at the door,
Pull him in and look him o'er,
Wife asks "how the work has gone!"
"Busy times with us at home!"
Supper done—Dan reads at ease,
Nothing must the husband tease;
Children must be put to bed—
All the little prayers are said;
Little shoes are placed in rows,
Bedclothes tucked o'er little toes,
Busy, noisy, wearing life.
Tired woman—
Dan's wife.

Dan reads on, and falls asleep,
See the woman softly creep;
Baby rests at last, poor dear,
Not a word her heart to cheer;
Mending basket full to top—
Stockings, shirts, and little frock—
Tired eyes and weary brain,
Side with darting, ugly pain—
"Never mind, 'twill pass away;"
She must work, but never play;
Closed piano, unused books;
Done the walks to cosy nooks,
Brightness faded out of life.
Saddened woman—
Dan's wife.

Upstairs, tossing to and fro—
Fever holds the woman low;
Children wander, free to play
When and where they will to-day;
Bridget loiters—dinner's cold,
Dan looks anxious, cross, and old;
Household screws are out of place,
Lacking one dear, patient face;
Steady hands—so weak, but true—
Hands that knew just what to do,
Never knowing rest or play,
Folded now—and laid away;
Work of six in one short life.
Shattered woman—
Dan's wife. —Kate Tannant Woods.

"History of Christianity."

This book of Mr. Eckler's is one of the most valuable and interesting volumes that has ever been given to the public. The history of the life of Gibbon is in itself worth the price of the book. To know the man personally, as it were, and to feel as if you had even partially fathomed such a mind as his, is indeed a "feast of reason!" Years and years ago I longed to read Gibbon, and to know what terrible things his famous history contained against Christianity. At last I learned that the "Young Men's Library" of Snowville possessed Gibbon's "Decline and Fall," and I persuaded one of the members to obtain it for me. I seized it eagerly and dove into its preface, and lo, what disappointment! I found it to be only a mutilation—only a "student's" Gibbon, a something I did not before know existed. In disgust I threw it down without reading a single page, for how could I tell what was Gibbon and what was the pious mutilators? But I did learn one one more lesson of Christian fairness and Christian adaptation of means to a desired end. I had one more proof that the church scrupled at nothing so long as she could appropriate to her own uses the best of everything the world can giv, even while pretending to despise all save "Christ and him crucified."

From the day of my disappointment in the student's Gibbon until this book of Mr. Eckler's came I had never been able to obtain the real sentiments and sayings of the great historian concerning the Christian religion. But this book tells the whole story just as Gibbon wrote it, plainly and graphically. It is also amplified and explained by innumerable notes and references, and is illustrated by sixty-six beautiful engravings, each of which is in itself a perfect and complete story or incident of history.

I think every Liberal as well as almost every reasonable Christian will acknowledge after reading this book that Gibbon was not only an impartial historian as regards his narrativ of the rise and progress of Christianity, but that he was more than generous in giving to this sect due credit for the virtues and moralities they practiced, and allowing them the benefit of every possible doubt concerning their errors and shortcomings.

No Liberal library is complete unless it contains this book. I consider it next to Taylor's "Diegesis" as a compendium of useful and valuable information concerning the origin, rise, and progress of the Christian mythology, and like Taylor's, it also embraces a history of most of the old Greek and Roman gods and goddesses, and shows how intimately all religions and all gods are connected, and how they are created and born out of the ignorance and superstitions of the people.

The most pious of Christian historians confess that the Christian religion is only an outgrowth of paganism—an offshoot of the old Greek and Roman mythologies, just as Protestantism is of Catholicism.

Mosheim himself says: "When Gregory perceived that the simple and unskilled multitude persisted in their worship of images, on account of the pleasures and sensual gratifications which they enjoyed at the pagan festivals, he granted them a permission to indulge themselvs in like pleasures in celebrating the memory of the holy martyrs, hoping thus in process of time they would return of their own accord to a more virtuous and regular course of life." He also says: "There is no sort of doubt that by this permission, Gregory allowed the Christians to dance, sport, and feast at the tombs of the martyrs upon their respectiv festivals, and to do everything which the pagans were accustomed to do in their temples during the feasts celebrated in honor of their gods." In his "Ecclesiastical History," Mosheim says: "In the fifth century the impudence of impostors in contriving false miracles was artfully proportioned to the credulity of the vulgar, while the sagacious and the wise who perceived these cheats were overawed into silence by the dangers that threatened their lives and fortunes if they should expose the artifice."

Mr. Eckler has in this book of nearly 900 pages compressed and condensed enough valuable and interesting information to hav filled two books equaling it in size, while instead of this he has given it to us all in one and for only two dollars.

I hope Liberals will be as generous in purchasing as the author is in giving. They may be assured of receiving double the worth of their investment. ELMINA.

The Arkansas Boy.

"Pa," said the Rev. Mulkittle's son, "Samson was a very strong man, wasn't he?"

"Yes; Samson was the strongest man that ever lived."

"Tell me about him."

"It was intended that Samson should be the strongest man, and before he was born—"

The bewildered expression on the child's face arrested the minister in his narration.

"Before he was born?" asked the boy.

"Yes; before—that is, before he was found in a hollow stump—"

"Just like little sister?"

"Yes; just before he was born an angel appeared and foretold of his strength, saying that no razor must touch his head."

"Was the angel afraid that the razor would cut him?"

"No; the angel meant that his strength lay in his hair, and that his hair must not be cut off."

"If I let my hair grow long, can I lift more than I can now?"

"I don't know about that."

"Are women stronger than men!"

"No."

"But they've got longer hair?"

"Yes; they hav longer hair."

"A woman couldn't whip you, could she?"

"No; not easily."

"Was Samson a Democrat?"

"I don't know."

"But why don't you know? I'd know if I was as old as you. How many men was it that Samson killed?"

"One thousand."

"He was bad, wasn't he?"

"No."

"But when a man kills another he's bad."

"But the Lord was with Samson."

"But the Lord says you musn't kill anybody. Did Samson go to heaven?"

"I suppose so."

"He's the strongest angel there ain't he?"

"You are getting foolish again."

"But I want to know. Will you know Samson when you go to heaven?"

"I suppose so."

"But you won't fool around him, will you? If he was to hit you he'd break your wings, wouldn't he?"

"Go to your mother. The next time you attempt to question me about the Bible, I shall whip you."

THE Rochester Post-Express says that the great trouble with the Reverend Joseph is he is Cooked too much. And parodoxical as it may appear, he is not very "well done" either.

THE city of Houston, Tex., offered to pay Ingersoll more to lecture one night on Infidelity than it pays a single one of its ministers for a year's work, and it almost drove the ministers to going fishing Sunday.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

"THE VOICES,"

—BY—

WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

TENTH EDITION.
JUST ISSUED.

PRICE, - - - $1.00.

From pages of reviews we giv one brief extract from Judge Baker, formerly of New York city:

"Considered in the light of a controversial or didactic poem, it is without an equal in contemporaneous literature—the birth of an audacious mind, and is destined to excite greater and more wide encircling waves of sectarian agitation than any anticredal work ever published."

This work is nutritious food for Liberal thinkers, and the greatest eye-opener of blind bigotry and superstition that has yet appeared, while it presents the author of nature, and human nature, in a rational and exalted light.

The work is divided into four parts, viz.: "The Voice of Nature," "The Voice of Superstition," "The Voice of Prayer," and "The Voice of a Pebble," which blend in their combination like a quartet in music, and are replete with reason, philosophy, and sarcasm.

The work contains 226 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound in cloth, with heavy board and beveled edges, and has a fine steel-plate engraved likeness of the author from a photograph by Sarony from life.

If, Then, and When. By the same author. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodox Hash, With a Change of Diet. By the same author. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
(Sole Agency for New York),
21 Clinton Place, New York City.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

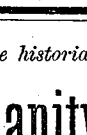
Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS

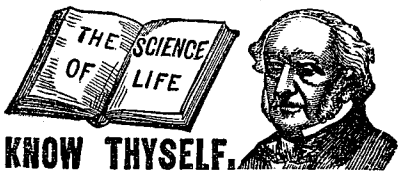


A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove, Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc, but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N. Y

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

SPIRITUALISM UNDER THE MICROSCOPE.

G. W. CARLTON & Co., of New York city, hav just published the great book of the season, entitled

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING THE

SCIENCE OF SPIRITUALISM.

DERIVED FROM CAREFUL INVESTIGATIONS COVERING A PERIOD OF TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

—BY—

JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

A book containing over 300 pages of carefully prepared, intensely interesting, and highly valuable matter, together with numerous illustrations which are indispensable to a thoroughly clear comprehension of so-called spiritual mysteries.

ELEGANTLY BOUND IN CLOTH. PRICE, - - $1.50.

THE PUBLISHERS SAY:

The work is a bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; and, while it fully discusses the science, it does not hesitate to disclose the "art" of all Spiritual manifestations. Its pages giv to the world an infinit variety of facts relating to this important subject which hav never before been presented by any author—some of them of the most startling and revolutionary character.

The author has spent upward of a quarter of a century in the earnest study and practical investigation of the subject so exhaustivly treated in this work. During this period he has acquired among skeptics the reputation of an expert in Spiritual science, while among the advocates of the cause he is recognized as one of the most gifted and successful mediums.

His book not only demonstrates beyond question the reality of spirit power, but minutely explains and clearly illustrates the exact methods by which it may be utilized in any circle.

☞"BOTTOM FACTS" FULLY EXPLAINS TO THE READER

HOW spirits prove their existence.
HOW they communicate by means of the ballot-test.
HOW they may be induced to perform slate-writing by seven different methods.
HOW they materialize and dematerialize forms in the cabinet.
HOW they demonstrate the immortality of the soul in the dark circle.
HOW they exhibit their power through the cotton-bandage tie.
HOW they cause the names of the dead to appear upon a naked human arm.
HOW they control trance speakers.
HOW they construct paraffine molds from materialized hands.
HOW they make mistakes, and how they correct the same.
HOW any fairly intelligent person may become a successful medium.

With a thousand other things pertaining to Spiritualism and the practices of its recognized exponents.

The book is written in an easy and unassuming, but direct and forcible, style; is logical and earnest, and hits out in all directions. The autobiographical portions show the obstacles encountered by the author at each step of his long and patient investigation, until he was at last rewarded with a clear insight into the most occult things of Spiritualism, and furnished with the material for the remarkable volume which he now givs to the public.

SPIRITUALISTS WANT THIS BOOK.
THE ENEMIES OF SPIRITUALISM WANT IT.
SKEPTICS WANT IT.
THE CLERGY WANT IT.
AMATEUR MEDIUMS WANT IT.
AND PROFESSIONAL MEDIUMS MUST HAV IT.
WOULD-BE MEDIUMS WANT IT.
SCHOLARS WANT IT.
STUDENTS WANT IT.
THE WHOLE PUBLIC WANT IT.

Copies of BOTTOM FACTS will be sent by mail, POSTAGE FREE, to any address on receipt of $1.50. Address,

JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN.

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

The superiority of the Stylographic Pen over the old steel or gold pen consists in the fact that (1) it may be filled with ink and will write for several days without refilling; (2) it can be carried in the pocket without an accompanying ink-bottle; it will last for an indefinit length of time; (4) you cannot make a blot with it and it will not scratch; (5) for ruling purposes it is unsurpassed, as it will draw a line of any length without a break; (6) no one can use it without improving the appearance of his handwriting.

No traveling man who finds it necessary to write when on the road can afford to be without one.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Address GEORGE MACDONALD,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Rondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 21 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co.,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.
Write for Catalogues and Terms.
10teom14 J. R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

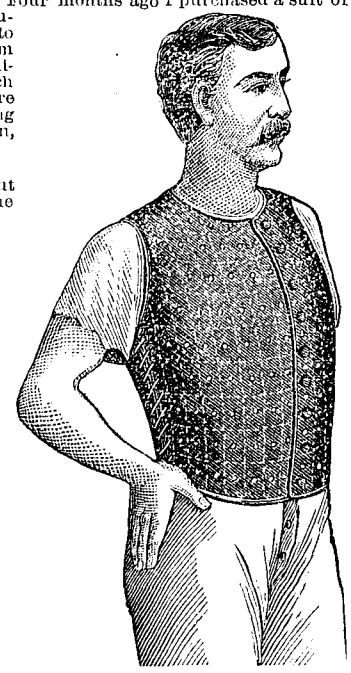
Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.



DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any-one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5 00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED.
Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Gems of Thought.

MAN is an intricate organization, possessing many functions. He has in his mental organization noble sentiments, elevated incentivs, comprehensiv judgment, and a masterly intellect; and he also possesses lower propensities and passions. These are all good in their legitimate places and in proper proportions. Every passion subserves a good purpose when in its appropriate use, and when not misapplied or indulged to excess. The evil with these qualities exists not in themselvs, but in the use and application that is made of them. There are no persons so good but that they hav some imperfections, and none so bad but that they possess some good.—D. M. Bennett.

WHERE pleasure tends to lead to intemperance of any sort, we must control desire and be guided by reason into the roads to the right and the good.—Elmina D. Slenker.

AS freedom of thought has aided the cause of truth, it has become the terror of all questionable systems. Creeds made up of human dogmas may well scout at the impertinent interrogatories of the present day, and sigh for the age when the decretals of some council could silence the intellect. But the steady, irresistible tread of thought, and the iconoclastic spirit of the age, thunder through every nook and crevice of such a system, "Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die and not liv." Systems that depend for their success on the illiteracy of the masses and the ruin of our common schools, may look out from beneath flaps of their long robes and curse the day when a school-teacher was born into the world; or they may roll themselvs up like a scroll and sit in sackcloth and ashes, for no power short of omnipotence can keep the hungry intellect of our race from a knowledge of its privileges.—Dr. Burns.

FOR me, it is hard to see the plan or design in earthquakes and pestilences. It is somewhat difficult to discern the design or the benevolence in so making the world that billions of animals liv only on the agonies of others. The justice of God is not visible to me in the history of this world. When I think of the suffering and death, of the poverty and crime, of the cruelty and malice, of the heartlessness in this "design" and "plan," when beak and claw and tooth tear and rend the quivering flesh of weakness and despair, I cannot convince myself that it is the result of infinit wisdom, benevolence, and justice.—Ingersoll.

NO man ever did a designed injury to another but at the same time did a much greater injury to himself.—Bishop Butler.

YOU hav no right to assert as certainly true, or to believe as certainly true, anything that is not verified. But you may hold your opinions tentativly. You hav a right to say, I believe, with the facts and evidence I can find, that such and such things are so. You hav a right to spread abroad your opinions after you hav been as careful as you possibly can, with this proviso always accompanying them. And it is your duty to hold these opinions always open to reconsideration—open for new light, for new evidence—not to settle down into a petty private throne of personal infallibility; that is as much more contemptible than the infallibility of the pope of Rome as one individual is less than all Christendom. Hold your opinions then, tentativly, ready for revision, ready for new light.—M. J. Savage.

THAT education only can be considered as complete and generous which fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously all the offices, both private and public, of peace and of war.—Milton.

SCIENCE will not kill religion, but it may very profoundly modify not only its outward form and organization, but for a time part of its very essence. Astronomy and geology hav very profoundly altered even the church's conception of the origin and destiny of man—a conception very important to any creed—and biology may do more than that. We should say that if science became diffused so far that all men, even the religious, believed the unbroken continuity of effect and cause to be proved, proved like the multiplication table, the effect of that conviction on the church would be tremendous. It would not destroy faith in God, but it would certainly destroy faith in present Christian teaching as to the methods of his action.—Spectator (London), Oct. 8, 1881.

WORK on, O fainting hearts! through storm and drought,
Somewhere your winged heart-seeds will be blown,
And plant a living grave; from mouth to mouth,
O'er oceans, into speech and lands unknown,
Even till the long foreseen result be grown
To ripeness, filled like fruit with other seed,
Which Time shall sow anew, and reap when man shall need. —The Church, by C. P. Cranch.

THE voice of Blaise Pascal was no echo of current opinions, but issued clear and sharp from the depths of his own being. What he had received from others he never gave back without having incorporated it with himself, shaped it in his own mold, and stamped it with his own mark. Conventionalities and masks of all kinds were hateful to him; to tear them away with a vehement contempt and penetrate to the very core and naked reality of things was like a fierce joy to his soul. Nothing was too daring for him to utter if only it appeared to him to be true; of truth, whatever it was, he felt an imperious need, and to speak it forth without compromise and without reserve was his overmastering impulse.—Quarterly Review.

TO us probability is the very guide of life.—Bishop Butler.

WHAT is the sum total of the worst that lies before thee? Death? Well, death, and say the pangs of Tophet, too, and all that the devil or man may, can, or will do against thee. Hast thou not a heart? Can'st thou not suffer whatsoever it be, and as a child of freedom, though outcast, trample Tophet itself under thy feet while it consumes thee?—Carlyle's Sartor Resartus.

A GREAT athlete may be a brute or a coward, while a truly manly man can be neither.—Thomas Hughes.

Odds and Ends.

THERE is no chance for a man arrested on the charge of stealing an umbrella. Every citizen on the jury will think it looks like one he lost.

"CAN you change a twenty-dollar gold-piece?" he asked, as he gently placed the empty glass on the counter. "Yes," said the bartender. "Well, I'll go out and see if I can find one."

IT is the easiest thing in the world for a father to giv his daughter a check tor $10,000 on her wedding day; but it is the hardest thing in the world for the bride or any other person to get it cashed.

A CINCINNATI belle, in reply to the question whether there was much cultivated and refined society in her nativ city, is reported as having replied: "You jist bet your boots that we're a cultivated crowd."—Louisville Post.

A YOUNG gentleman was passing his examination in physics. He was asked: "What planets were known to the ancients?" "Well, sir," he responded, "there were Venus and Jupiter, and (after a pause) I think the earth; but I'm not quite certain."—Norfolk Record.

A SCOTCH minister, very activ in denouncing the use of artificial helps in public worship, was recently "stumped" by the question whether he himself was not violating the rule he was contending for by using artificial teeth as a help in praying and preaching.

A RONDOUT (N. Y.) gravestone man was directed to carve a monument with a hand pointing heavenward sculptured on the stone, but when the job was finished the finger was pointing the other way. You see, he knew the man, and was kind of absent-minded at his work.

A BACKWOODS preacher once elucidated as follows in connection with the parable of the virgins: "In ancient times, my beloved hearers, it was the custom, after a couple had been married, for ten virgins to go out with lighted lamps and meet 'em on the way home, five of these virgins being males and five females."

AT one of the churches of Danbury, Ct., on Sunday, the opening piece on the organ was from the "Pirates," and the closing piece from "Pinafore," and, according to the "little hatchet" scribe of the Boston Post, nobody found any fault except the deacon who passed the plate to the music of "I Am a Pirate King."

A SELF-ACTING sofa, just large enough for two, has been invented. If properly wound up, it will begin to ring a warning bell just before 10 o'clock. At 10:01 it splits apart, and while one half carries the daughter of the house up-stairs the other half kicks her young man out of doors. They will come high, but people must hav them.

TALMAGE repeats the old idea against a quartet choir by saying: "When I hear that four angels are doing all the singing for heaven, I'll permit four people to do the singing for my congregation." Talmage will hear that as soon as anybody hears that one preacher is doing all the praying and shouting for heaven, as Talmage is doing for his Tabernacle.

"Vy did you veep so much in dot synagog lasht Saturday?" asked Mose Scaumburg, the Austin avenue merchant prince, of Simon Wolff, another Austin avenue prince. Simon explained that when the rabbi preached so touchingly on the text, "Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return," he could not control his emotions. "You vas a tam fool, Simon," retorted Mose, impatiently. "There vas noddings to veep apoud. If you vas made of gold and had to return to dust den you might veep, for den you lose hundred per shent, but ven you vas made of dust and returns to dot dust, den you makes nodings and loses nodings, so dere vas no occasions to veep to much."

THE mule stood on his off fore leg,
Whence all but him had fled,
And kicked a fierce gun-cotton keg
Right on its bottom head.

The keg it burst with grievous sound;
The mule, oh! where was he?
Go ask him, for he stood his ground,
And still kicks mulefully.

OLD SHOES.

How much a man is like old shoes!
For instance: Both a soul may lose;
Both hav been tanned; both are made tight
By cobblers; both get left and right;
Both need a mate to be complete,
And both are made to go on feet.
They both need heeling, oft are soled,
And both in time turn all to mold.
With shoes the last is first; with men
The first shall be the last; and when
The shoes wear out they're mended new;
When men wear out they're men-dead, too.
They both are trod upon, and both
Will tread on others, nothing loth,
Both hav their ties, and both incline,
When polished, in the world to shine;
And both peg out—and would you choose
To be a man or be his shoes? —Chicago Tribune.

DO THE MEEK INHERIT THE EARTH?

The eagle plucks the raven,
And the raven plucks the jay,
To whose voracious craving
The cricket falls a prey.

The big fish dines at leisure
Upon the smaller fry;
And the minnow eats with pleasure
The poor unconscious fly.

The miser skins his neighbor;
The neighbor skins the poor;
And the poor man, doomed to labor,
Spurns the beggar from his door.

And thus the world is preying—
The strong upon the weak,
Despite the precious saying:
"The earth is for the meek."

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

A Few Days in Athens. By FRANCES WRIGHT. Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion. By BENJAMIN OFFEN, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, $1.

A Modern Symposium. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life. By Frederick Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blackford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward. The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Sir James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Frederick Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton. Utterances never surpassed by writers and all important subjects. Noted for their terse originality. Price, $1.25.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur. Par Pigault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By ZEPA. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World? By G. TOULMAN. 20 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Price, $1.25.

A Short History of the Bible. Being a Popular Account of the Formation and Development of the Canon. By BRONSON C. KEELER. This is a splendid work, showing how the Bible was manufactured by the church and ecclesiastics. Limp cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By GILBERT VALE. 20 cts.

Astro-Theological Lectures. Rev. ROBT. TAYLOR. Price, cloth, $2.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper. Price, 15 cents.

Bhagavad-Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. COCKBURN THOMPSON. Price, $1.75.

Bible in India. Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By LOUIS JACOLLIOT. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Price, $1.50.

Bible Inquirer; or, Key to Bible Investigation. Containing one hundred and forty-eight propositions; with references to the most plain and striking self-contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures. Also one hundred and fifty-two references to the most marvelous occurrences. Each quotation has a short description of its contents. By A. JACOBSON. Price, 15 cents.

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in Other Religions: Being a comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity, considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol. Royal 8vo. 567 pages. Cloth, $4.00.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meanng. It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopedia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

Bible of Humanity. By JULES MICHELET. Translated from the French by V. CALFA. 8vo. cloth, $3. This is a large epic in prose. The artist historian sings the evolution of mankind. He throws brilliant glimpses of light on the long course of events and works which he unfolds.

Bible of Rational Mind and Religion. Rational Religion and Morals. By THOMAS J. VADIEN, M.D., of St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3.

Bible of To-Day. By JOHN W. CHADWICK. This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible. Price, $1.50.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. By KERSEY GRAVES. 35 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

The Question Settled. A Careful Comparison of Biblical Modern Spiritualism. By MOSES HULL. Cloth, $1.

The Roaring Lion on the Track. By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

The Philosophy of Spiritualism, and the Philosophy and Treatment of Mediomania. By FREDERIC R. MARVIN, M.D. Cloth, 50 cents.

A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, $1.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Beyond the Veil. Claimed to be dictated by the Spirit of Paschal Beverly Randolph, aided by Emanuel Swedenborg, through the mediumship of Mrs. FRANCES H. MCDOUGALL and Mrs. LUNA HUTCHINSON, with a steel engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas; Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahveh or Jehovah Shown to be the Worship of the Devil, with observations on the horrible and cruel ordinance of Devil Worship, to wit, Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings. By the Very Rev. EVAN DAVIES (Myfyr Morganwg), D. D., LL.D., Arch-Druid of Great Britain. Translated from the Welsh by MORION, B. C. Price, 25 cents.

Eight Scientific Tracts. 20 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written. By S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

Hereafter. A Scientific, Phenomenal, and Biblical Demonstration of a Future Life. By D. W. HULL. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Issues of the Age. Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. A work showing much study and great familiarity with other writers and thinkers. By HENRY C. PEDDER. Price, $1.

Jesus Christ. His life, miracles, teachings, and imperfections. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By MRS. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 26. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, June 30, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

CONSIDERING the number of ministers there are in the world, it is not strange that truth is sometimes crushed to earth. The wonder is that it should ever rise again.

A RELIGIOUS exchange tells a story of a cornet-player employed by a Baptist church, who lost his position by playing the well-known melody, "Pull for the Shore," at the baptism of a number of converts.

IT is curious to read to-day, in a Baltimore paper published early in the century, that 139 slaves had been sold at auction for the benefit of the United States, and the proceeds, over $50,000, placed in the treasury.

A TRAVELER says the English are more decorous in church than Americans. "In England," he writes, "people are silent until they get out of church." That's all well enough, and if some of their preachers would keep silent all the time they are in the church, too, it would be still better.—Burlington Hawk-eye.

SOME Sabbatarian fanatics recently prevented the landing of fish at Stanesferry, England, on a Sunday night, whereby eighty tons of good food were lost. "The fellows," says a London paper, "who deprived the Stanesferry fishermen of the fruit of their labor do not, of course, know what religion means."

A FAMOUS North Carolina clergyman, while preaching a few Sundays ago from the text, "He giveth his beloved sleep," stopped in the middle of his discourse, gazed upon his slumbering congregation, and said: "Brethren, it is hard to realize the unbounded love which the Lord appears to hav for a large portion of my auditory."

THE movement in favor of woman suffrage in England appears to be gaining strength. A memorial to the prime minister is signed by 108 Liberal ministers, including the "most cautious Whigs and most gushing Radicals," by a dozen members of the Administration, and by Sir Stafford Northcote and several Conservativs.

AT a meeting of the Academy of Medicin in Ireland, Dr. C. A. Cameron read a paper showing that a potent cause of deaf-mutism is the marriage of near blood relativs. It is indisputable that consanguineous marriages hav ever had a tendency to produce a degeneracy of the race. Insanity is not unfrequently the result of marriages between cousins.

WHAT's the matter with the Baptists? At their recent convention at Saratoga they decided not to circulate the new version or "Baptist Bible," only on "demand." Hav the Baptists a Bible to suit the tastes of all classes and persons? When you order your Bibles of the Baptist publication house please state whether you want to go into the bath or stand by and be sprinkled. This will help to facilitate matters.—Pomeroy's Democrat.

A LITTLE Brooklyn boy was told by his mother a day or two since to amuse his sister, a child of three. Accordingly he took her to one corner of the room, and telling her to sit down, proceeded to divert her with a story. "Once there was a man named Jesus Christ," said he. "He was a good man, but some bad men got him and said they meant to hang him, and I'm d—d if they didn't do it." The mother interrupted the story right there.

FOOLS and children tell the truth, it is said, and to illustrate we will giv you the story of Bishop Wurtzburg and the little shepherd boy of whom he asked, "What are you doing, my little lad?" "Tending swine." "How much do you get?" "One florin a week." "I am also a shepherd," continued the bishop, "but I hav a much better salary." "That may all be, but then I suppose you hav more swine under your care," innocently replied the boy.—Cheek.

A CONNECTICUT minister was approached recently at the close of his discourse by a man who thanked him for a sermon he had delivered fifteen years before, because it had made such a "powerful impression" upon him. The man being plied with questions could not recall a word of the text or the subject, and the interested pastor gave up his inquiries, when the man exclaimed, "I remember how you wound up. You said, 'Theology ain't religion—not by a —— —— sight."

IT was a bleak wintry night; the air was full of sleet and the keen winds whistled round the corners of the deserted streets, when the door of an elegant mansion on Fifth avenue opened and a clerical gentleman, wrapped in a fur-lined overcoat, hastily descended the steps. As he was about to enter his coupe, a shivering tramp accosted him and solicited the gift of a few pennies. "I should like to help all who appeal to me for alms, but the truth is that we are about putting a new spire on our church, and I can't afford it." Saying which he took his seat, slammed the door of the coupe, and the vehicle was driven off.

THE old-fashioned denominations hav difficulty in holding their own. Three of the four branches of Dunkards hav formed a new organization. This widens the breach between them and the "Old Order brethren," who oppose Sunday-schools, education, newspapers, and books. One of this old order recently said that he thanked God that no book or newspaper had ever been allowed in his house. At the recent meeting of the Quakers in Philadelphia, it was admitted that they were gradually diminishing in numbers, the young being less and less inclined to submit to the drab and broad brim. The young men cannot always find wives that suit them among the young sisters, and their walk and conversation are not as biblical as the young of fifty years ago. They often attend other churches, and occasionally adorn their houses with things of beauty. The United Presbyterian General Assembly has voted that in churches where a respectable minority are opposed to instrumental music, the majority must giv way; but the anti-organ party insist that instruments shall not be used at all.

A CITY missionary in the employ of the Albany Young Men's Christian Association is middle-aged, of solid port, and benevolent aspect. The cut of his clothing is canonical, and altogether he denotes his calling at a glance. His special duty is to visit the hotels, make the acquaintance of young strangers, and invite them to the meetings of the association. "Your name is Jarvis, I believe," he said, in his politely insinuating manner, to a guest. "You are right," was the reply. "You are going to spend a few days in the city?" "Yes; I am." "And you will hav some leisure hours, I presume? "I presume so." Some other conversation was of the same import, evincing a desire for acquaintance on the one side and of offishness on the other. "If you hav time to walk a couple of blocks with me," said the missionary, at length coming to the point where he meant to entice the stranger to the association building, "I will show you —" "Oh, I know what you will show me," Jarvis interrupted; "you will show me a place where you hav drawn a prize, and then you will try to rope me into a banco game. That's what you'll show me, if I'll let you, you infernal confidence swindler. But you've wasted your time on me, you scoundrel. Get out, or I will turn you over to a policeman."

DR. FELIX OSWALD says that consumption is more easily cured than any other chronic disease. The population living at an elevation of 4,000 feet above the sea level hav been shown to be quite free from consumption. What the doctor calls "indigestion of respiration" is bred by humid climates and stagnant air. He believes in the theory of the German Dr. Kock that parasites are a phase of the disease, but maintains that their appearance does not amount to a death sentence. "Cease to feed the lungs with azotic gases," he says, "and Dr. Kock's animalcula will starve and disappear." He claims that all except the last stages of consumption can be subdued by outdoor exercise. He condemns the night air superstitions, and recommends mountain excursions, even to the extent of a three-months' tour under the disadvantages of insufficient clothing and protracted fasts, as certain to effect a cure in a majority of cases. He points out malnutrition of the lungs as one of the primary causes of consumption, and suggests fatty substances and sweet cream as the best lung food. A vocal effort, he says, does not injure the respiratory organs; on the contrary, it strengthens them, and thinks that consumptivs should envy cattle drivers, "whose business givs them a plausible pretext for yelling." Too many clothes he considers harmful, whereby the perspiration is forced back upon the body, and the lungs hav to do double work.

THE New West Education Commission appeals for help to fight Mormonism in Utah, which it declares is to be checked and overthrown only by moral influences and education. It is declared that while the Mormon religion outlaws its votaries and debases the people, "it yet breaks public law in but one point—polygamy is its only offense." To abolish and prevent this sin, it declares, is a task of difficulty. The crime is well protected. Through its various and activ instrumentalities, the central organization shields it at every exposed point. Not only that, but the country itself, by its peculiar physical features, defends it. Utah is a mountainous and arid country. All the land must be irrigated; hence the people must liv alongside the streams as they run through canons or across depressed plains. The Mormon church owns all the irrigating ditches, and hence can admit or exclude whom it will. The Commission has four academies and fifteen other schools, with over sixteen hundred pupils, of whom seven hundred are children of parents who are or hav been Mormons. But no loyal Mormon will for a moment think of allowing his children to go to a school established for the avowed purpose of overthrowing his religion. Brigham Young, Jr., emphasized his hatred of these proselyters by saying in the Tabernacle that he "would rather throw a child of his into hell than send him to one of these gentile schools."

COOKIES for Cook: Shakspere revised by J. Cook: "Upon what meat does this our drummer feed?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.—Joseph Cook says his secretary goes through the press and absorbs the trash, leaving to him "the gems and curious bits." It is a little short of an outrage for Mr. Cook to limit his secretary's reading to reports of his employer's lectures and sermons.—If anyone sees a man with one hand on the throat, another hand on the seat of the pants of journalism, and jerking the filling out of the business, there should be no unnecessary alarm over the matter. It will only be the Rev. Joseph Cook "reforming" journalism, as he says that is his intention.—Peck's Sun.—Rev. Joe Cook has got a whack from another direction. He slopped over recently and charged gross immoralities upon the theological students of the University of Leyden for the purpose of throwing discredit upon the work of Kuenen; but he gets a straight blow from Rev. Philip H. Wicksteed, an accepted authority on Dutch theology and theologians. The charge is denied in toto, and Mr. Wicksteed goes so far as to say: "Mr. Cook's calumnies appear to me so senseless that the only escape from the supposition of wilful falsehood lies in the possibility of some mere misunderstanding on the part either of Mr. Cook or his informant. It occurs to me to ask in what language these startling revelations on the banks of the Rhine were made, and I am reminded of an eminent theologian who translated 'sinnreich' sensual." In reference to "the hall at the head of which Kuenen stands," where "morality is not indispensable to membership of a theological class," Mr. Wicksteed thinks it enough to say there is no such in existence. Kuenen presides over no hall, and is not at the head of any theological faculty.

News of the Week.

CHAMPION HANLAN won the Pullman, Ill., regatta last Friday.

CHARLES BACKUS, the famous minstrel, died in this city last week.

FOUR train robbers were hanged at Clarksonville, Ark., on the 22d.

BRADY, one of the Star route defendants, has been indicted on two new charges, and placed under $20,000 bail.

LOUISE MICHEL, a Paris woman, has been sentenced to six years' penal servitude for publishing an incendiary pamphlet.

THE rug that President Arthur stood upon in the Academy of Music, in Brooklyn, on the Bridge opening day, has been sold for $500.

Two passenger steamers came in collision off Portland, England, on the 22d. One of them sank and twenty-five persons were drowned.

THE Continental Guards of New Orleans are in New York. They express themselvs much pleased with their reception in the Eastern states.

LAWYER NORRIS, of Brooklyn, was turned out of church for neglect to pay covenant fees. Now he has mandamused the church to be reinstated.

THE receiver of the bankrupt lard firm of McGeoch, Everingham & Co., of Chicago, declares that the liabilities of the firm will exceed $5,000,000.

WONG CHING FOO, the editor of a Chinese newspaper in this city, has been arrested and placed under bail, charged with libel by one of his countrymen.

COL. INGERSOLL is at Long Beach this summer. A report that the colonel was dead prevailed at Washington last Saturday, but is contradicted by the fact that he is alive and well.

TEN more suits for damages, ranging from $2,000 to $20,000, hav been brought against New York and Brooklyn for the consequences resulting from the Decoration Day panic on the big bridge.

ABOUT the heaviest bribery sentence on record in England was that inflicted on Sir Manasseh Lopez, a Christianized Jew, for bribery at Grampound election—$50,000 and two years in jail.

GOOD Deacon Richardson, of Brooklyn, who was some time ago charged with doing servil work on the Sabbath, and expelled from the church, has been acquitted by the judge, who said it had not been shown that the work was unnecessary.

Two newspaper editors in Virginia, having called each other liars, etc., after the regular fashion, are making arrangements to fight a bloody duel, and hav left home to avoid the authorities. One of them is editor of the State, the other of the Whig.

DISASTROUS floods prevail on the Mississippi River in Missouri. The water has been higher than at any time since 1858. Three hundred and fifty thousand acres are inundated, and all the crops destroyed. The loss is estimated at over a million dollars.

DR. HATHAWAY, an abortionist, has just been exposed in Philadelphia. The bones of a large number of babies were found in the cellar of the house where he lived. It is charged that he also kept dogs in the cellar to eat the flesh of the murdered infants. Hathaway's wife testifies against him.

A NUMBER of Jews are on trial at Nyreghhaza, in Hungary, charged with murdering a Christian girl to mix her blood with the feast of the Passover. The trial has the appearance of a persecution. It was instigated by a Catholic priest, and the only witness against the accused is a boy who has expressed a determination to turn Christian. The details of the affair were given in an article from the Hebrew Leader published in THE TRUTH SEEKER last week.

Communications.

Science, Sensation, Perception, Reason, Etc.

THIRD PAPER IN REPLY TO MR. PUTNAM.

My first impression on reading Mr. Putnam's second article was that he is incorrigible. I said to myself, "I must leave him as hopeless of any early cure, and dismiss the case with a few farewell notices. The disease has struck in, and must be left to hav its run, trusting merely to good nursing." But on a re-reading, my diagnosis was more favorable. The symptoms are very mixed and contradictory; but on the whole I think that his case is not beyond the reach of sound medication. He has naturally a sound constitution, and there are favorable indications in the midst of the unfavorable ones.

I must, however, abandon my use of infinitesimal doses. Minute and exact discriminations seem out of place. Many that I hav made which seemed to me so true and clear as to be beyond the possibility of criticism I find disregarded, and the positions previously assumed by Mr. Putnam reiterated precisely as if nothing had been said or proven. Experimenters know how useless it is to appeal to the microscope with those who lack, in any sense, the trained eye for looking in that instrument. Let us, therefcre, abandon the attempt at the closest of philosophical disquisition, touching the subtlest of the mental processes, and see what can be done by a more popular, rough handling of the subject.

Since all thinking is, from my point of view, a metaphysical process, what can be expected of men who discard metaphysics? What is the use of discussion at all, if reason and reasoning never conduct to any truth? Mr. Putnam, without the slightest regard to my attempted correction, goes on still to talk about material Sensations, as if matter felt and thought. (Perhaps it does in a very attenuated and metaphysical sense, an idea such as he probably would not entertain, and which is certainly not what he alludes to here.) He is here talking in the gross and ordinary sense, and according to his own definitions of Sensation and Perception. What he implies in this term, and what he says, openly, in other places, is, then, as if he were to say literally that if a man is hit on the head by a club and a Sensation ensues, the Sensation is in the club, and not at all in the mind of the man who is hit. "Sensation, as I define it," he says, "is entirely objectiv, and not subjectiv." The club is objectiv, the mind is subjectiv. This is precisely the meaning which these terms hav in philosophy.

I don't like to be cruel, but really the grossness of this new heresy against reason—not with Mr. Putnam alone, but with his school, including many, perhaps most, of the great scientists and Positivists of the day—is so patent, and, in my view, so scandalous, to occur in the light of this nineteenth century, that I must be excused for some severity—not, as I hav said, in the way of microscopic analysis, which men who are not Metaphysicians can neither understand nor appreciate, but in the outer arena of the popular understanding.

To begin with, the assumption of a material Sensation; "of consciousness" in the club, or block, or billet of wood that beats a man on the head, and none whatever in the head or mind beaten by the club, prompts one to inquire if it were not some old and childish idea of that sort which gave etymological origin to the expressiv old English word blockhead—the headiness or intelligence being transferred (by this theory) by those of the blockhead order of thought, from the subjectiv to the objectiv, that is to say, from the minds of reasoning beings to the clubs, and blocks, or billets of wood which assail them.

If it were not too sadly serious, it would be funny. Mr. Putnam, after laboring through two articles, asserting and re-asserting without the shadow or possibility of proof or reason, that Reason is utterly unreliable and can giv us no knowledge whatsoever, ends the discussion on his part by a virtual appeal to reason as the umpire in the matter; as it indeed is not only in this, but in every other discussion. It is startling, too, to hear this new outbreak of heresy against reason proclaimed and argued in THE TRUTH SEEKER, held, if I mistake not, to be among the stanchest of Rationalistic organs. It must seem to your readers as though they remembered all this controversy as something very old; as though they had heard all this thunder against the supremacy of reason; only, as it were, out of the opposit portion of the sky. The old conflict over this same subject was with the high religionists, the Catholics, and especially the Ultramontanes or extreme Catholic clericals, who put intuition, in their sense of the term, above reason, and installed Faith as the final umpire. Now it is "intuition" in a new sense, and urged from a new and opposit quarter, enemies from within the camp; intuition still, the same old intellectual dodge, not even under a new name. It is startling, and if we were easily frightened, it would be terrifying, or if easily discouraged, disheartening, that the battle which we hav fought over so persistently and triumphantly as against Rome and Religious Mysticism, and High Transcendental Metaphysics, should hav to be begun and fought over again against our own allies, with men claiming to be, and honestly supposing themselvs to be, the scientific world—the cream of modern intellectual development. One party would switch us off at one end of the lever of mental balance, on to the basis of Faith; and the other would switch us off at the other end of the same lever, onto the basis of Sensation—both alike denying the Supremacy of Reason, which is the true pivot of the whole balance. The highest Theologians and the crudest Materialists hav thus struck hands with each other in a virtual conspiracy to dethrone the human reason.

There is no essential difference whatever between the two ideas of intuition. Both mean the look-at—the first glimpse, the first-blush impression, as contrasted with the more deliberate revision of the judgment, the intelligence, or the reason. They o ly differ as to the direction of the look, as tending in the one case inwardly and the other outwardly. In both cases the first-blush, crude knowledge is made paramount over reason and all the cautious and truly scientific means and methods of correcting errors. Both these phases of doctrin reduce all knowledge to mere dogmatism—in one case to the dogmatism or dogmatic teaching of the mere observations of the internal sense, and in the other to that of the observation of the external senses. Both of these phases of doctrin are then an open, and, I want to say, a shameless, abandonment of all the ground which secularism and rationalism hav gained in their long contest with dogmatism.

Intuition, in the older use of the word, should hav extuition as its antithet and then tuition (Latin tueor, to look at) comes rightly to mean teaching of what is seen by the mere look—"I tell you it is so, therefore take it as true and believe," and to be exactly synonymous with dogma and dogmatism, which mean the same—the teaching of mere fact, as fact, without reason, reasoning, or the correction of errors. Mere dogmatic tuition, whether in or out-looking, whether in the old meaning or in the new meaning of the word, is the subtle and deadly enemy of rationalism; this last being the doctrin of compound and ultimate truth derived from all sources, compared, proportioned, and settled upon as final. This new dogma and dogmatism of a faction of modern scientists and so-called Positivists is the old story, and the old folly over again, of first a denial, by both the new and old style anti-reasoners, of reason as knowing anything, or as being the chief factor, or supreme umpire in the world of knowledge, and then an utterly inconsistent and ridiculous appeal to reason as to whether they are right or not. "Time was," says Shakspere, "that when the brains were out the man would die," but here again the miracle reappears that men who begin by proclaiming themselvs blockheads, go on to talk, and argue, and reason just as though they believed in brains, and ideas, and reason all the same.

And these men call themselvs scientists. We cannot concede them this honorable name, nor is it appropriate to them at all, if we are going to adhere to the definition of science which we, in this discussion, hav agreed upon—systematized knowledge—the system being at least as much a part of science and of knowledge itself as the so-called knowledge. We need a special name, therefore, for this bogus pretension to be science, with reason, classification, law, and system left out. Suppose we call it scientosity, and its professors scientosilists (pretended science with a tinge of science; pretenders to science on the half title, etc.).

But it is a matter of curiosity to inquire how so sensible a man as Mr. Putnam could be drawn into this intellectual man-trap, and be induced to renounce allegiance to his own reason. I think the key to the riddle is here. He says, "The only possible escape from pure idealism [which denies any outer world] is by affirming that the human mind knows the outward universe as directly and intuitivly as it knows itself." Now he supposes me to deny this immediate knowledge. On the contrary, I affirm it precisely as he does, but the question remains, How does the mind know either? He supposes this first intuitiv act to be something essentially different from our subsequent experiences, perceptions, and reasonings. It is on the contrary the same common elements of knowledge, begripped into the vivid instant. Analyze it and the elements are all there the same. Light, heat, and actinism are all contained in the instantaneous lightning flash, the same as in the steady radiance of the sun at noonday. So in this sudden begrip of mental energy, this dynamic unity, this supreme act of intuition, whether in the old religious sense or the new irreligious sense of the word, are found by close inspection all the ordinary mental processes, merely condensed and intensified, but not changed one whit in their real nature. The intuitiv theory helps us, therefore, in no manner whatsoever out of the difficulty. We do not escape from pure idealism that way. How then? Very simply and easily—by going just the opposit road to that which Mr. Putnam has unfortunately taken. By affirming, while we know and can know the outer world only as an inference (instantaneous at first), that inference, this fundamental act of the reason, yields us absolute knowledge or truth; of a higher grade even than the mere seeming of sensuous impressions. Unsay everything you hav said, Mr. Putnam, of treason against the supremacy of the Human Reason, and swear anew eternal allegiance to this supreme autocrat of the mind, which after all is the consensus of all the intellectual faculties acting as one. Don't fear that you will be landed in any unpleasant dreamland by recognizing fearlessly and loyally Reason and its laws as the criteria of truth. If it looks that way for a moment, apply a little more reason, and all your fears will be dissipated.

But the real difficulty is that Mr. Putnam does not, just nowadays, quite understand himself; and it is no fault of his, and no wonder; for the whole thinking world is at this very moment in the throes of a great transition. It is in the trough between two seas. It has left one wave of thought, and it has not safely reached and landed on the other wave. It is swinging away from the two old and standard forms of philosophy, called Idealism and Realism, to a new form, Integralism, without having yet fully mastered and learned consistently to adhere to the new doctrin. Hence he and the thinking world surge and lurch uneasily between the old and the new.

To illustrate, Mr. Putnam, in one-half of what he says in both his articles, especially in this last, is enunciating as his own good sound Universological doctrin—that of the ever-presence or inexpugnable unity of a real and an ideal element, in every act of thinking, or indeed in every form of mental activity; while in the remaining half of what he says, he with an unconscious and almost childlike simplicity denies all that he had previously been saying; or what is the same thing, makes other statements wholly incompatible with it. Let us quote:

> "I affirm that consciousness includes two prime elements which must exist in order to produce consciousness, namely, the me, and the not-me. Take away either of these, and there is no consciousness. Consciousness is, as the word signifies, a knowing together, or with. It is the human mind coming to knowledge by the conjunction of the outward world, and without this conjunction there is no consciousness. The not-me is as necessary as the me—for how can man know even himself except by contrast with what is not himself? So the very beginning of knowledge, of all consciousness, is the impact of the not-me with the me, and the not-me is no more an inference than the me; both are directly intuitioned in the act of consciousness. There is no priority."

Now just this, and all this, is, in so many words, what I am continuously saying; what I am engaged in teaching and promulgating, and what I mean by the Universological (the begrippial) form of philosophy—the close and dynamic embrace of two opposit factors in the genitiv origin of every thought, feeling, and emotion—say, for instance, of sensation and reason in the higher forms of knowledge. This is a third and new form of philosophy, which in part distinguishes, in part combines, and in part transcends the older forms known as Idealism and Realism. This new and higher philosophy is just now somewhat blindly struggling into existence in many quarters. Spencer and Lewes, especially, touch upon its borders. Distinctly and analytically elaborated, it is Universology; and upon the special point now considered, no better Universological statement could be asked for than is contained in the paragraph just quoted.

If, then, Mr. Putnam would simply adhere logically to this basis of ideas, which possibly he has unconsciously caught up from me, and not yet quite made his own; if he could and would stand consistently on this narrow edge between opposits, reaching out and embracing them both, we two, he and I, would never disagree; this whole discussion would be unnecessary; the controversy would be settled; would hav been settled before it began. But see how soon and how sadly he apostatizes, and falls from grace, and gets back into his old position of mind, such as it was before he became an unconscious Universologist! Compare with the paragraph above quoted the following extract:

> "The radical, and, to the careless-thinking mind, the incomprehensible, difference between Mr. Andrews and myself is in this starting-point. Is the outward universe or the mind of man the starting-point? He says the mind of man; I say the outward universe. He admits that this is so in time, as a fact of history, but not as fact of logic; but I say that even as a fact of logic the universe comes first. Mr. Andrews is idealistic; I am realistic. Mr. Andrews makes the objectiv a mode of the subjectiv; I make the subjectiv a mode of the objectiv. I subordinate the mind of man to the outward universe; Mr. Andrews subordinates the outward universe to the mind of man, and makes it but a mental image."

This is like a bad blotch on the face of a noble picture. All this has no place whatever within the scope of the new form of philosophy which Mr. Putnam had been engaged in so admirably stating. It belongs entirely to the realm of the old ideas which were his before he was converted. Let me, as his spiritual counselor in the new faith, awaken him a little to that fact. It is not true that there is any question between us as to which is first, the outward world or the mind, in the act of knowing. We hav both agreed that both are necessary and alike present. He says himself, "there is no priority." How, then, can either be first (in any absolute sense)? Let him remember the illustration I used in my first article, of the sire, the dam, and the generativ act. We can say that in the male line the sire is first, or in the female line the dam is first, but in the true originativ sense, it is neither parent, nor even both of them, but the act of their conjunction, and that solely, which is truly first, relativly to the product. True, this is so subtle an idea that it is very easy to slide away from it, and Mr. Putnam is to be excused; but still the fact remains that he has slid completely away from the new and right view. What he now says is, that I hold that the father is the cause of the child, and that he holds that the mother is the cause of the child; while neither of us holds to anything of the kind, if we go back to and abide by the Universological doctrin which we hav agreed upon. It is not true that I am an Idealist, or a Platonist, or anything of the kind, as it is not true that he is a Realist as contrasted with Idealists. It is not true that I say that the mind is first, or that he says that matter is first—when we both say that both are equally first. It is not true that I make the objectiv a mode of the subjectiv, or that he makes the subjectiv a mode of the objectiv—when the peculiarity and distinguishing mark of the position we mutually agree upon is that each is equally a mode of the other; and that the real truth is the begrip of the two in their equality and equal title to originality. It is not true that I subordinate the outward universe to the mind of man, and that he subordinates the mind of man to the outward universe, but that we both do both, alternately, according to the point of view from which we are considering the subject; and that we subordinate each to each in due apportionment, and thereby escape, for the first time, from that eternal gabble of sectarian differences which has been as much the bane of the philosophical as it has been of the religious world. Mr. Putnam is slandering me every time that he calls me an Idealist in any distinctiv sense, as if being that were my style of philosophy; and he ought to know it, if he senses, at all rightly, the force of his own statements quoted above. I am a Universologist, and no more an Idealist than I am a Realist; and he is a Universologist while he abides by these statements, and no more a Realist than he is an Idealist. It is said that crows can only count three. Philosophers heretofore hav only been able to count two; and if a person were not one thing, then they hav assumed that he must be the opposit. I am trying to teach them to count three. Mr. Putnam comes up to the task pretty well; but then he falls back again, and we overhear him reciting to himself: "One, two; one, two; one, two"—quite as he used to do before Universology came in. I am no more an Idealist than I am a Realist; I happen to be both, and that is a new style, and quite incomprehensible to the order of mind that is not able to count three.

Well, in fine, Mr. Putnam has told us what he means by metaphysics, and his definition is merely that of Idealism; and I am, therefore, for the same reason, no metaphysician under his definition. 'Twould be mere repetition to argue the matter over again under the new name.

Mr. Putnam says I must find room for him somewhere in Universology. I hav, as he will see, found room for him—or, rather, I hav found that he has found room for himself, as a true Universologist, if he will only adhere to his own fundamental statement, and I am only providing a few little bulwarks to guard him against slipping out of his place, from the old habit, strong upon him and his compeers, of counting two only.

But even apart from that danger, and in order that he should become an intelligent past-graduate in Universology, he must permit me to giv him a few lessons. And the first of them is this: he should use the term Knowledge in a more enlarged sense; and he should then retain the phrase, the "Raw Materials of Knowledge," which he has once inadvertently used, for those first contributions to our storehouse of mental possession which come through the senses. When he denies so gallantly that the reason furnishes any knowledge, what he means, or what he should mean is, "that the reason does not and cannot furnish knowledge of that kind;" that is, cannot augment the store of "raw material" furnished through the senses. But he concedes and affirms that the reason does furnish the system, the adjustment, the arrangement, and the order of those materials; that, in a word, it recasts them into new forms and makes of them something different. Now he will find that he will hav to admit that mental certainty of right system is also knowledge, but knowledge, it is true, of a different order or type.

In my second article, in treating of the definition of science, as we had agreed on it, I conceded for the moment, altogether more than can be permanently conceded, when I contrasted knowledge and system as the two factors of science, or "systematized knowledge." The deeper fact is that knowledge, as excluding system, is by no means knowledge, entire or all-inclusiv, but is, on the contrary, the raw materials of knowledge merely; as, on the other hand, system, excluding such Raw Materials, is mere empty frame-work without contents, but still something, which can be and often is most accurately known as system, embodying truths of the most undeniable character. The mental appreciation of system, rationally devised, is, therefore, knowledge of another order, and, from the scientific point of view, of a far higher rank than the primitiv knowledge got through the senses; and Mr. Putnam's desperate attempt to confine the meaning of the great words, knowledge and truth, to the mere mental appreciation of the Raw Materials of Knowledge will prove a philosophical failure.

Human knowledge is the whole of that stock of ideas in the mind, of the truth of which we are certain. This carries us back to the different kinds of truth defined in one of my previous replies, and to the different kinds of evidence which may and do bind the human mind in the chains of convincement. We know that chalk is white, because it habitually appears so to the sight—that is, to one of our senses which recognizes color. We know that lead is heavy, not through sight, but through the sense of touch—quite another and different faculty. We know all the facts of sensation thus through some of our five senses or through all of them.

Now here comes Mr. Putnam to say that this is all that we ever do or ever can know; but I know that that is not true; and I don't know it through any one nor through all of my five senses. I hav, therefore, another means of knowing than the senses, one or all of them. All of us hav, whether we call it reason, or intelligence, or the mind's eye, or common sense, or by any other name. There is another mental faculty than that which yields sensation, and which, not absolutely, but, from the scientific point of view, is higher in rank or in the kind of truth, certainty, knowledge, and science which it furnishes. We are infinitly more certain that two and two are four and can't be anything else, or that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points, than we are that that is a piece of chalk before us which looks like chalk. The senses are continuously deceiving us, as when we see that the sun rises (a fact which doesn't happen), and it is the special function of the reason to re-consider the testimony of the senses and to correct it; and this is pre-eminently the business of science in the higher and dominating aspects of science. The mathematician affirms that the straight line is the shortest distance between two points, and the whole world agree with him the moment they understand the statement. Call it poetry, imagination, what you will, it is an insight of the mind which is more convincing than observation; in other words, of the highest and most commanding order in science, and the apprehension in the mind and the absolute convincement of the mind in respect to that truth, are knowledge of the highest scientific order.

I might very well here, on my part, submit the argument to the common sense of the reader; but the subject under consideration is so important, and in some respects so new, that I think it will be well to introduce an illustration. Human knowledge being the whole of the stock of ideas in the mind, of the truth of which we are certain, and the mind being a laboratory or factory, we may readily liken it and its stock of ideas to a great material factory—a cotton factory, for example, with the totality of the stock which it contains, Raw Material, the Standing and Running Machinery, and the Manufactured Articles on hand, and in all their stages of elaboration. (Mr. Putnam himself says: "The human mind is simply a weaver—it weaves what is given to it gloriously and wonderfully, but it can do no more.") The entire stock in trade of the cotton mill stands, then, over against the entire stock of Knowledge or Knowledges in the human mind. What Mr. Putnam is affirming is, on the contrary, that the raw cotton off the plantation, as it comes into the mill, is the whole stock of goods or properties in the mill; that the machinery can make no more of it—cannot add one particle to the stock, and that the cotton fabrics, no matter how elegantly finished, hav not one particle more of value than the original raw cotton. My statement is that we must giv a far bigger extension to the meaning of the word knowledge. It must in the first place cover the idea of the Raw Materials of Knowledge, which are analogous with the raw cotton from the plantation to be wrought up or manufactured by the machinery.

It must in the second place cover the capacities of "the human mind to so readjust this knowledge, so classify, so co-ordinate, so logically arrange and define, so mentally mold it, that it really would increase the body of knowledge." All this is analogous with the machinery itself in its operation upon the Raw Material, and in its capacity to transform cotton into cotton fabrics.

In the third place, it (the term knowledge) must include the ultimate and settled conclusions and convictions of the mind, resulting from the action of the reason upon the crude materials of mentation, and the fitness of those conclusions and convictions to be applied to the actual business of life. All this is analogous with the begrip or dynamic unity of the cotton machinery in action and the raw cotton, in their conjunction as one in the act of manufacture; and in actual cotton fabrics as the manufactured result fitted for being turned out from the factory and used.

What Mr. Putnam means is nevertheless very simple, and if cautiously and rightly guarded in definition, his statement would be true—that is, that the process of manufacture has not made, and could never make, a single additional fiber of the original cotton, all of which had to come into the factory from the plantation outside. This I frankly concede and affirm with him. But it is not by the analogy mere cotton that we are called upon to consider. It is cotton goods, cotton utilities, uses, values—cotton as produced, cotton as modified or transmuted, and so immensely augmented in value, and finally cotton fabrics as destined to their ultimate uses.

But observe that, on the other hand, the raw cotton does no more, and can no more, produce the cotton machinery than can the machinery produce the raw cotton. The cotton factory with its formativ processes is no more derived from the cotton as grown on the plantation than is the cotton derived from the factory machinery. The machinery is no more transmuted cotton than cotton is transmuted machinery. It is only true that the existence of cotton to be manufactured was the suggestiv occasion of the uprising of the mill; but the mill is not derived from the cotton, and the cotton is, therefore, not the cause of the mill. The mill machinery is derived from human ingenuity, and wood and iron, in a combination peculiarly its own. It is a wholly different thing from cotton, having nothing whatever to do with cotton, except from its adaptation to grapple with, master, and mold cotton, as its material or subject-matter to be worked upon, which is thereby raised into still a third new thing, which again is neither the cotton nor the machinery, but the compound resultant of the coaction of the former two—which is, in a word, cotton goods. Just so Sensation, as the first raw material of ideas and knowledge, coming into the mind, is the suggestiv occasion of the setting up of a mental machinery—the reasoning power—whose special business it is to deal with, transmute, and recast the raw stuff so offered for its manipulation. But the reasoning process is no more derived from the Sensation than the cotton-manufacturing machinery is derived from the cotton. The reasoning process is no more transmuted Sensation than Sensation is transmuted Reason. It is a different thing altogether, a higher and grander potency of the mind, opposit in kind and character and having an origin peculiarly distinct from Sensation.

Sensation, then, givs one kind of knowledge, distinctivly its own (cotton). Reason givs another kind of knowledge as distinctivly and peculiarly its own (the mill and its machinery); the action of the Reason (the mill and machinery) upon the Sensation-furnished materials (the cotton) results in a third thing; a third kind of knowledge—Educated Experience (cotton goods or fabrics, ready to be put upon the market and used).

I made a quotation of a long paragraph of Mr. Putnam's, to show how completely we agree so long as he abides by the Universological principle, which he has therein adopted. I now make another quotation of a long paragraph, which I break into particulars, and throw into parallel columns, with my own counter-statements, to show how completely we differ when he falls away from that fundamental principle:

Mr. Putnam's Consecutiv Statements:	My Own Counter-Statements:
"There is no distinction in knowledge."	Knowledge is full of distinctions which should be most carefully studied and apprehended.
"All knowledge is the same."	Knowledge is of infinit varieties. It is never simple, but always complex.
"Scientific knowledge is classified knowledge."	The one thing agreed upon, or not counter-stated.
"But to classify knowledge is not to change its character."	To classify knowledge is precisely and very definitly to change its character.
"The knowledge of the most ignorant and most ill-disciplined mind, so far as it is knowledge, is just as valuable as the knowledge of the greatest philosopher."	The knowledge of the ignorant and ill-disciplined mind has not a millionth part the value of the knowledge of the greatest philosopher. Knowledge is of all degrees of value.
"'All logic,' as Huxley says, 'is simply elaborated common sense"[reason].	Which elaboration givs it an immensely higher value, and makes it essentially different.
"It is not anything different from common sense, only a more attentiv common sense."	Which greater attentivness makes it completely a different thing—as bolted flour is different from raw corn.
"There is no royal road to truth—one for the learned and one for the ignorant."	There is a royal road to all higher class of truth, of which the ignorant hav no conception and no power to avail themselvs. It is that of the systematic use of the reason, or, in a word, of critical and scientific attentivness.
"All must take the same road."	On the contrary, the ignorant travels mentally in no road whatsoever. He wanders over the fields without the guidance of any road.

"The most learned man at the start must take the same road as the most ignorant. The only difference is that he goes further in the same process of reasoning."

"He cannot at any time change the way or the process."

"He only transcends the uncultivated mind by more continued reasoning, but there is no difference in the kind of reasoning."

"It is all common sense."

Not at all. The ignorant man goes in no particular road, but at random. Doing that a thousand years would not carry him where the scientific man gets in a few months. It is not going farther, but it is making or finding a way—a scientific method.

On the contrary, he changes from the no-way or no-road to the use of a road, which is, then, a new kind of process.

On the contrary, the continuation of illogical, unmethodical reasoning will only carry one farther and farther away from ever arriving at methodical reasoning; and the two things are not only different but opposit in kind.

On the contrary, exact thinking is the most uncommon sense. It is the new kind of sense; the true reason, the discovery and first use; of which is the initial step in the development of true science, as distinguished from mere naturismal or common knowledge.

Mr. Putnam's whole article is thus a curious and wonderful mosaic of correct and profound philosophical statement, and of calamitous deviation from the dictates of sound knowledge. He manifests the ability of rare genius with a certain obvious lack of trained scientific attentivness, such as guards the student from incompatible and contradictory averments. He needs, in a word, a thorough course of training in the Universological, mental training school. He is withal so generous, so loving, so genial, and so appreciativ and deferential, that these grand qualities even throw some obstacles in the way of instructing or reforming him. It is hard to be hard with the thoroughly good. But Mr. Putnam has another noble quality, higher in rank than any I hav mentioned, and which demands of me that I deal with him in utter fidelity. That supreme mental quality is, that he is eminently a truth-lover and a truth-seeker. He will excuse me, therefore, for what may seem harsh and even contemptuous in some of my expressions. I am certain that he will not think that there is either harshness or contempt in my soul toward him personally, but always and only toward sophistries, which cannot be readily forgiven for their satanic potency to beguile and betray into error so clear a mind as his, and so devout a lover of truth as he is. He will even excuse me, I know, if I add that far harsher and more terrible than anything that I hav said, are the direct and legitimate implications of a fundamental truth propounded by him whom he probably regards as the founder of his own school—Auguste Comte. Comte says that the excess of Subjectivity [the faith-end of the intuition doctrin] is insanity; and that the excess of objectivity [the sensation-end of the intuitiv doctrin] is idiocy. The inevitable, tremendous, and utterly sound and correct inference from this pregnant statement of the great philosopher—which is also my statement—is that REASON, the middle point, the "mean proportional" between the extreme of subjectivity and the extreme of objectivity, is the only true sanity of the human mind; and, of course, that Rationalists are the only sane people. What a wail of woe would sound through the sympathizing hearts of the army of admirers of the genius of Samuel P. Putnam, most of them pre-eminently Rationalists, should they be forced to believe that he had been betrayed by any process of false reasoning, into a permanent renunciation of his allegiance to the Supremacy of the Human Reason!

There are several remaining points in Mr. Putnam's remarkable papers, equally or nearly as important as these I hav touched upon, which ought also to be noticed; but I am constrained, by the limits on space, to omit them. STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

We Need More Workers.

FRIENDS: It is well to talk, but it is better to work. Talk of the right kind will help our cause, but work will do far more good. It is true we hav not the incentiv of a burning hell to save our dear ones from, urging us to do our level best to defeat the machinations of an arch enemy, who in spite of all these efforts obtains nine out of every ten of them; but we are laboring for happiness here, happiness for everything that has life and that is useful or pleasant to mankind. We are laboring for goodness, mercy, charity, and truth; for love, peace, harmony, and temperance. All these blessings are obtainable only under freedom's regime, and freedom is ours if we work for it. But if we sit in the shade, recline on our sofas, or swing lazily in our hammocks, trusting to others to do the necessary labor to bring about this grand millennial age, it will never come. Why, here in A.S. 283 we find the "National Reform Association" working tooth and nail to get the old Jew God, the embodiment of all the barbarisms of a savage and uncivilized people, into the Constitution of the United States. This once accomplished (and it can be done unless we take time by the forelock and prevent it), it may be years ere we can undo this great crime against reason, right, and justice. You all realize the bondage and oppression of our Christian Sunday laws, and find how impossible it is to get them annulled or even materially amended. You groan under the weight of taxes, and yet are compelled to shoulder six hundred millions of dollars' worth of untaxed church property in addition to all the rest. You behold on every side the vast machinery of the church working, working, working in every possible way—in the family, in the school, at marriages, deaths, and burying, in all the lodges, asylums, jails, homes for the unfortunate, in law, in the army, navy, and every nook and corner where it can effect an entrance. For the ten years we hav lived here in Snowville, the Campbellite church has run the place, even to the public school, which has a preacher for a teacher. Probably, too, this is the most musical town in the state, and ninety-nine-one-hundredths of all the music sung or played are Campbellite church songs. Oh, it requires mountains of labor to work in opposition to all this. The enemy hav the field, which givs them nine-tenths of the battle, and they hold in chains all the vast numbers who are not interested enough to care which side is really right, and hence outcount us by millions.

Still, as we hav truth and justice on our side, we can win if we will to do so.

On November 5, 1872, Susan B. Anthony and six other women of Rochester, N. Y., went to the polls and voted in the ward where Miss Anthony lived. Fourteen women of this ward had registered themselvs as voters, the inspectors being insured by Miss Anthony against costs growing out of any possible suit of law from registering them. These fifteen citizens were prosecuted, and so also were the three inspectors. The jury found a true bill of indictment against them. From November 28, 1872, to January 21, 1873, Miss Anthony, in the eyes of the law, was imprisoned, "but the marshal, though somewhat uneasy, left her free to fill her lyceum engagements and attend woman suffrage conventions. Learning that in case the jury returned a verdict of guilty, the judge must declare the costs of the trial against the defendants, she determined to canvass Monroe county in order to make a verdict of guilty impossible. She held meetings in twenty-nine of the post-office districts, speaking on the equal rights of all citizens to the ballot. Hearing that District-Attorney Crowley threatened to move her trial out of the county, she sent him word she would then canvass the next with an army of speakers." Crowley did move it to Canandaigua, and in the twenty-two days before the convening of the court Miss Anthony made twenty-one speeches in Ontario county, and Matilda Joslyn Gage spoke in sixteen townships. Thus they canvassed that county. The trial was long and very interesting. I wish I could giv you a full account of it, and a verbatim report of Miss Anthony's excellent canvassing speeches, but it would fill up the whole paper. Suffice it to say no jury could be found who would agree upon the guilt of these noble women; even the court directed them to find such a verdict. Judge Hunt nevertheless sentenced Miss Anthony to pay a fine of one hundred dollars and the costs of the prosecution. She declared the sentence unjust, and refused to pay a cent of the fine. Judge Seldon said, "Justice Hunt had as much right to order me hung to the nearest tree as to take the case from the jury and render the decision he did." Now I think if Liberals would read these books, the "History of Woman's Suffrage," by Anthony, Stanton, and Gage, and work as these women, and thousands of other women, worked, and are still working, for equality and right, we could ere many years roll around elect Col. R. G. Ingersoll as president of these United States. Great victories require great workers. Many small works count for as much as one big work. So, friends, I hope each one of you will begin now and at once to work. Subscribe for our papers, and read and scatter them far and wide. Purchase tracts and leaflets, and sow them in all the by-places of the land. In short, canvass your own county, and it is done. We cannot all do this literally as Miss Anthony did, but we can each one of us do what we are able to, and can help others who are competent to do more by sending them the "sinews of war." We can donate to the cause while living, and will, what we can no longer use, to it when we die. I am surprised, grieved, and disappointed that so few dying Infidels ever think of willing anything to our cause. We read obituary notices of good, true workers in our papers, but not one of them says even five dollars were bequeathed by the dead Liberal as a legacy to the cause. Here is Paine Hall, burdened with an unpaid debt for a whole generation, and there is the Bennett Hall, not yet even begun, and neither of them is once remembered by the most enthusiastic of our dying friends. How long, O Liberal friends, how long shall this be? Wake up and work. ELMINA.

WE hav Charles Watts's paper, the Secular Review, on sale. Yearly subscriptions also received. Price, single number, 7 cents; by the year, $2.75.

Remarkable Achievements in Grammar.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I was pleased with the deserved lesson in grammar which you last week administered to the editor of the New York Mail and Express. It will be useful to many others as well as to him, whose own faulty style shows that his criticisms of the language employed by Mr. Green were not founded upon his knowledge of grammar; they were inspired, rather, by his unfriendliness toward Freethinkers. Other inaccuracies might be pointed out besides the one you noted, which was copied from a like error of Mr. Green's, but as it was not put in quotation marks by the editor, you were justified in criticising it as his own. It is more than probable that he did not observe the mistake. He is evidently capable, however, of doing worse, as witness this sentence: "The secretary's name who issues this proclamation is Green." If that means anything, it means that the secretary's name issued the proclamation. It should read, to be correct, "The name of the secretary who issues this proclamation is Green." The learned author of "A Roman Catholic Canard," published at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, is guilty of a similar error, which will be found on page thirteen of that valuable little work; viz: "But that it was apoplexy appears from Dr. Manley's letter, who says he found the patient in a fever," etc. Again, in the Mail and Express, we hav, "A person with [against] whom Mr. Anthony Comstock waged a fierce and, we believe, a successful war." Here the use of the article "a" before both the adjectivs "fierce" and "successful," according to Quackenbos, would imply that two wars had been waged, one of which was fierce and the other successful. The statement of fact is likewise mixed. In one line we are informed that the association has issued a challenge, and in another we are told the secretary's name issues it. A man who will write thus carelessly is not justified in gratuitously picking another man up on the question of grammar.

It is a fact greatly to be deplored that many popular writers do not exhibit a high degree of grammatical accuracy. Even some who make language a profession and the study of a lifetime, often, through thoughtlessness or otherwise, lay themselvs open to criticism. Hear a man who has the credit, justly, I presume, among his admirers of knowing more about English than all the rest of the world: "Mr. Putnam propounded in the Colloquium, as his definition of science, the simple two words," etc. Why "simple two?" I had an impression that two was always simple. In the same article we are presented with the phrase "two additional and very ruling words." If when rain falls copiously we should say: "It is very raining," we should hav another instance of the same kind of diction. The writer here referred to, however, is an authority unto himself in the matter of grammar, and that which would appear to Lindlay Murray as a solecism may be but an instance of words standing in what is really their proper relation, discovered by the application of the science of Universology.

Further proofs that a man may be great without being grammatical are found in Dr. McCosh's yearly academic report. Dr. McCosh is president of the Princeton, N. J., College, and is, I believe, a reverend also. He is detected by a New York morning paper in the following list of errors in grammar and instances of carelessness of style:

"We hav been able to do so without our being met."
"Treachery and deceit at testing examinations."
"I trust we will be sustained."
"The public press, as a whole, are telling the colleges very plainly that they are going to excess."
"I am seeking to fill up this defect."
"Denying guilt to the faculty in the idea there is no evil in it."

Is it possible that much philosophy destroys a man's respect for the rules of composition?

Here is a case of nameless offense against the decencies of English, from the Advocate:

"Blasphemy and vulgarity were indulged in by the counsel for the defense, one of whom can rely with implicit certainty upon the laws of association to furnish him."

And here is another:

"One man Christ turned away; one prayer of such reasonableness that we all should pray it he refused."

Both are absolutely meaningless. How can we account for all these falls from the grace of good English? What can induce a writer to sign his name to such swosh as some of these quotations contain?

Robinson Crusoe was in an unfortunate plight when he had built a boat so large that he was unable to launch it; but his dilemma was as nothing compared with that of some of these men who hav thoughts to express, but are destitute of the faculty for putting them before the world in presentable English.

Sunbury, Pa. J. B. N.

THE last example of brotherly love is from Dallas, N. C. The Rev. Mr. Wetmore, an Episcopal clergyman was on his way to hold service in a mission church, but was stopped by a swollen creek. Thereupon a Baptist minister took Mr. Wetmore on his back and ferried him over, thereby preventing him, it may be remarked, from becoming more wet. This may be accepted as an illustration of the readiness with which Baptists take water.—Richmond State.

The League Secretary Abroad.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I am succeeding in my mission. On the wing as I am, I cannot write you full details; but I am receiving such support from the Liberals of Pennsylvania and Ohio, so far, that I am able to announce that conventions will be held in these two states immediately following the convention at Rochester, N. Y. I met our friends in Altoona and Pittsburgh, two prominent Liberal centers in Pennsylvania, laid the matter before them and obtained the appointment of committees of arrangement to carry out the plans. It was thought difficult to assemble a good full mid-week convention according to my preliminary program; also that, for the first convention, three days might prove too expensiv and too long, so Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 8th and 9th, were fixed upon for the time and Pittsburgh for the place. So please announce it to the ends of the earth, since happily The Truth Seeker circulates so far, that a state convention of the Liberals of Pennsylvania will be held in Pittsburgh on those dates. Many of the best speakers in the Liberal ranks will be there, and there is no doubt that the convention will be an eminent success.

In Ohio I hav met only the Liberals of this city as yet. I found here a Liberal sociable, appointed by our indefatigable worker, Mrs. H. S. Lake. After music, readings, and other sociable exercises, I was invited to open the budget of my mission, which I did in a brief statement of its objects. It was well received and a committee was appointed to meet and confer further with me to-morrow morning (Sunday), before Mrs. Lake's lecture. In the afternoon I go with her to Salem, where she lectures in the evening, and there I am invited to lay my plans before the Liberals of that place. Salem and Alliance are well-known Liberal centers, only thirteen miles apart, and there are enough of the faithful in these two places alone to make a full successful convention. But they will be reinforced by the whole Western Reserve and by the entire state. In my next I hope to be able to announce the appointment of a state convention for Ohio. T. C. Leland.

Alliance, Ohio, June 23, 283.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The Liberals of Pittsburgh were recently the recipients of a visit from T. C. Leland, the secretary of the National Liberal League. He is on a tour of observation, paying pastoral visits and looking after the spiritual welfare of his flock—of Liberal Leagues. The Pittsburgh Liberal League has for some time been contemplating the formation of a state organization, so the visit of the National secretary was hailed with delight. A special meeting of the board of directors was called and the matter thoroughly discussed, Mr. Leland being present and lending the benefit of his experience and judgment.

The conference ended in arrangements being made for a convention to be held in Pittsburgh September 8th and 9th, 1883, Mr. Leland appointing the following provisional state committee to act until said state convention is held: President, G. W. Baldwin, Linesville; First Vice-President, James E. Emerson, Beaver Falls; Second Vice-President, Hon. A. B. Bradford, Enon Valley; Secretary, Harry Hoover, Box 1027, Pittsburgh; Treasurer, Roman Staley, Pittsburgh; W. F. Porter, 2531 N. Front st., Philadelphia; D. W. Perry, Harrisburg; Hon. R. S. McCormick, Franklin; John R. Kemp and D. R. Christian, Altoona; S. F. De Jones and A. J. Harnack, Pittsburgh; G. C. Fink, Foxburg; Samuel Werner, Scranton; Eva A. H. Barnes, Potter county; William Ridinger, Irwin Station; Hugo Andriessen, Beaver; John Shattuck, and Mrs. Jas. E. Emerson, Beaver Falls; W. F. Schade and Henry Juergens, Pittsburgh.

From Pittsburgh Mr. Leland went to Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, where a new League is in successful operation. It is to be hoped that his visit to the various Leagues throughout the country may be productiv of much good.

Yours fraternally, Harry Hoover,
Sec. Pittsburgh Liberal League.

June 23, 283.

Lectures and Meetings.

Mrs. Amelia H. Colby will answer calls for Sunday lectures in New York and vicinity. Her address until September next will be 123 west Eagle street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The theological debate between Liberalism's champion, Col. John R. Kelso, of Modesto, Cal., and superstition's defender, Elder Briggs, came off as announced, at Elliott, Cal., lasting four days. The question was: "Resolved, That the Bible is not the inspired word of God." The audiences averaged about four hundred. The debaters then adjourned to Acampo, and occupied another four days in discussing the question, "Resolved, That the religion taught by the Bible is of God." At this place the attendance averaged eight hundred. Concerning the result a correspondent writes that though Elder Briggs fought like a bulldog, and had the assistance of Elder Wilkes, of Stockton, and besides was on his own ground and in his own stronghold, Col. Kelso vanquished him at every point, "leaving him and his 'Gawd' in a sadly demoralized condition." The Liberals of the coast are jubilant over the debate.

The Newark, N. J., Liberal League will hold a Basket Picnic on the Fourth of July, at Woodside Park. The exercises begin at 10 A.M. Tickets, 25 cents. Children under twelve years free. People from this city desiring to attend can reach Newark on any of the railroads and by taking the Broad street or Belleville horse cars reach the ground. The Greenwood Lake railway trains stop at Woodside Park, only a minute's walk from the picnic grounds. The Greenwood Lake trains leave the ferry at 23d street, this city, at 5:45, 8:15, and 11:45 A.M.; at 3:15, 4:15, 5:15, and 6:15 P.M., and from foot of Chambers street this city, at 6, 8:30 A.M., and 12 M., and 3:40, 4:40, 5:40, and 6:20 P.M. The League would like to see as many of its New York friends, and also from the surrounding country, as can make it convenient to attend. Picnickers can take their own lunches, or purchase refreshments on the ground, as best suits themselvs.

Notes.

During a cyclone in the West a copy of the New Testament was carried a distance of thirty miles. This is by long odds the biggest lift the gospel has had in the West for many a weary year.

Grace church in this city is to hav a new marble spire 219 feet high, costing $60,000. A sixty-thousand-dollar spire, the Norristown Herald thinks, ought to relieve a great deal of distress among the poor and bring many souls to repentance.

The Missionary Review says that the "Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions," is covered with "an enormous growth of something worse than barnacles," and that it should be "hauled on the dry dock and scraped." The intimation is that there is needless expense somewhere, but as the money expended is wasted anyway, it makes little difference whether the heathen get it or the officers of the board. Foreign missions are as big a humbug as the Young Men's Christian Association.

The working men of Sheffield, England, are going to make fools of themselvs by presenting to the archbishop of York a cabinet of cutlery, consisting of two-hundred pieces elaborately engraved. What the archbishop ever did to earn this the dispatch does not say. Indeed, it is hard to see what the archbishop does that he should be supported by the working men, many of whom hav hard work to provide food for their families. And sometime when in their deluded despair they appeal to the church, she will, through her archbishop, turn the cold shoulder upon them as Archbishop Purcell did to his starving creditors. Then they will wish they had given him some more knives in a different way.

On the occasion of Mr. Beecher's birthday exercises, the World quotes "an old sinner" in this wise: "I like Beecher. He has done more to cool off Hades than any man that ever lived. Why, when I was a boy the fires were blazing day and night down there, and no orthodox preacher ever thought of preaching a sermon without calling attention to the blazing brimstone lake. Since Beecher has been at work he has cooled the place off so that even the red-hot Salvation Army preachers are slow to talk about hell-fire." And adds: "This is in a measure true, but after Mr. Beecher extinguished the fires Bob Ingersoll came along and closed up the place entirely, so, in the nature of things, he must be as great a man as Beecher." The World appears to be adding heresy to its other good qualities.

A discussion has been kept up for some time between Prof. Smith, of Andover, Mass., and that religious curiosity known as Joe Cook. A short time since these two theologians were taking a friendly hack at each other in oral debate. Cook accused Smith of being unsound on the creed. Smith replied: "I shall not allow any man on earth to dictate to me what that creed means." The edifying scene that followed is thus described by the Boston Herald:

"It had been announced before Prof. Smith began to speak that he would be the last speaker of the day, but his last words were hardly uttered before Mr. Cook, looking like a maniac and acting like a savage, sprang from his seat, and, forgetting the courtesy due the presiding officer, assaulted Prof. Smith with the question, 'How do you reconcile probation after death with loyalty to the creed?' It was the brutal (that's what everybody called it) challenge to a personal fight then and there; but Mr. Alpheus Hardy in the chair commanded Mr. Cook to sit down, and the Goliath of orthodoxy fell back into his seat as if a ton's weight was in Mr. Hardy's words. The last kick of a vanquished man had been given, and, after the singing of the doxology, the company was declared dissolved."

Plymouth church was gorgeous last Sunday with $500 worth of flowers, it being the occasion of Mr. Beecher's seventieth birthday. The pastor made no allusion to his having reached the allotted age of man. With the preliminary remark that "an honest God is the noblest work of man," he preached a sermon on "A Narrow God." Said he:

"Your God, and to a large extent the God of the church; one who has been through the infirmities of the ages—the God that men hav conceived and hav preached, has been narrowed until he represents the inferior sentiments of men, and only here and there glimpses of the larger and higher ones, till he is pictured like a long man, lean and narrow, with a diamond in his shirt front. So God is represented, long and lean and narrow, with here and there a virtue stuck on. The Roman Catholics hav a God which they own substantially, and are ready to let out to all men that will come under their dominion, and that great church to-day has a God as narrow and sectarian as the Protestant church has. If you were going to belt the two Gods I don't know which would hav the largest diameter, the Protestant or the Catholic God. So the Protestants quarrel among themselvs, and it is said that if you take away the fear of the church all the heathen will be damned, you will destroy the missions; that without the ability to uncover hell, unless we can picture the heathen pouring over into endless perdition—that doctrin of damnation—the missions must be discontinued. My God is the God of the whole earth. Everything that is just, everything that is pure, everything that loves holiness, enters into this conception of God. How should I say our father, if I believed the horrible doctrin of Calvin?"

This as far as it goes is good enough Infidelity for most Freethinkers.

Liberalism is about to be rescued. A Liberal Union Club, we understand, has just been organized in Boston, embracing in its membership ex-Rev. Francis E. Abbot, the Rev. John W. Chadwick, the Rev. Minot J. Savage, the Rev. David H. Clarke, and the Rev. James K. Applebee. This list of names is a good index to the objects of the new club. The conspicuous abundance of the title "Rev.," whatever it may mean, is a sufficient giv-away, even if the following alleged objects had not been set forth in its constitution:

"To vindicate the good name of Liberalism, or Free Religion, now painfully tarnished by the complicity of many so-called Liberal societies and individuals in agitations for mischievous and demoralizing measures, and scarcely less tarnished by the silence and indifference of many others respecting these anti-social agitations—particularly such as aim to destroy the foundations of the marriage institution and the sacred ties of home, or totally to repeal the United States laws which protect the mails from criminal abuse by those who seek to defraud the ignorant or corrupt the young."

The obvious slur herein contained is aimed at the National Liberal League. Every one who knows anything about the League knows how completely it fails to apply to that body. We wish this new club all the success it deserves, and that is the worst thing we can think of to say about it.

It seems that the Christians of Australia are not essentially different from their European and American neighbors. The same streak of bigotry runs through them the world over. It comes from the nature of the religion. And they are the same in hypocrisy too. Everywhere they trample upon the rights of others. They are back-door people, doing out of sight what they publicly condemn. This from the Melbourne Bulletin will illustrate:

"Those godly Christians who are horror-stricken at the bare thought of opening the Public Library on the Sabbath are not so particular in other ways. It seems they are possessed of a conscience so elastic that it can be stretched to suit itself to any circumstances when self-interest demands it. We are told on the very best authority that carpenters and decorators had a hard day's work on Easter Sunday in the Melbourne Town Hall, preparing and fixing the woodwork of the stalls of the All Nations' Bazaar, which was to be opened the next day in aid of a church."

And the Bulletin adds:

"Couldn't the trustees of the Library charge a small admission fee and giv it to the Sabbatarians, who, we hav no doubt, are like most religious bodies, uncommonly fond of the mammon of all unrighteousness! This would probably satisfy their qualms of conscience."

At Sydney they hav some more just like the Melbourne hypocrits, as the following from the Sydney Liberal shows:

"In the Witness 'A Christian' writes an open letter to Mr. Stuart adjuring him as 'a servant of God,' to stop all Sunday trains and trams, except those running to suit the churches. Sweet Christian! he would like to adjure Mr. Stuart to drive the people into the churches with whips as they used to in the olden times, only he is afraid. When will these Christians learn that man's greatest happiness is God's greatest happiness, or he is not God but devil?"

Last Sunday being Mr. Beecher's birthday anniversary, the Herald obtained from him some recollections of his previous struggles, political and theological. Those regarding slavery must be interesting reading for the churches of to-day. He shows that nearly every minister in the land was for slavery, and proved it a divine institution by the Bible. The split in the Presbyterian church, he says, was really on the slavery question, and not on matters theological, as is now given out by the interested parties. All of the Southern Christians were in favor of slavery, and the Northern churches were "only leavened" with antislavery sentiments. Mr. Beecher preached the first antislavery sermons, and about the only ones ever preached, in Indianapolis, Ind. The churches were all dead against him. After he removed to Brooklyn he was engaged to write for the Independent, but his antislavery opinions were not sustained by the three other clergymen editors, Revs. Leonard Bacon, R. S. Storrs, and Joseph Thompson. But he converted the publisher, Mr. Bowen, and "stuck right at it." In 1850, when the controversy came up about Clay's Omnibus bill, including the Fugitiv Slave laws, Mr. Beecher was thoroughly roused, and in the pulpit and with his pen attacked with the utmost earnestness the infamous Fugitiv Slave bill. And when Webster made his fatal apostasy on the 7th of March, 1850, he joined with all Northern men of any freedom loving spirit in denouncing it and denouncing him. Forthwith, after a paralysis of a few weeks, his friends determined to save him by getting all the old clergymen—such men as Dr. Spring, Dr. Lord, of Dartmouth, and the Andover professors. The effort was to get every great and influential man in the North to stand up for Webster. Then it was that Mr. Beecher "flamed." The pro-slavery church conspirators failed utterly. Mr. Beecher's memory is very tenacious—too tenacious for the good of the hypocritical churches of to-day who would hav the world think that they alone wiped away the hideous blotch of slavery upon our civilization. It is a noteworthy fact that all the leaders of the antislavery movement either were or are now Liberals. The Quakers, too, are rapidly breaking through to the light. These must be galling facts for the church to consider.

Correspondence Wanted.

Ho! Forward to the front!
Ye "lords of creation," and giv ear to our petition.
We summon ye from north and south, from east and west,
We widows three—all differing in personnel.
A counterpart we seek of temperamental adaptation.
In nature, kindly molded must he be;
In principle and creed, loyal, true, and free;
In financial wealth, enough to share;
In habits, gross—not dare!
In years upward of forty-three.
Description plain, with stamp and "photo," mail to me.

Ellen LeClair,
New York City P. O.

Communications.

The Epistles of Paul to the Corinthians.

Let us now consider in connection with the account of Paul's mission at Corinth a few points in the two epistles to the Corinthians.

1. Only one visit is mentioned in Acts, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to find a time where a second one can come in. But Paul repeatedly refers to a second one (1 Cor. xvi, 3–8; 2 Cor. ii, 1; xii, 14, 21; xiii, 1, 2). The two visits must hav preceded the first epistle, and a third was contemplated.

2. He refers in the first epistle (v, 9) to a former one. Two apocryphal letters exist, one from Paul and the other from the Corinthians, which Dr. Davidson says are manifest forgeries of the eleventh century or later.

3. We again call attention to the tampering with the original text by the Greek scribes. In every instance where the Syriac has Aramean the Greek has Hellen (1 Cor. i, 22, 23, 24; x, 32). And one of these corruptions (i, 23) was made since the fifth century; for the earlier codices hav ethnesi (gentiles) instead of Hellesi (Greeks).

Again, the Syriac has gentiles (ommah) but once (2 Cor. xi, 26), while in the two other instances where the Greek has gentiles (1 Cor. v, 1; x, 20) the Syriac has the profane (chonbah).

4. Paul deplores the contentions among the Corinthians reported to him by the house of Chloe (i.e., by her servants); one saying, "I am of Paul;" another, "I am of Apollos;" another, "I am of Kepha," and another, "I am of Messiah" (i, 11–13). Let no one glory in men; all things are theirs, and they are Messiah's, and Messiah is God's (iii, 21–23). Paul has begotten them by preaching; therefore be like him. He has sent to them Timothy, his beloved son, to recall them to his (Paul's) ways in Messiah (iv, 15–17).

5. Paul did not preach to them in magnificent speech nor in wisdom (ii, 1). He could only talk to them as babes in Messiah (iii, 1). Query: Did Paul, a Jew, or Timothy, an Aramean of Iconium, preach to the handful of Corinthian disciples in the Greek tongue?

6. He wished all men to be like him in purity (vii, 7). So reads the Syriac. And after a dissertation on the marriage question, which we forbear to repeat, he says: "Hav we not authority to carry about with us a sister as a wife, just as the other legates and the brothers of our Lord, and as Kepha?" (ix, 5). The particle as is in the Syriac version. We leave the reader to interpret its meaning; also to judge whether Paul considered Kepha a legate; and if neither Kepha nor James, the Lord's brother, was a legate, what other persons were, in Paul's estimation?

7. He says: "If one uncircumcised be called, let him not become circumcised. For circumcision is nothing, neither is uncircumcision" (viii, 18, 19). And yet the writer of Acts tells us that Paul circumcised Timothy, an Aramean!

8. An idol, in Paul's estimation, is nothing, but he would hav the brethren abstain from eating in an idol temple, lest by so doing they cause the weak to stumble and perish, for whom the Messiah died (viii, 4, 10, 11). "What the profane (Gr. ethne, gentiles) sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons, and not to God" (x, 20).

9. Paul says that he and Barnabas hav a right to forbear labor; that our Lord commanded that those who proclaim his gospel should liv by his gospel; but nevertheless he himself preached without cost. He made himself a servant to every man that he might gain many. To the Jews he was a Jew that he might gain the Jews; to those without the law he was as without the law, except the law of the Messiah. In short, he was all things to all men that he might save all (ix, 6–22).

10. He describes the last supper in almost the exact words of Luke's gospel. But Luke's gospel is undoubtedly later, and has considerably more about it, some of which has been added since the time of Marcion, in the middle of the second century. Nor did Paul make the blunder which the synoptics hav done, of identifying the last supper with the passover feast. "Our passover," says Paul, "is the Messiah, who was slain for us" (1 Cor. v, 7). Paul's Messiah was stoned and hanged on the day before the passover, and thus became a substitute for the slain lamb. He appeared in the end of the world and was sacrificed once for all remaining time, until the second coming of the glorified son of God.

11. Paul says: "God hath placed in his church, first, legates; after them, prophets; after them, teachers; after them, workers of miracles; after them, the gifts of healing, and helpers, and leaders, and various kinds of tongues" (xii, 28). But the apostle does not approve of speaking in tongues without interpretation by a prophet. And though he himself can speak with tongues more than all of them, yet he would rather say five intelligible words than ten thousand in an unknown tongue. If all speak at once with tongues, strangers coming in will say, "These people are crazy." Let not more than two or three speak, and each one in turn, while some one interprets; but if there is no interpreter let the speaker be silent (xiv, 1–28).

12. "Let your women be silent in the church; for it is not permitted them to speak, but to be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they wish to be informed on any subject, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is immodest for women to speak in the church" (xiv, 34, 35).

13. Paul's account of the death and resurrection of the messiah, we hav fully considered in a former article.

14. "What shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not?" (xv, 29). This passage is a puzzle to commentators. Tertullian and Chrysostom tell us that the Marcionites used to put a living person under the bed of one who died without baptism; then they asked whether he desired to be baptized; the living man answering that he did, they baptized him in place of the departed. Epiphanius relates a similar custom among the Corinthians. Did Paul allude to a custom of this kind which even in his days had begun to prevail among heretics? (Smith's Bib. Dic., art. Baptism). We suspect he did, and that he favored the "heresy;" for the so-called heretics were the first propagators of Christianity, and they flourished before the Christian era, contemporary with or prior to Paul.

15. "The seed which thou sowest is not quickened unless it die" (xv, 36). Not so; if a seed dies it stays dead.

16. Paul orders collections to be taken on each first day of the week, and when he comes to Corinth he will send the bounty by messengers to Jerusalem, with a letter, or perhaps go in person (xvi, 1–4). The saints at Jerusalem were always beggars, dependent on the bounty of foreign devotees. It is so now.

17. The apostle is expecting to go to Corinth via Macedonia; and perhaps he will winter there. At present he will continue at Ephesus until Pentecost; i. e., sometime between the 5th of May and the 16th of June (xvi, 5–8).

18. He is expecting Timothy to come to him via Corinth (10–11).

19. He says he entreated Apollos to go to Corinth, who was not inclined to go now, but might do so by and by (xvi, 12). Apollos was at Corinth soon after Paul left the city.

20. The household of Stephanas, Paul says, were his first fruits of Achaia (xvi, 15). But according to Acts, Dionysius, Damaris, and others appear to hav been the first fruits (Acts. xvii, 34).

21. "All the churches that are in Asia salute you. Aquila and Priscilla, with the church in their house salute you" (1 Cor. xvi, 19). Paul first met this couple at Corinth, and when he left that city they went with him to Ephesus, where their dwelling has now become converted into one of the churches of Asia.

22. "Whoever loveth not the Lord Jesus, the messiah, let him be accursed: maran atha" (xvi, 22). "Maranatha is a Grecized form of the Aramaic words maran atha, 'our Lord cometh'" (Smith's Bib. Dic.). This is another evidence that Paul's epistles were written in Aramaic.

23. The first epistle to the Corinthians is from Paul and Sosthenes; the second is from Paul and Timothy. They are both generally believed to hav been written in the same year, one in the spring and the other before the end of the year. The first was written at Ephesus, and the second probably from some place or places in Macedonia.

24. The second epistle was evidently written or dictated in haste and in agitation of mind. Its style is harsher, obscurer, and looser than any other of Paul's writings, says Davidson; and he adds that though Paul is capable of expressing his conceptions in smooth and appropriate language, "he never writes good Hellenistic Greek." "Antichrist" sees no evidence that Paul ever wrote Greek; and such is the judgment of Bolten, Bertholdt, the late President Stiles, of Yale College, the late Dr. Murdoch, translator of the Peshito, and other eminent scholars.

25. Paul refers to a sickness that brought him nigh unto death in Asia (2 Cor. i, 8–11). The writer of Acts says nothing about any sickness.

26. In his journey to Macedonia, he seems to hav had a motiv for avoiding Corinth, to wit, grief at the conduct of one of the Corinthian brethren (i, 16, 23; ii, 1–11). He evidently refers to the case of the incestuous brother, who had "taken the wife of his father." In the first epistle (v, 1–5) he recommended that they "deliver him over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that in spirit he may hav life in the day of the Lord Jesus Messiah." But now since the offender has been duly disciplined, Paul grows tender toward him and wants the brethren to forgiv and console the penitent.

27. Having thus avoided Corinth, he nevertheless hopes to come to them from Macedonia, and to take some of the brethren with him to Judea (i, 16).

28. He refers to the preaching of the gospel at Corinth by himself, Silvanus, and Timotheus (i, 19). The writer of Acts has Silas and Timothy come to Corinth while Paul is there, but says nothing of any preaching by the two former.

29. Paul's journey to Macedonia is via Troas, where he is disappointed in not meeting Titus (ii, 12, 13). This is his second visit to Troas, both of which were transient. Passing over into Macedonia he met Titus somewhere and was comforted (vii, 5–6, 13). Titus was just from Corinth and made a favorable report of things, having been sent there by Paul to see about this and other matters (xii, 18). Titus, like Timothy, appears to hav become at once a traveling preacher, and companion of Paul. We therefore believe that he was the Titus Justus, who lived next door to the synagog in Corinth.

30. Paul praises the churches of Macedonia for ministering spontaneously and beyond their ability to the wants of the saints. And he recommends to the Corinthians the continuance of the work of beneficence which they began a year ago under the ministry of Titus. This good work begun in Achaia Paul had gloried in before the Macedonians (viii, 1–16; ix, 2).

31. There was also sent to Corinth with Titus another brother whose praise was in all the churches, a minister expressly chosen by the churches to accompany Paul with this beneficence (viii, 18, 19). This brother, says Davidson, "is usually identified with Luke. Others suppose Silas or Silvanus, and De Wette proposes Trophimus. All is conjecture. It is likely that he was unknown to the Corinthians and subordinate to Titus, a circumstance which excludes Luke" (vol. i, p. 74).

32. A little further on Paul says: "If Titus be inquired about, he is my associate and assistant among you; or if our other brethren, they are the legates [Gr. apostoloi] of the messiah's glory" (viii, 23). What other brethren? Timothy, Silvanus, Sosthenes, Aquila, Apollos, Trophimus, Luke, Epaphroditus, et alios? Which one of the twelve apostles named in the gospels does Paul call an apostle? Possibly Kepha and John, but no more. James, the Lord's brother, is joined with Kepha and John; Epaphroditus is styled an "apostle" in Phil. ii, 25, and Paul uses the term elsewhere with no restricted application to twelve chosen disciples.

33. There is considerable boasting in the second epistle. Some envious or critical persons had said that Paul's epistles were weighty and forcible, but his bodily presence weak and his speech contemptible. To this he answers, "Such as we are in our epistolary discourse when absent, such also are we in action when present. For we dare not value or compare ourselvs with those who vaunt." But a little further on Paul does compare himself with his rivals or competitors, saying, "For I suppose I came not short of those legates who most excel. For though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge. Did I indeed commit an offense by humbling myself that ye might be exalted? and by proclaiming the gospel to you gratis? And I robbed other churches, and I took pay of them for ministering to you, and when I came among you and was needy I was burdensome to none of you; for the brethren who came from Macedonia supplied my wants; and in all things I kept myself, and I will keep myself from being burdensome to you" (xi, 5–9). And with growing indignation at the greater pretensions of some of his competitors in the ministry, he says: "For they are false legates, crafty workers, and feign themselvs to be legates of the messiah. And in this there is nothing strange. For if Satan feigneth himself an angel of light, it is no great thing if his ministers feign themselvs ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works. Again I say, let no one think of me as being a fool; or, if otherwise, receive me as a fool, that I may glory a little. . . . If they are Hebrews, so I also. . . . If they are ministers of the Messiah (in defect of understanding I say it) I am superior to them; in toils more than they, in stripes more than they, in bonds more than they, in deaths many times." And the apostle enumerates five scourgings, three beatings with rods, one stoning, three shipwrecks, a night and a day in the sea, perils from robbers, from his kindred, from the heathen, and from false brethren; perils in cities, in the desert, in the sea, and by rivers; in toil, in weariness, in anxiety, in hunger and thirst; in cold and nakedness. And he winds up with his escape from Damascus (xi, 13–33).

34. Proceeding in a like strain of foolish glorying, he comes to visions, and relates how fourteen years ago he was caught up to the third heaven where he heard ineffable words which it is not permitted a man to utter. But that he might not be exalted above measure thereby a thorn in the flesh was imparted to him as an angel of Satan to buffet him. This he besought the Lord thrice to remove, but the Lord answered, "My grace is sufficient for thee" (xii, 1–9).

35. Paul reminds the Corinthians of the signs, prodigies, wonders, and mighty deeds he wrought among them. And he specifies the first of these as "signs of the legates," whatever those may be. It would seem as if he exhibited himself as a test medium like some of our modern Spiritual lecturers.

36. Finally he speaks of the third time that he had prepared to come to them, and reminds them of what he said when he was with them the second time (xiii, 1, 2). The interval between his departure from Corinth and the writing of the first epistle is generally believed to be two or three years, and the time from his conversion about twenty years, or less. These calculations, however, are very uncertain, being based almost entirely on the book of Acts. Our own belief is that the epistles to the Corinthians were written some forty years, more or less, after Paul's conversion. That would make him about seventy years of age, and would allow say ten years more for him to extend his mission to the city of Rome, where he probably ended his life. The many scourgings, and the perils by land and sea which he refers to in the second epistle, would, it seems to us, imply a much longer ministry than twenty years; nor do we conceive that so extensiv an ecclesiastical organization as he describes could hav been established in two decades.

The Irrepressible Discussion.

Once again I am induced to put in a few words on the material and spiritual subjects. I hope the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will not look upon me as an intruder if I use a little dynamite to fracture the bed-rock of Materialism as advanced by some of the "hard-shell" advocates, as I find, after all that is said and what is being done in the world, that the fate of man, or his after condition, seems to be the most important subject of thought, and when taken in connection with the phenomena that are occurring daily, it is evident that the agitation of this question cannot stop until the world either receives fully or rejects totally the claims that are made in explanation of them.

To the Materialist I want to say that the subject of the atomic constitution of matter has been discussed since five hundred years before the Christian era, and it is only in part settled to this day. While the molecular theory and experiments of Dalton and others hav added something to clear it up, it is by no means certain, as an atom never was seen and cannot be magnified into view, by any microscopic experiments yet made, although the diameters range in the twenty thousands; and while no atom of inorganic matter is revealed, millions of animals are brought to view, fully organized, which seem to possess all the motor qualities of the animal life we are in daily contact with. Then we find germs of animals, which in time open and expand into full life by taking up their abode in water and the bodies of other animals. They are taken in by breathing, and it is a strong point with some of our most advanced doctors of medicin that the yellow fever and various epidemics are caused by imbibing animal germs from the infected atmosphere. Thus it will be seen that not only perfected animals, having organs of vision, locomotion, and, no doubt, feelings, or a nervous structure, and which seem to exercise the usual functions of life in the animal world we can see, and which manifest a degree of intelligence, exist in this unseen world, so diminutiv that a magnifying glass of twenty thousand diameters is required to bring them to our vision. Now if these animalcules are composed of perhaps millions of atoms, of various molecular combinations, the task of ever being able to find one atom is hopeless indeed, and the atomic theory must be put down under the head of speculativ science. Animal and germ life is a demonstrated fact, while the composition of inorganic matter is not known with certainty, and when we say that "the potencies of matter are the cause of all life," it is an assumption from beginning to end so far as unorganized matter is concerned.

It should be observed in connection with these facts that from a germ up through every stage of development and change of condition, a portion of matter is rejected, while a decided advance in being is made, so that as one form dies out a more perfect animal is the result, and this process is carried on even under our own eyes, as well as by microscopic observations. The order is, first the germ, then the grub, and next the butterfly, and so on. All lower forms are changing to higher forms of life, and the higher the animal form, the more durable, the more tenacious of life, is each.

I wish in this connection to make a statement that may excite opposition, but a careful study convinces me that it is correct. It is this: the unseen microscopic world is the world of causes. It pushes every particle of vegetable and animal life into this side of being, and always has done it, from the first time when the world was cool enough to sustain animal or vegetable life. The first of any sort of motor beings came from the clouds and air. While the cooling process of the earth was in progress, its atmosphere in places, and at certain altitudes, was already producing animal and vegetable germ life. And it will be found that the great stumbling-block in the way of evolution can be removed only by studying this starting-point of life. The "survival doctrin" will account for much pertaining to the changes in animal development, but the real cause must be sought in the regions of germ life. There is where all the essential varieties came from.

While this is true of all animals, including man, it is highly probable that every human being upon this earth was but an elementary or half-being before coming into this life. We originate in human germs by the combination of the male and female principles so far as physiology can aid us to discover. But if animal life germs are constantly developed into living animals by taking up their abode in the bodies of some other animals (as we know them to do), why may not the human germ, male and female, be attracted from the unseen world around us, by the laws of affinity and sex, which ultimately are developed into human beings by the process familiar to us all? So that primarily every human being was originally two half-beings, or a male and female germ, or elementary. This would require that all germ life should originate, not in the human body, but outside of it, and this would be so of all life, of every variety. The human body would be the cell from which development proceeded after the germ had taken up its residence therein. Hence every being has come into physical life from a germ life, and from the spirit world, we might call it.

Without pursuing this inquiry any farther at this point, I shall be content to let it go as a suggestion, and proceed to inquire into the probable futurity of this advancing tide of humanity.

If the Materialist objects to the possibility of a spirit on account of its intangibility, what has he to say to these myriads of animals that he cannot deny an existence, and which are equally intangible to his senses?

I propose now to prove the future existence of man by the best kind of evidence, founded on the most indubitable test, and that test is the laws of human intelligence. Paul speaks of the different kinds of flesh, birds, beasts, fishes, etc., and as an apt illustration I will call attention to the various classes of intelligence of animal life, but, above all, the power of human language exceeds all others, written or spoken. While man is able to imitate inferior animals, no such animal can approach to written human intelligence. A being higher than man might do so, but nothing less can.

The Materialist admits that phenomena take place which he cannot account for, but on the law of intelligence they are explainable. If I hold a slate in my own hand, and out of view or reach of any human agency, and then get a writing thereon purporting to come from an ascended spirit, and if the knowledge thus given coincides with my knowledge so as to bring about a recognition as to facts stated and as to handwriting, there is no better evidence to a sane man under heaven than this law of intelligence. If it were possible to establish the properties of matter by any such law and evidence, a man would be called a fool to doubt it. If I take an ordinary accordion, and by examination find it to be free from mechanical contrivances, and mentally request a tune to be played upon it, and if such a tune is played, I claim this could not hav been done by any occult force, unaccompanied by the knowledge of music; and here again the law of intelligence confirms my decision that it must be a spirit. If chairs and other material are caused to move around the room in an intelligent way, when I know that no human agency can produce it, I am bound to say it is due to the cause claimed for it, on the test of intelligence. No such motor, force, or thing has ever been seen or known in this life, as that ponderable objects should move without human contact, and yet manifest human intelligence. The telegraph or telephone must hav a mind at one or both ends of it, else no intelligence will be given. It is the weakest nonsense to talk about discovering some agent that is skylarking around this world to deceive and befog men into thinking themselvs immortal beings. There could be neither cause nor motiv in such an act unless the agent was intimately interested in the work.

The spirits claim to come in contact with us by means of affecting material things. They can make raps, and other noises, move materials about—books, chairs, tables, and various ponderable objects—and thereby manifest intelligence, which no other thing than a human intelligence can do.

The Materialist may admit all this, but will object because it requires the presence of a medium. They say the phenomena require "conditions." If such will inform us of anything that ever did take place without conditions, their objection would be valid. Everything that takes place anywhere must hav conditions, because this is a universe of law; therefore that is no argument whatever, and should be no objection to an honest inquiry.

It will be seen by the argument of human and spiritual intelligence that the tables are completely turned upon the Materialist. He does not deny the phenomena, and he cannot object to our argument unless he shows that there is a power in the universe that can supply the demand. The clergy hav attempted it by saying it is the devil, but as that assertion only complicates the difficulty by necessitating the proof of the existence of such a unipersonal, it becomes too weak for serious consideration. It would require a pretty smart devil to get around and do it all, to say the least. I do not in this include frauds, but the genuin. In conclusion I may say that when Nature is rightly and intelligently interpreted, she points directly to a future state for man of at least a more durable character than any of his former states, even if an absolute individual immortality should not exist. That there is no certainty as to the theory of the atomic constitution of animal germ life, there being no means of verifying an atom, or the identity of inorganic matter and animal life; that the atoms of animal life seem to be higher in order than those of inorganic matter, and that both are indestructible; and that the evidence of intelligence in what purport to be messages and motions from the spirit world, are an insurmountable and incontrovertible argument.

J. R. PERRY.

Wilkes Barre, Pa., June 13, 1883.

Joe Cook, the "Dude."

WHY DIDN'T HE THRASH THE DRUMMER?

From the Chicago Sentinel.

"I could thrash five such men," says the reverend, quite reverend, Joe Cook, the Boston dude.

Not very pious and charitable language for a preacher, to be sure, but it will compare with Joe's other eccentricities.

Joe is such a fighting cuss that we expect to see him giv up his preaching and enter the prize ring.

Still just why Joe didn't "thrash" the other fellow (who happened to be a drummer) is not explained—though it is said that the "other fellow" invited Joe out to settle matters in good old-fashioned fisticuff style, whereupon, instead of "thrashing" him, Joe summoned the entire police force of the town to escort him to and from the opera house when he went to deliver a lecture.

A HUMBUG AND FRAUD OF THE FIRST WATER.

From the Galesburg, Ill., Press and People.

From Joseph Cook's own account of his rumpus with the drummer, Gill, at Monmouth, Ill., last week, on his late tour, we are very certain that he ought to hav been slapped for his impertinence. The "scene" was begun and provoked, in the most uncalled-for manner, by Cook. Gill had a right to call for what he pleased that was on the bill of fare, raw if he chose, and it was an ungentlemanly impertinence in Cook, a stranger, to remark upon it in any manner, and he should hav "shut up" when he found his remark was displeasing. The fact is, the Rev. Joseph Cook is a humbug and a fraud of the very first water. His lectures are simply rehashes of what everybody has read or can find in the newspaper. His "originality" is worse than Gough's celebrated "apostrophe to water," written by a western Methodist preacher, printed forty years ago in all the Western papers, as the sermon of a Texas presiding elder at a camp-meeting. If the press would sit down hard on some of these plagiarists and literary thieves, the public would be saved a deal of money.

The only side of the story that has got into the papers is Rev. Joe Cook's story. Mr. Gill has not been "interviewed," squealed, or made a statement. He went about his business. But Cook has had the racket telegraphed to the ends of the earth in order to magnify Cook. To justify himself he has represented Gill as being in liquor and as raving round like a mad man. A man who will palm off upon a credulous audience the ideas and words of others as his own, will lie, and lie about a fracas which he himself provoked.

BOTH A LIAR AND A COWARD.

From Pomeroy's Democrat.

Reverend Joe Cook, of Boston, is a windy cuss. Not long since he so far forgot manners as to insult a drummer for eating raw beef at a supper table, then for fear he would hav a pulpit built over his eye, secured a police escort to the hall where he lectured. In a card he says he can whip five such men as the drummer. Then why was he afraid to go alone to the hall. Joe is a liar or a coward, and the indications are that he is both. He should engage to clean spittoons in the grog-shop of Sullivan, the Hittite, and keep away from drummers, who can easily beat wind vessels.

To Talmage.

Aloft there's a cherub that sweetly sings
He's waiting for you, for you;
With a harp and a crown and a pair of wings,
Rewards of merit and other things—
A robe and a golden shoe.

Oh, hasten, brother, and claim the prize
That's waiting for you, for you;
In tabernacles beyond the skies
Go warble your songs of paradise,
You clerical kangaroo.

There's nothing to keep you among us below,
A-waiting for you, for you.
Since hell went over and heaven must go,
And the circus is here with its monkey show,
Adieu, Brother Talmage, adieu!

"A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD;" 4 volumes, cloth, $6.50; leather, $9.50; morocco, gilt edges, $10.50

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - JUNE 30, 1883.

Honor to Whom Honor Is Due.

We find this mixture of truth and unfairness in last Monday's Sun:

"There is an organization of Infidels, called the New York State Freethinkers' Association, which will hold its annual meeting at Rochester on the 29th of August. In anticipation of that convention, the secretary of the Infidel society has issued a challenge to the 'Evangelical church of the United States.'

"Of course no sensible man would accept that offer and go to Rochester to defend his religious faith at that Infidel meeting. The arguments in favor of religion hav already been formulated a thousand times, and the Rochester Freethinkers know very well what they are if they are at all capable of conducting a controversy like that they invite. Not having been convinced before, there is no chance that their minds would be changed by what any advocate of faith could say in a two hours' speech. They only want the fun of a wordy battle.

"Such Infidels as those are worth very little attention from the church. They belong to the blatant class of unbelievers, and instead of drawing intelligent men away from religious faith, they are more likely to make their Infidelity odious. If the church had no other skeptical opponents to deal with, it could well afford to feel secure. Men who call themselvs Freethinkers specifically in these days, and band themselvs together under that name, are pretty sure to be philosophical quacks. They are not any freer in their thinking than other people, but are only readier than wise and learned men to express decided opinions about profound subjects, subjects yet unfathomed by the human intellect, and which are perhaps unfathomable by it.

"The Infidelity the church needs to fear, and which is really dangerous to it, is of a very different sort. It is not blatant, but quiet and reasonable. It does not assail Christianity, and delight itself by picking flaws in Christian priests and believers, as the old skeptics did, but is persistently at work undermining the foundations of modern theology with scientific dispassionateness. And the worst of it is this destructiv force is activ in the church itself.

"The Biblical criticism it anathematizes tends to the utter destruction of Christian theology, for it is directed against the foundation upon which theology rests, the inspiration of the Bible. If the Bible is not the word of God, the unimpeachable revelation of the divine will, the church has lost its chart and its compass. Yet we find Christian ministers and Christian scholars in these days treating the scriptures as if they were no more than human writings handed down to us from a remote age.

"The Rochester Freethinkers are of small importance, but these biblical critics inside of the church are dangerous enemies."

Concerning the Freethinkers who will assemble at Rochester on the 29th of August the Sun knows better than it says.

If the mildly heretical preachers are doing more effectiv work than the outspoken Infidels, why does not the church let the latter stay out of prison and put the former in? Bishop Colenso destroyed the sanctity of the Pentateuch, yet remained a bishop in the established church. Beecher rejects the doctrin of the atonement, has avowed there is no hell, yet he is a Congregational preacher to-day. The editor of the London Freethinker ridiculed the very basis of Christian superstition, and he is now in an English jail, with his publisher, while the man who sold the paper has only been released a few days.

These facts show who the church fears most, and who is the most destructiv to her claims.

Thomas Paine, Robert G. Ingersoll, and D. M. Bennett are three men who hav done more in this country to remove the effects of the teachings of the old witch-hanging and Quaker-flogging Puritans than any three preachers the Sun can name. They did not timidly throw away here a verse and there a chapter of the Bible, but boldly proclaimed its whole fallibility and showed its man-made character. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" was the forerunner of all the heretical and destructiv books that hav since been written. He laid the foundation in this country for the Beechers and Newtons to stand upon. Robert G. Ingersoll has done an immense work in bringing these facts before the general public. He has reached thousands and thousands who never read the "Age of Reason," Beecher's sermons, or Heber Newton's recent gently heretical work. The destruction of Christianity will come only when the whole people see what a gigantic fraud they hav for centuries been supporting; and the man who gets the facts before the greatest number is the one who accomplishes the most and best work. He is the man most feared by the church, but who will be most loved by the people when they come to their religious senses. D. M. Bennett did a mighty work, and it was because of his work against the church that he was imprisoned. The church feared him, and her leprous agent spent months in inveigling him into her toils. She sought to put the brand of convict on his forehead, and to drive him to a felon's death. She sought this that his influence might be destroyed. She failed, and to-day every Christian minister and every pious paper is lamenting the labor he performed against Christianity.

Why should the church seek to cast odium and obloquy upon all these men if she does not fear them and their influence? Why does not the Christian Home Secretary of England release the imprisoned editor? Simply because the church fears the work he is doing. Conway is doing in England the work the Sun seems to approve of; yet Conway may go on preaching till his hair is gray, and he will never hurt the church one-hundredth part as much as Charles Bradlaugh has within the past three years. What is needed is more men of the stamp of Bradlaugh and Bennett, like Ingersoll and Paine. These four men hav reformed the clergy of the English-speaking world. They hav forced a hundred thousand preachers to respect Infidelity. They hav driven them to put out the fires of hell and to talk a good deal less confidently of the other place. Thirty years ago a Unitarian was imprisoned as a heretic. To-day Unitarianism is orthodox Christianity. Thirty years from now the church will be so reformed that the preachers of to-day will not recognize their own theology. Hell will hav entirely disappeared; heaven will be only a "state of mind," and all the angels will be wearing earthly garments.

We do not depreciate the work of the more liberal-minded ministers. On the contrary, we welcome their thought. Only, all that they are saying has been said before by better and braver men, and we want the pioneers to hav the credit due them in coming time, when it will be an honor to hav been a heretic.

The Clerks and the Clergy.

It is gratifying to see that a portion, and the most intelligent portion, of the working men of this city are awakening to the fact that the church not only cares nothing for their interests, but is one of their worst oppressors. A movement is on foot to get business men and manufacturers to allow their clerks and employees a half holiday on Saturday during the hot weather. It meets, of course, with opposition, and the clerks complain that they cannot get the indorsement of the clergy in their reasonable request, as they (the ministers) are entirely in sympathy with the money power. It is the clerks' own fault that they did not know this before, for their appeal shows how little they understand the position of the churches. Of course the ministers are not going to take sides against the men who pay their salaries. The preachers' pretentious love of humanity is only love of self and power, and they would walk over the corpse of every working man in the country to get that power. How much the Christian ministers and laymen care for the laborers is well shown by an incident that happened in Brooklyn not long ago. One of the churches was deeply in debt, and the pastor made a fervent appeal to his parishioners, who included some very wealthy and shrewd business men. One of these responded to the pastor's call with a donation of $1,000. Meeting this man's bookkeeper a few days after, the preacher said, "Your employer is a liberal man, isn't he?" "How so?" inquired the bookkeeper, who had worked for the man a long time but had never found him very liberal. "Why, he gave our church a thousand dollars." "When was that?" "Last week." "Oh, yes!" and the light dawned upon the bookkeeper. "That was the week he cut down all the salaries in the store."

The man is not only a church-member, but is the largest individual publisher of religious works in this city.

The Central Labor Union held a session last Sunday night, and some of the members took occasion to hit the clergy some hard raps. Beecher's well-known dollar-a-day-on-bread-and-water-for-the-laborer sermon was flung in his face by Mr. Jablinosky, while Mr. Haller said that he and his union (the Cigar Maker's Progressiv Union) would never seek the aid of priest or preacher to obtain the desired short hours. He told the audience some plain truths about the clergymen, winding up with the true statement that they hav always been the oppressors of the poor and the laborers. Some others made remarks to the same effect, the recent manifesto of the pope against the Irish being cited. One of the members stigmatized the appeal to the clergy as the greatest blunder that could hav been made. As well appeal to the tiger to spare the fawn. The French Revolution was frantic resistance by the laborer against two accursed despots—the church and an aristocracy of blood and money.

The indifference of the clergy toward the laborers will hav the good effect of revealing to a few at least the heartlessness of Christianity.

Are We Learning What Science Is?

We publish this week a third article from the pen of Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews on "A Definition of Science," in reply to the questions raised in previous issues by Mr. S. P. Putnam. This article, we expect, will call forth the popular objection to the writings of this eminently learned man. It will be said that the writer's meaning, if he hav one, is obscured by a superabundance of words—words, too, with which no one but Mr. Andrews himself is familiar. Many will wonder, with Mr. John Storer Cobb, whether he has attempted to throw light upon the subject and has failed, or has intended to envelop it in obscurity and has succeeded. We are ourselvs constrained to say that this objection does not seem to us altogether groundless. We hav often questioned why a man with so much knowledge as Mr. Andrews is everywhere admitted to possess, and having so much information to impart of value to the world, should, through a seeming lack of insight, or wisdom, or something or other, expose himself continually and persistently to this sort of just criticism. Other scientific writers hav this fault to a greater or lesser extent, but the fact that their writings are more talked of than read ought to be a lesson to the advocates of new ideas. Mr. Andrews knows, perhaps, as much as any other man about the subject of science. He has the undoubted right to clothe his thoughts in whatever language suits him best. Any criticism which we or our readers might make upon that language would probably hav no weight whatever with him in that regard, from the fact that his pre-eminent learning makes him the better judge. Nevertheless the direction that straws take indicates which way the wind is blowing, and straws are useful to that extent.

Mr. Andrews believes in looking at every question from all sides. If an objection is to be made, he desires to hear it at the outset. In his philosophy there are three terms—there are unism, duism, and trinism. Unism, if we grasp the idea, refers to the thing itself standing alone; duism stands for the opposit thing, also standing alone; the trinism joins the two. To apply the methods of Universology to the present question, let the communication of Mr. Andrews, in all its metaphysical length, breadth, and depth, represent the first. Mr. Petty's friendly letter of June 2d, in which he uses the homely but expressiv phrase, "Preach cream and practice sour milk," shall exemplify the opposit. Now would not an application of trinism to these articles, the dynamic unity of their opposing characteristics, effect a gratifying result? Giv to the essay on the workingman's degraded condition a modicum of Mr. Andrews's higher philosophy, and to the definition of science a moiety of Mr. Petty's refreshing nearness to the ground on which we dwell, and the touch of nature in them both would make their authors kin. It is probable that neither of these gentlemen will pay the compliment to the other of reading his article. Both will be read, however, with interest, though by people with widely differing tastes. With the modification which we hav suggested the two would doubtless be equally enjoyed by all.

THE TRUTH SEEKER feels that it owes to Mr. Andrews the privilege of printing his reply to Mr. Putnam, since it has accorded to the latter gentleman space in which to set forth his own views and to invite the Great Universal Preacher into the field of controversy. He should remember, however, that life is short and that his communications are long. There may be no hereafter. Those who do not believe there is will be loth to start in to read a seven-column newspaper article on that which should be given the casual reader in small doses in order that it may take effect properly. However high the source of anything, if continued long enough, there is danger that it will ultimately run into the ground. Nearly everybody knows what knowledge is without being told. Knowledge is what we know. "Systematized knowledge" is a definition of science that probably would gain nothing by being added to. Transcendentalism and metaphysics are not very clearly distinguished from each other in the average mind. Some one has referred to them as two holes in a sand-bank; a storm washes away the sand without disturbing the holes. Most people will be inclined to let that definition stand. What, then, becomes of this discussion about science? In our opinion it merely furnishes the disputants an opportunity to discuss the so-called science of Universology. We trust that all will see the propriety of keeping to the subject and not transcending the bounds of reasonable space.

There is the widest field for thought in Universology. Either Mr. Andrews has found the fount of truth or his universal science is an ingenious device, apparently the most gigantic ever attempted. Different people will take different views of it, but the majority will remain of the opinion that the whole of truth has not as yet been discovered. We feel convinced that close attention to Mr. Andrews's definition of science will show that he sees the point clearly himself, however obscure it may at first appear to others. If out of this discussion shall come a better idea upon doubtful questions, part of the mission of THE TRUTH SEEKER will hav been accomplished. If we are instrumental in bringing before the world for the first time truths hitherto unrecognized, and that exist in the Nature of Things, America will owe it to THE TRUTH SEEKER that she is first upon the field in universal science as she is in universal mental liberty.

Religious Prejudices in Politics.

The Cleveland Leader of June 16th has the following dose of wormwood and gall for the Index:

"Unless a paper published in his own city has stated that which is false, and there is no reason to think it has, then the nomination of George Hoadly for governor of Ohio will be the deepest and most outrageous insult ever offered to the God-fearing people of the state. It is well known that Hoadly is an Infidel of the rankest sort, but few people will be prepared for the statement published at his own home that he is one of the vice-presidents of the notorious society which issues that vilest of religion-hating and society-degrading sheets, the Index. Bob Ingersoll would scorn to disgrace himself by having anything to do with the disgusting doctrins of such a publication. Yet the Democratic party is shameless enough to ask the moral, Christian people of Ohio to smirch the fair fame of the commonwealth by electing George Hoadly to fill its highest office. It is needless to say that the impudent request will be treated with the contempt it deserves."

The Index, many of our readers will doubtless remember, is the organ of the Free Religious Society of Boston. We will leave the two religious papers to fight out their own battles. But to the Leader we would say that Judge Hoadly is an Infidel, that the Democratic party of Ohio has chosen him as its candidate for governor, and the prospects are that he will be elected unless the churches unite to defeat him simply because he is an Infidel. He is, the New York Sun says, "an able man, a learned politician, a forcible speaker, a judicious adherent of democratic principles, and he may be relied upon for an honest administration of his important office." And the Herald says he is "a man of principle who is determined to stand by his principles;" but, from the moment his name was put forward as a possible candidate, the hounds of the church hav been slandering him. Circulars stating that he disbelieved in the Christian religion were issued and sent out all over the state of Ohio, and delegates were asked to reject him simply and solely because he is an Infidel.

That this species of warfare, with religious prejudices for weapons, had its effect is seen by the utterances of a few delegates. One Joseph Bolander, evidently a deacon in some rural church, voiced his stupidity in these lurid sentences:

"The people in the country are honest, God-fearing folks, and they never would support a man who has the least thing in common with Bob Ingersoll. I know that I would not hav anything to do with such men. I think they are cranks, and I would sooner vote for Garfield's assassin. Such men are dangerous—dangerous to the nation, for if their belief, or an absence of belief, ever prevailed, order and society would hav an end."

Another showed his pitiful ignorance by saying "he'd be damned if he would ever vote for one of those infernal agnosts." The political opinion of such intelligent critics is very valuable. Their information upon the subject is so unlimited, their dispassionateness so marked, their courtesy so great, that the church must feel that in them she has powerful allies. A man who would rather hav Guiteau for governor than an honest unbeliever, and another who knows so little about Agnostics that he calls them "agnosts," must certainly be capable of great discrimination in religious concerns. They show how fit they are to take part in making laws for a free country by denying freedom of thought.

This carrying religion into politics is one of the great evils that afflict this country. Two hundred years ago the church would hav burnt Mr. Hoadly. To-day it cannot do it. Its rage is impotent to do him bodily harm. Slander is the weapon of defeated malice, and that weapon the church proposes to use against him. Undoubtedly Christians would rather see a dishonest Christian elected than an honest Freethinker. If Mr. Hoadly was an Infidel and at the same time hypocritical enough to deny that fact, the Leader would see nothing wrong in his being elected. It is his honesty of expression the Leader objects to. To defeat him religious prejudices are excited and passions aroused. The church is to rule the state and none but Christians put on guard. This is living under a practical theocracy, a pious despotism as odious as Christianity is false. In placing the creed of a candidate above his reputation for honesty and ability, the church, as voiced by the Leader, shows just how much it loves the government which protects the utterance of these treasonable sentiments. That this government was established by the Infidels it never takes into consideration, or, if it does, sedulously suppresses the facts. From all we can learn, Mr. Hoadly is a broad-minded, honest, able statesman, and deserving the support of intelligent people, and if the Christians make a religious issue of the campaign, he ought to get the support of every Liberal regardless of previous political affiliations. It is not in keeping with our form of government, neither is it right, to make religious belief a test of fitness for office, but when the church does it she should be beaten on her own ground. Suffocate her with her own brimstone.

What Two Liberal Papers Should be Ashamed of.

The Radical Review says:

"The Freidenker, remarking on the Freethinkers' Convention to be held in Rochester, doubts whether any good can come of it, considering that the invitation has been extended to Freethinkers, Liberals, Radicals, Materialists, Spiritualists, Unitarians, and even orthodox Christians. We confess to share our contemporary's misgivings. We hold to the opinion that ten thorough Materialists will accomplish more good than a society of ten thousand members in which the advocates of all shades of opinion are mixed hodge-podge together."

The Freidenker is an exclusivly German periodical. The Radical Review is edited by a young man who has studied German authors till he has become thoroughly saturated with the German phase of Socialistic Liberalism. He cannot see any good in anything not German. An exclusivly Materialistic convention would yield good fruit in making the basic principles of Materialism more widely known, but in this country there is what may be called a broad American Liberalism, which has for its immediate object the winning of constitutional rights and liberties now denied us Infidels. These objects, which we hav often reiterated, are: total separation of church and state; secularization of the public schools; the abolition of Sunday laws; the abolition of chaplaincies, and the prohibition of public appropriations for church purposes. To accomplish these it makes no difference whether the petitioner is a Spiritualist or Materialist. These are non-essential points. The Liberal wants his rights and is bound to hav them. A convention such as the Rochester convention will be is a grand moral protest against the usurpation of these rights by Christians. The larger the convention the more effectiv will be the protest. Those who throw cold water on the assemblage evidently care more for their own sectarian triumph—something they loudly decry in the church—than for the grand objects which American Liberalism has in view. We regret exceedingly to see it.

The Monument Fund.

Since the acknowledgment last week the following sums hav been received:

Prev'sly acknowl'd,	$940 17	J. T. Brown,	1 50
Charles Moore,	1 00	Geo. B. Becker,	1 75
R. W. Barcroft,	2 50	Frank Ihringer,	1 00
Charles Randall,	1 00	James H. Lindsey,	1 00
Arthur Chapel,	1 00	Frank Smith,	1 00
T. Gladstone,	50	M. A. Roper,	1 00
Joe Thompson,	1 00	Mrs. Isabella Robinson,	1 00
G. H. Fairbanks,	1 00	Mrs. Angie P. Percy,	10 00
Frederick Henke,	1 00
		Total, - -	$967 42

Colored Preachers.

The Richmond State has been investigating the morals of the colored clergy and people, and the testimony published exceeds, if anything, the statistics collected by Mr. Billings of the white clergy's immoralities. Dr. Tucker has done for the negroes what the author of "Crimes of Preachers" has done for the whites. His charges are corroborated by the following testimony. The first is from a Presbyterian minister in Georgia, who would not "tell tales out of school" about his brethren if he could avoid it. He says:

"It is true that the North is deceived as to the moral status of the negro. I hav shown your article to prominent men of both races, and they agree with Doctor Tucker in almost every statement. The questions asked touched their moral status alone. In the acquisition of property they are doing very well. No stranger can gain any true idea of the negro race. I hav come in contact with them every day for thirty-three years, and many things about them puzzle me still. To-day I said to one of the leading colored men of this village, 'Are the morals of your people any better now than they were in 1865?' 'No,' he said, 'I do not think they are.' Then, after a pause, 'I fear they are worse.' 'How about the morality of your young unmarried women?' Said he, 'I do not know that there is a single virtuous one in this place (colored population 400), but I am sure the great majority are living in licentiousness.' I submitted the same questions to the most prominent farmers, lawyers, and physicians in this county, and without exception they answered, 'Their morals are not better than in 1865.' Speaking for myself, I think that the fruitful source of so much of this immorality results from the licentious lives of so many of their ministers. 'Like priest, like people.' I am glad, however, to say that there are some noble exceptions, but I fear licentiousness is the rule. The superintendent of the convict farm in this county told me that out of 200 convicts, forty of them were preachers or licensed exhorters."

A New York man now living in Louisiana writes:

"Having resided in Louisiana six years, I am prepared to say that Doctor Tucker's statements are literally and intensely true so far as my observation went, and according to the testimony of gentlemen from various surrounding states. It is a common saying, 'The preachers are the worst of all.'"

A Virginian writes:

"I hav known a negro preacher guilty of incest, another who was an habitual thief, a third with two wives, being married to neither, a fourth who was a constant and most audacious liar, and yet who were earnest and successful preachers. I can giv names, dates, and witnesses for these or twenty more similar cases; and the Southern men here can giv any required number more."

A Boston woman, according to the State, bears this testimony:

"I am a missionary to this ignorant, superstitious, degraded, and beloved people, commissioned by a Woman's Association of Boston. I liv among the people, having no white associate or companion, my house side by side with their little cabins. I say unhesitatingly that Dr. Tucker's words as quoted by you are true, as far as I see from my standpoint. I hav not traveled extensivly in the South. I speak, be it understood, only of what my own eyes see, in the refugees from Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, who hav settled in Kansas. There is a moral sentiment which tolerates the vilest crimes in church-members and in preachers, and which upholds the doers of evil. To one congregation here ministers a man who is living in open adultery. To another—[but we cannot publish the details given by our correspondent. After stating an awful crime committed by a church-member going home from a prayer meeting the writer says]: In the public prosecution which followed, the preacher and every man and woman of the church stood by this scoundrel and helped him by false testimony to evade conviction, because he belonged to their church, the pastor going bail for him. The religion of this people consists in following after preachers, ignorant, unenlightened men, men of vile and lazy lives for the most part."

There is no class of people in the world more religious than the negros. Their fervent African temperament makes them peculiarly susceptible to religious sentiment and at the same time leads them into licentious lives. The lesson learned from the above facts is that the possession of religion is perfectly compatible with lives of the grossest immorality, and that Christianity is not a moral force sufficiently strong to restrain the devotees its easy scheme of salvation makes among the ignorant.

Translation.

The Tomb of Fanaticism.

[An examination of Lord Bolingbroke's doctrines. Written by Voltaire in 1767 and translated from the French by Avery Meriwether.]

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

THE EXCESSES OF THE ROMAN CHURCH.

Does it not seem as if the Roman church had incorporated the ferociousness of the descendants of the Huns, Goths, and Vandals, with a continued series of scandals and crimes unknown to the priests of the other religions of the world?

The priests have been abused on all sides because they were men. It was the same, and is still the same, among the Brahmans, the knaves, and the wicked, since that ancient sect is without gainsay the most honest of all the sects of the world because they had riches and power.

The church has encouraged and entered into obscene debaucheries since it forbade marriage, the greatest check to vulgar licentiousness and to sodomy. This was done for the purpose of better governing men.

I shall only touch upon what I have seen with my own eyes and that which occurred a few years before my birth. There was never a brigand who respected less the public faith, human blood, or the honor of women, than Bernard Van Galen, the bishop of Munster, who hired out his services as a soldier, sometimes to the Hollanders, against his neighbors, and at other times to Louis XIV., against the people of the Netherlands. He intoxicated himself all his life with wine and blood. He spent his time either upon the bed with his concubines or upon the plains of murder, just as the beasts in rutting time and at carnage. But the foolish people bent their knees before this man, and humbly received his benediction.

I hav seen one of this man's bastards, who, in spite of his birth, found the means of making himself a canon of a college. He was more contemptible than his father and even more dissolute. I know that he assassinated one of his mistresses.

Is it not very propbable, if a bishop were married to a virtuous German housewife and a son is born in honest marriage, and is well brought up, that it would have the effect of making the life of both less miserable? Is there anything in this world more apt to moderate our passions than the regard for a wife and respected mother? Have not the duties of a father stifled in the germ a thousand crimes?

Let us see how many assassinations, committed by the priests, I have noticed for the last forty years. I shall not exaggerate. A few days ago, I read that a Corsican priest, after saying his mass, hunted up his rival or enemy and shot him from behind a bush; and while the dying man still breathed, the priest offered to act as his confessor and absolve him from his sins. Pope Alexander the Sixth killed people in order to get possession of their property, and even these while dying asked the pope for unam indulgentiam in articulo mortis.

I was only reading to-day that which is reported of a certain bishop of Liege, during the time of Henry V. This bishop was called John-without-Pity. He had a priest who acted as his hangman, and after employing him to hang, roast, and disembowel more than two thousand people, he himself hung his servant.

What have you to say of the Archbishop d'Upsal, named Troll, who, acting in league with Christian II., king of Denmark, put to death eighty-four senators and delivered the city of Stockholm to his soldiers to be pillaged, even while holding a bull of the pope in his hands?

There is not a Christian state where the priests have not enacted scenes similar to this.

It has been said that I only speak of the crimes of the priesthood and that I have passed over in silence the evil deeds of the men of the world. This is because the abominable actions of the priests, and above all the actions of the papal priests, contrast very blackly with what they taught the people. It is because they added to their numberless transgressions a crime none the less fearful, if that were possible—the crime of hypocrisy; it is because the more their lives and manners should have been pure, the more culpable were they. They insulted the human race. They persuaded the weak-minded to bury themselvs alive in monasteries. They preached the renunciation of the world; they admistered their oils, and then went therefrom to plunge into licentiousness or into carnage. This is the way the church was governed from the time of Athanasius and Arius, down to the present time.

Let me speak with the same good faith with which I have explained my opinions. Does any one think that there is a single one of those rascals who believed the pointless dogmas which they preached? Has there been a single pope, possessing any common-sense, who believed in the incarnation of God, the death of the deity, the resurrection of God, the trinity, and the transubstantiation of a piece of bread into God, and in all the other fanciful chimeras which have placed the Christians below the level of brutes? It is certain they have not believed them. And because a few have perceived the extreme absurdities of Christianity, they vainly imagine that there is no God.

This belief is the origin of all the horrible deeds with which the Christians have soiled themselves. Take care! It is the absurdity of the Christian dogma which makes Atheists.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

The Better Religion Coming.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: On my way home from Flint some time ago I made a little stop with my children at Ann Arbor, and on Sunday I made the Unitarian church a visit, as is my custom when I am there on that day. They hav a very nice new stone building to meet in, near the University grounds. T. A. Sunderland is their pastor. While I was there one of his sermons fell into my hands, with the above heading over it. I read it through with some interest, because as a friend of human progress I am always ready to hail all helpers in the work of trying to better the condition of the human race. As to the term "Better Religion," I would amend it by saying "Higher Manhood," because to me religion is a word almost without meaning. He speaks of progressiv Christianity which is to come. It seems to me, Mr. Editor, that it would be just as sensible to talk of a white blackbird. The moment the bird turns its color from black to white it is no longer a blackbird. And so with Christianity; the moment it changes its base from that of a belief in an anthropormorphic God, and in his ghost-begotten son, Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, to something else, it is not Christianity. He tells us that the religion that is coming will be broad, catholic, tolerant, appreciativ, to an extent that religion has not known in the past. This don't sound much like the Christian religion of "believe or be damned." From this we might conclude that Mr. Sunderland was approaching toward the religion of manhood, based on common sense. But when he tells us in the next breath about a better Christianity that is coming we are again discouraged with him, and hav to tell him again that there is no such thing as a better or a worse Christianity; that Christianity proper has but one language, and that is, as aforesaid, "believe or be damned."

Now, it seems to us that Mr. Sunderland knows as well as we do that real, genuin Christianity is only a superstition, and that it had its birth and growth in former superstitions; and we would say to him that instead of trying to patch it up, to make it mean something else than its founders and expounders intended it to mean, he had better drop it. The sooner we drop the word as of any goodness belonging to it for us, the sooner we will mentally grow out of the superstition, and be ready to stand with Judge Waite and view it as the grandest system of fraud ever palmed off on the human race.

Mr. Sunderland says, "Who of us all is there that does not believe in God?" If we knew just what he means by this word God, we might say yea or nay; but for the want of this information, we hav to remain silent. And, "Who of us all," he asks, "does not believe in Jesus?" Here again we are at a loss to know what he means. If he means the Jesus that his Bible tells us about, who had his parentage from the "overshadowing business" by a holy ghost, some of us carnal-minded folks might be a little skeptical on that subject.

Coming to the Bible, he says: "Do we not all believe that to be a mine of gold which none of us can delve in too deeply?" As to this matter of delving into the Christian's Bible for light and knowledge to help us on our way through life, some of us who hav made this Bible a study for more than forty years hav concluded that this mine is about worked out, and that it is no longer a paying investment. Whatever percentage it may hav paid in a less enlightened age of the human race—before science unfolded to man the function of the brain—it does not now giv much return to the delvers.

A few things about this old book we all know—that is, all the truly pure, virtuous, intelligent, and liberal minds that hav made the Bible much of a study. We know that it is unscientific; we know that there is a great portion of the book that is coarse, vulgar, and obscene; we know that it abounds in contradictions and incongruities throughout; we know that it has been made a leading-string to immorality and crime—such as bigamy, prostitution, adultery, degradation, and enslavement of women, particularly the New Testament. It indorses slavery and the slave trade; it encourages ignorance and error, also lying, falsehood, and hypocrisy; it recommends religious persecution—indeed, there is nothing that stands out more prominently throughout both the Old and New Testaments than this characteristic of the book. Then, it has ever been used by all Christian nations to incite their soldiers to deeds of butchery on the field of battle, each party having this Bible for their religious text-book, and each Christian minister, on either side, asking his Bible-God to help his side in the human slaughter.

Therefore, we would say to Mr. Sunderland and all inquirers after truth, Don't waste your time any longer over this old mythological, vulgar, obscene, immoral, and unscientific book; nor with the Christian church built upon it, for besides the vulgar, obscene, and immoral character of this book, it will admit of as many different interpretations as there are various interpreters, so that it establishes nothing but a religious text-book for people to fight and quarrel over. Build on that of a higher and nobler manhood, one based on intelligence, morality, and common sense, and don't allow your imagination to carry you off to the supernatural, and to the regions of the unknowable. Keep within range of the natural universe of which you are a part, and deal with what you may know something about. By a diligent application of your mental powers in thought and study in this direction, you will in time begin to hav an insight of this better religion that is coming—now already come to a few of the more advanced thinkers.

And here is my word, and here is my creed:
Goodness is manifested in the deed.

Adrian, Mich. S. D. MOORE.

Social Science.

Both science and religion recognize the fact as true to nature, that in order to make peace on earth and good will to all mankind, the hungry must be fed and naked clothed, not by degrading charity so much as by giving every man and child old enough to work, and every woman who may seek it, a fair day's wages for a fair day's work. There is nothing in any maxim of the seven wise men of ancient Greece, or in Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, or Spencer, to compare in practical philosophy with these humble words of honest workmen, "A fair day's wages for a fair day's work."

But what working man is sufficiently instructed in political economy, or social science, to determin accurately what is really a fair day's wages for a fair day's work? It has not been determined even how many hours' labor constitutes a fair time for work, to make it a day's work.

A cordwainer, as he chooses to be called on some occasions, may inform you that five shoes for women's wear is a day's work, but I hav lately read that a pair of woman's shoes has been made complete by aid of machinery from the hides of leather, and the cloth for lining, in twenty minutes. But this fact strikes terror in the parent's heart while hammering on his lapstone. For he is forced to ask himself, What will now become of my poor wife and children, if iron arms can do the work and the machinery requires only to be fed with coal, which may be dug all ready to the hand out of the bowels of the earth?

The freetrader has replied by Malthus that whenever the demand for hands to work falls off, the children in excess of the demand must die. No one has yet demonstrated that if one community can co-exist with ten thousand and not with eleven thousand hands, then to collect the odd thousand and set them to work in another section on some other mines or water power, they may not subsist together as the first hav done. For even if the freetrade Malthusian doctrin is true, which I deny, for as I hav contended, as I think, conclusivly, it is a false appearance arising chiefly from a defect in the nature of the money of commerce which may be very easily corrected. But the want of education on this subject amongst not only workmen but the politicians of our country only emphasizes the demand for the establishment of an institution to supply the crying want. For it is want that goes abroad throughout the earth like a roaring lion seeking what or whom he may devour. The true name of the devil is want in whatever protean forms it may appear, whether in regimentals, or canonicals. All the troubles in the world arise from want of something. But the greatest want of all is understanding of the ways and means of happiness by genius and industry at the right times and places. The ignorant in ways and means would fain hav all things in common. But experience has proved long ago that thereby industry and genius are alike discouraged.

All the reasonable wants of man should be supplied by industry and genius, in that order in which wants arise in nature.

The wants of man are all included in three orders of the social science.

First, for the means of subsistence.
Second, for the means of defense.
Third, for the means of refinement to perfection.
Under the first order, for subsistence:
1. Agriculture.
2. Manufactures.
3. Commerce.

Under the second order, for defense:
1. The military science.
2. Jurisprudence.
3. Hygiene.

Under the refining or perfecting order:
1. Physics.
2. Metaphysics.
3. Politics.

Politics, including all that man can reasonably desire on earth as useful or delightful to him.

Nothing less than this arrangement can be reasonably termed scientific as a social science. Nothing can be safely left to chance, for chance always in the end destroys by accidents. Only a very few are born capable of thinking for themselvs and others at the same time. But in a social system it is absolutely necessary that the selfish and the social instincts should be reconciled in the same acts, as with an army in action, every blow the soldier strikes is as much to the advantage of the army and the country he is hired to defense as to his own. But remember he requires to be hired and be paid his daily wages whether conquered or victorious against the common enemy. Human nature and the nature of things require all this to insure success. Without action on this understanding the worst enemies of an association will arise in its own household. It has always been so. Only a very few hav been like the great Washington, who demanded only repayment of his own expenses while risking life and fortune for his country. Indeed, necessity as higher law compels even the most patriotic soldier to demand support for his dependent family while he fights the battles of the commonwealth, and what is needed now, as the most pressing need, is the conversion to the arts of peace that scientific system of co-operation now best known in war. By the division and subdivision of labor no one ever need to lack the means of living, if with skill enough to turn a grinding stone or polish up a needle's point. For however far apart the individual's labors may be, or however incomplete alone, all may be united in the end and each will be discovered essential in the grand result. By analysis and synthesis all good things are created. All of science is contained in these two processes. To separate and bring together in new forms of being is the work of genius in all cases. But no one man can do everything alone.

System is required, and disciplin. Some may rebel against all irksomeness, as the beast of prey, the lion, will hunt only with his mate, and can tolerate no rival in his forest. So the man of prey will still insist on standing out alone until he shows no line of differentialism betweeen freebooter on the coasts of Africa, in supplying the demand for slaves in Cuba, and the freetrader in the use of common money, not for a fair rate of interest, but in order to reap that he does not sow, and gather that he does not strew—a usurer. In government candidates should be elected only to the lower grades and rise thereafter as in the army or the navy, and learn thus the science and the arts of government together, and, after passing through the various grades, pass out to become a judge in a high court for the trials of impeachments and correction of errors.

Taking it for granted that almost every individual has by nature peculiar excellences and defects, and fails in life from having no facilities to take the position in which he may exhibit all his excellence, a court of honor ought to be established whereby every individual may be enabled to prove undeniably he ought to rise in public estimation, or, if placed too high, his fellow-citizens may on proper charges prove he ought to yield up any office in which he may be unfit, and take some place better suited to his genius or accomplishments,whether in a university or a penitentiary.

In the fewest words I hav been enabled to command I hav thus placed my purposes before you. I claim that they are strictly scientific, and that no other can avail to render light the burdens of humanity. I am not in want of anything myself; that is to say, I am not anxious now for either fame or fortune. I hope others will take hold of my propositions and go on with them to perfection. I can hardly hope to see the full fruition of a work like this at my time of life. The present purpose is to find persons who by what they hav experienced of the world must see that unless we advance the general interests the most selfish instincts prevail, as formerly has been the case, and we are told that even in the country claiming for itself the highest civilization nineteen-twentieths of the people die prematurely of diseases superinduced by excessiv labor and deficient nourishment, while they supply the world with merchandise and rob other starving peoples of employment; and in the Parliament it has been actually said they knew of no remedy for such a barbarous condition. Nor do I suppose the poor and ignorant can help themselvs. My purpose is in future to apply only to rich men to afford the means of placing these ideas on a proper footing. I claim that they are strictly scientific, that they show no conflict between science and religion. Both agree upon the point that to make peace on earth and good will to mankind the hungry must be fed and the naked clothed. Extreme want knows no law of God or man, and want must be overcome—not by misdirected charity, but by finding work for all disposed to help themselvs by honest industry of head or hand, or both together; for mere labor without thought is of little value, and the first thing to be done now is to think.

CLINTON ROOSEVELT.

"ANSWERS TO CHRISTIAN QUESTIONS." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

Repentance and Faith in Jesus.

Christians assert the absolute necessity of faith in Jesus as the prime essential to secure a home in heaven. They declare there can be no forgivness of sin only through the intercession of Jesus; that, had not Christ died on Calvary cross, forgiveness of sin by God were impossible. Yet they admit faith in Christ alone will not avail, unless there is also full, genuin, sincere repentance.

Freethinkers lay no claim to faith in Jesus or any other mediator, savior, or redeemer. But they firmly believe in genuin repentance for sin, both of commission and omission.

All mankind are not equally possessed of the germs of virtue. Some soils are uncongenial; even though the seeds were carefully planted, they are apt to rot for lack of nourishment. With some the weeds of vice overshadow and easily choke out what few seeds do try to sprout, while with others they spring up and flourish and bring forth a bounteous crop of good and loving acts. Yet even under favorable conditions the naturally good, as well as the naturally evil, assailed in an unguarded hour, oft yield to temptation.

The true Liberal will ever deal gently with the erring. We can never know how great the temptation, how long, how earnestly, they struggled against it; how, in an unguarded moment of weakness, they fell. They hav but fallen in the path we hav in weakness trod. Had we their temperament, or been as strongly tempted, we, too, might hav fallen. Nay, spite of our great strength, virtue, and confidence, we yet may trip ere life's journey's done.

We may not sanction wrong. But we do wrong if we fail to liv out our faith—"To love justice and mercy." If we do not manifest tender pity for the wrong-doer, although bemired through falling into the slime of iniquity, we may not shun or turn from them in contempt and disgust. Washed in the waters of repentance, wiped with the towel of reformation, and gently brushed with affectionate admonition, hope and strength would revive, and they not alone complete with success the journey of life, but be real help to many unfortunates on the way.

But every wrong alike of omission and commission must be repented of, not according to orthodox usage—a mere mumbling of the slang and cant of the meeting house; admit being a great sinner, plead sorrow, but rejoice: "Jesus paid it all, all the debt I owe," and make no reparation for the wrong done, but keep on in the same old way; like a good Methodist farmer of our acquaintance who runs a cider mill, and invariably makes mistakes in his tally; counts a few bushels short when he receives the apples and a few gallons short when delivering the cider, which, possibly, because he is a rabid temperance man, he liberally waters. But although time and again caught, and his rascality exposed, he always exhorts powerfully at the revival meetings as soon as the cider season is over, telling how he is the chief of sinners, how Jesus loves him, and has washed all his sins away. Instead of making any compensation to those he had cheated, he shouts; "Glory to God! Blessed Jesus! Jesus paid it all, all the debt I owe! Bless God for religion! Salvation's free!

Real, genuin, bona fide repentance has five essentials—the five c's—conviction, contrition, confession, compensation, and conversion.

There can be no repentance without conviction of having done wrong—violation of the law of love, "Do you as you would be done by." Honest conviction leads to genuin contrition—sorrow for having done wrong, not sorrow at being found out and having to endure the penalty. The person who is only virtuous from fear of hell-fire would steal the bread and butter of a little child going to school, only for fear of the watching policeman.

Contrition will induce full, free confession to the parties wronged, not the slang of the meeting-house, "I know I am a very great sinner; I feel I am unworthy of a place among God's dearest chosen people;" and when some one by bitter experience, knowing the fact, whispers "That's so," savagely assail them, and claim not to be "half so bad as they."

But conviction, contrition, and full, free, frank confession is not repentance. A man steals our pocket-book. Convinced of the wrong, he declares he is sorry, and, fully confessing, asks our forgivness. We should refuse. Why? Because we could hav little faith in that repentance so long as he retained the pocket-book, the result of his wrong-doing. Compensation is necessary; he must make reparation so far as is in his power. The wrong-doer may not always be able to fully compensate, but if truly repenant, he will willingly make every possible reparation in his power.

But repentance is not yet perfect. The thief may express conviction, contrition, make confession and full compensation. Thus gaining our confidence, he obtains opportunity and steals our trunk and all our valuables.

To complete repentance there must be conversion (Greek, epistrophee—to turn about, turn back from). We hear a great deal about "conversion" in the meeting-house; the word is only found once in the Bible (Acts xvi, 3). To genuin repentance, the final c is most essential. The wrong-doer must forsake, turn from, his vicious practice, cease doing wrong, learn and persist in doing right.

Real Christians agree this is the only repentance that will avail to insure salvation, but it must be accompanied with faith in the atoning blood of Jesus.

Now if a person does a wrong, and really and trully repents, could you refuse forgivness? Mark, there is no question of doubt. If you really knew for certain, beyond all possibility of doubt, the wrong-doer sincerely repented, would you not be bound to fully and entirely forgiv him?

Let us see how it would be with the Bible believers—the much-repeated Lord's Prayer, "Forgiv us our debts as we forgiv our debtors" (Matt. vi, 12).

"So likewise shall my heavenly father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgiv not every one his brother their trespasses" (Matt. xviii, 35).

"And when ye stand praying, forgiv, if ye hav aught against any; that your father which is in heaven may forgiv you your trespasses."

"But if ye do not forgiv, neither will your father which is in heaven forgiv your trespasses" (Mark xi, 25, 26).

"Forgiv and ye shall be forgiven" (Luke vi, 37).

"If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgiv him.

"And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee saying, I repent, thou shalt forgiv him" (Luke xvii, 3, 4).

Christ in this last text overdoes it. He accepts "say so" for reality, and leaves out compensation, and especially conversion. If repentance is genuin, instead of persisting seven times, or seventy times seven in wrong-doing, the repentant one would turn about, cease doing wrong, and do right. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful to forgiv us our sins" (1 John i, 9). So much for Bible evidence to freely forgiv the sincerely repentant. Could God demand of his creatures virtues he himself failed to evince? Then what need of faith in Jesus? What need of a savior? The repentant is forgiven, and there is nothing to be saved from. The Christian says, "Without repentance faith in Jesus is vain." True. We hav proved with repentance faith in Jesus is vain, for forgivness results from repentance, and when forgiven there is no penalty to be saved from; hence no need of Jesus.

What kind of justice, truth, mercy, or sense would it be to say to anyone who had wronged you, "No, I will not forgiv you, but if my son pays the penalty, suffers in your stead, and pleads for you, I will?"

Liberals and Freethinkers take little stock in the promised inheritance, in the transparent, gold-paved city of Jerusalem, that is declared to be as high as it is broad (Rev. xxi, 16). We will sell our share, clear title, warranty deed (Matt. xxv, 31, 40), at buyer's own terms, for cash. We are short on faith, but do earnestly advocate and believe in genuin repentance.

Dear reader, let us sincerely repent our past neglect in failing to do all we might hav done to spread a knowledge of the truth. Repent of not having sent THE TRUTH SEEKER (paying at least for three months) to numbers of our friends. Repent our stinginess in not sending books, pamphlets, and tracts (furnished in such variety and at such very cheap rates at THE TRUTH SEEKER office) that would hav blessed some fellow-creature by loosening the shackles of superstition and error, and starting them on the way to Liberalism and Freethought. Repent that we hav not contributed liberally to keep able lecturers in the field, and thus helped to remove prejudice and awaken honest inquiry in regard to science and revelation through the labors of the faithful living exponents of truth. Repent of our idleness, lukewarmness, and selfishness in nesting down content, ourselvs released from the iron fetters of superstition, and doing so little to free others. Repent of having been so doggish, illiberal, and intolerant, and using unkind expressions to those who differed with us.

Let us henceforth so liv our every-day life shall testify to the beauty and holiness of the principles we profess. Let us do good, love justice and mercy, and endeavor to promote the happiness of our fellow-creatures by awakening them to think for themselvs and exercise their own reason. Let us cheerfully make sacrifice to help them to knowledge, and do for them such acts of benevolence and love as shall insure their respect and affection, and so giv us an influence with them for good.

Rochester, N. Y. CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

THE Rev. Spencer Tilman, a dusky son of Ham, after filling all his appointments between Hillsboro and Cherokee, has returned to his old den in the jail at Moulton. He is charged with stealing meat from one of his deacons, and was the first prisoner that picked out of our new jail. The parson devotes most of his time in singing the "Sweet By and By," and, coupled with the female voices in an adjoining room, reminds us of a negro camp-meeting. He seems to be very pious.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Letters from Friends.

HORNITOS, June 6, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed please find $5.00—$2.50 for the Monument Fund, and the balance use as directed. Yours truly, R. W. BARCROFT.

CLEVELAND, June 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find herewith $2.50 to pay for my TRUTH SEEKER another year. I feel as though I could not do without it, although I am on the go all the time, so that I experience a good deal of trouble in getting copies of it regularly. I start on a trip to Utah this afternoon. H. J. SWANK.

ELMWOOD, June 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $3—$2.50 for my subscription, and 50 cents for a trial subscriber.

Dear friends, I hav passed my three score and ten, and my sight and hearing and health are failing me. I hav been in the ranks of the old pioneers for forty years, and am a lover of justice and truth, and hater of slavery and oppression in all its forms either in church or state. F. WATKINS.

DECATUR, June 18, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed I send $1.50—$1.25 for my subscription, and 25 cents for "Crimes of Preachers." I hav been asked the question several times why there is such a dropping off in the church in our place. I answer the reason is because people hav no confidence in what preachers say. They say one thing and do another, and the people hav got sick of hearing such stuff. S. F. PEARSON.

DODGEVILLE, June 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed $3.00. I like the paper well. It givs fair play in all controversies, even to Spiritualists. Of course I am a Spiritualist. And Mr. Jamieson, who is so ready to run at Spiritualists, professed to deliver trance lectures on Spiritualism, in Darlington, quite a number of years ago. How he has found out that it was a humbug, and that he humbuged so many in Darlington, he never once hints at it. SAMUEL CLEGG.

BIG CREEK, June 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1.00 for the Bennett Monument. As I was one to stand by THE TRUTH SEEKER while Mr. Bennett took the trip around the world, I giv $1.00, and wish it was $100. When I saw Mr. Bennett at Watkins and shook hands with him, I did not think that would be the last time I would ever see him. Am sorry he could not hav lived thirty years more to do battle against the enemies of progress. Hoping you and THE TRUTH SEEKER will prosper and liv to a good old age,

I am, respectfully, CHAS. MOORE.

BRIER HILL, June 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Having received THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past three months, I wish to assure you I hav been highly pleased with it.

I want to see the day when our standing in society will not be degraded, our business interests will not be injured, and our natural rights will not be violated by community or the state, because we hav the moral courage to assert our rights, to giv expression to our honest convictions.

Believing such to be the aim of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that its course is contributing to that end, I inclose $1.25 for six months' subscription.

A. S. CARTER.

SHAKOPEE, MINN., June 13, 283.

MY DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Inclosed you will find $5.30, which sum please apply on our debt. I intend getting as many names for $1 each for the Monument Fund as I can, and will send what I can collect soon. This county is mostly Catholic, therefore can not expect to raise much. There are only about half a dozen Freethinkers in this place, but we are undaunted and are never afraid to meet sectarians of any kind in discussion. The fear is all on the other side, and they either get angry or shut up like clams. We are more and more pleased with the fearless, undaunted editing of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

MRS. L. H. HAWKINS.

SALESVILLE, June 11, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1 to be used as directed. The trial subscriber whose name I send you is the father of a young man who has come into this western country to seek his fortune. We hire such men to work for us, and they see THE TRUTH SEEKER, read it, and soon conclude it would be good to send to the old folks. It may do no good to the old, but our main hope is to educate the young. It is wonderful how easily the young man who has been strictly educated to believe the falsehoods of Christianity denounce it when they once see Liberal books and papers. On my center-table you will find THE TRUTH SEEKER and "Ingersoll on Talmage." Even the preachers look at them when they come, and D. M. Bennett's picture, neatly framed, ornaments the wall. Show your colors, friend; don't be afraid. My young mechanic of Montgomery, Ala., had better not come up here. The railroad has killed the country, and wages are flat for mechanics especially. Then it is too cold for southerners. My Texas friend who came to me has failed to find work at his trade, and is going back.

DR. W. J. STOVER.

MAY VIEW, June, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER is my catechism and only hope of ever getting good, sound, solid, common sense. Please excuse me for delaying you so long without sending you money for your most valuable paper. Inclosed you will find $3 to apply on my subscription. Along during last winter, January and February, my paper never reached me. I do not say that you are to blame; probably the fault is at my post-office. There is a sweet-scented, hell-fire lot of Christians in Jewell county. I am like Chapman, of Cawker City, Kan. I would like to see a good Liberal lecturer come here. Cawker City is seventeen miles west of here. A. W. RYAN.

KIRKWOOD, June 8, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2.00—$1 for the D. M. Bennett Monument, the other for the "Crimes of Preachers" and "Answer to Christian Questions," the balance in Liberal pamphlets. I like THE TRUTH SEEKER. It seems what its name implies; givs every one an ear. I like T. Winter's foundation the very best, although his and his opponents' discussions are so heated that I fear good feeling will cease between them. They should be mild as D. M. Bennett was, unless rebuking an enemy. I promis to read THE TRUTH SEEKER while I liv if it doesn't change its tune—the tune I like, so many like—it is bound to keep a-singing. S. GRAHAM.

GREAT VALLEY, June 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The little monitor within admonishes me quite often of late that I am in arrears for the best paper printed in the United States or on this mundane sphere, all things considered, and that you may think is saying a great deal for a Spiritualist such as I am, who t..kes two papers of the genuin Spiritual stock, both good progressiv journals, and, in some respects, may be equal to THE TRUTH SEEKER. But as a good pioneer journal to supply the needs of the great masses, to strip the mythical gods and devils of their wonted sacredness, THE TRUTH SEEKER is par excellence, and has not deteriorated but rather added to its former glory and greatness of late. You will find within $2.50.

A. F. ALBRIGHT.

PITTSBURGH, June 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Excuse my tardiness in not remitting my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER at an earlier date. Inclosed find $5.00, as subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, which, I think, will keep two of us in good standing for this present year. I hope to be able before long to send for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." The great trouble with the majority of us Liberals is that we are not rich. I sympathize with Mrs. Bennett in her loss of a good husband. I sympathize with the Liberal cause in the loss of one of its greatest champions. I am glad, however, to express my opinion by stating that the tone and spirit of THE TRUTH SEEKER are up to the standard, and I believe that the mantle of editorial ability worn by Mr. Bennett has fallen upon E. Macdonald. The contributions to THE TRUTH SEEKER are rich in mental knowledge, and worth twice the money invested by subscribers. Long may it continue. Let the good work go on. Let us all do something to liberate the mental slaves of our time. H. B. MAXWELL.

LOUISVILLE, KY., June 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed post-office-order for $4.00—2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER; fifty cents for the Monument Fund; and $1 from Mr. Joe Thompson, to the Monument Fund, also a strong Liberal. I am sorry to say that I never had the pleasure of reading a single line in THE TRUTH SEEKER from any of the Liberals from our city. It seems that they are afraid of their own shadow. They must neither speak no hear. If a merchant, he's bound to lose his trade; a mechanic, his job. The independent rather pay his pew rent to keep the wolf away from his door. He is not afraid of God nor his son, as long as he has money and plenty of fun.

And so we may call ourselvs a dead or lifeless body, drowsy like the old gods, when our hero was in the penitentiary and they tried to hold a convention about the book Brother Bennett was writing. It would take a strong Liberal to come here and awake us, like Mr. Ingersoll. He draws splendid houses, and so could Brother Chainey. If he would come here, he would hav plenty of listeners. By reading the letters in THE TRUTH SEEKER, from North East and West, it looks as though the South were at a standstill yet, like the sun when "our Lamb" was crucified. Z. GLADSTONE.

MELROSE, May 22, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been so unfortunate as not to be where I could read your paper the past winter. My paper has been carried to a post-office among the mountains, out of my reach. I thought to hav the address changed, but neglected; "but time makes all things even." Alas, the loss! About mid-winter I picked up a copy of the New York Sun; in it was noted the death of D. M. Bennett. I could hardly believe it was so—I did not wish it so. A sense of pain came over me, a feeling that we hav lost a brave man. It seemed as though we could not spare him yet, but we will judge the length of his life by the good works he did and was striving to do to enlighten his fellow-beings, which, when compared to many others, dwarf them into children, though their years be four score. I hope THE TRUTH SEEKER will liv. I hope those at the helm will continue to swing the club about the ears and crack the heads of the teachers of all religious dogmas. My friends, I do not mean a hickory club by any means, but the club of good, hard sense, reason, facts; that is what THE TRUTH SEEKER does. I hope those he left behind will giv the old hulk (the church) some broadsides that will make the splinters fly.

J. B. THOMSON.

KEOTA, June 14, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I sent you a letter December 2, 282, which arrived at your office in the days of your great trouble and sorrow, when the pillar of fire, that guided THE TRUTH SEEKER family out of the darkness of ignorance, was extinguished. My letter appeared in the number which every reader preserved, the number dressed in emblems of mourning on December 16, 282. I wish to possess Brother Bennett's last and grandest work complete, so please send me Volume IV. of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." Please accept also $1.50 as a grain to the tower of granit for the one who has been a tower of light for his readers. On the fourth of June the neighborhood of Harper and Garibaldi stood at the grave of a beloved friend and brother, T. A. Goeldner, who died only forty-nine years old, a loving and beloved father, husband, friend, and neighbor, a clear-minded, outspoken Freethinker. Hon. B. A. Cleveland delivered a very fitting and able address to the mixed assembly of Catholics, Lutherans, and Freethinkers. I hope that this sad event, the funeral of a friend, that draws hearts nearer, may result in a union, a league of the Freethinkers of this neighborhood.

According to Darwin's "survival of the fittest," THE TRUTH SEEKER will liv forever, as every number is "the best one yet." CHAS. NAUMANN.

WHEATLAND, June 4, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose you $2.50 for another year, for I must hav THE TRUTH SEEKER. I received the picture of Mr. Bennett that you sent me some time ago, for which receive my thanks. Mr. Bennett sent me some seeds when he returned from his trip around the world, and I took great pains in planting them. But, alas! some evangelical chickens got into my garden and destroyed them, for which I was very sorry. A gentleman told me the other day that he heard a preacher openly proclaim that Col. Ingersoll had been converted, or, in other words, gone back on his doctrin. Will you please proclaim it in THE TRUTH SEEKER if such is the case or not? for I positivly denied the assertion. I understood he positivly said it was a fact. Since I hav learned that he made the assertion on the strength of what the colonel said at the funeral of some friend, and as near as I recollect it was: That he had a hope of a future existence; and on those grounds he says the colonel has confessed he was wrong and orthodoxy was right. Hoping to hear from you soon,

I remain, as ever, a truth seeker,

C. S. WILLIAMSON.

[Our friend can tell the preacher that Col. Ingersoll is still an Infidel, and that he (the preacher) is a falsifier that the glory of God may more abound through his lie. Of such is the kingdom of heaven. —ED. T. S.]

BOSTON, June 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Since reading the tract entitled "The Ills We Endure—Their Cause and Cure," I hav been irresistibly tempted to write you a few lines, asking why this co-operativ system, which is in vogue in Springfield, Vt., could not be practiced by Liberals, say in the West?

What would there be to prevent the Liberals from forming a stock company, each member furnishing an equal amount of capital—say from $500 to $1,000 each, and engage in cattle ranching, wheat growing, sheep raising, or any other lucrativ business?

It appears to me that more good could be done for the cause of Liberalism in such ways than in any other; for in such schemes as these, Freethinkers could enrich themselvs and be better prepared to establish themselvs and giv support to their leaders.

I sincerely wish that some such movement be set in operation, for I hav not the slightest doubt it would prove a success. There are many men who hav a small sum that they would gladly invest if they but had some such opportunity; an inexperienced man is afraid to launch out alone with his hard-earned savings, knowing that the chances against him are ten to one; but in unity he knows there is strength, and when led by honest and thoughtful men, whom he can trust, he is willing to follow and labor faithfully.

I wish, dear sir, you would insert an article on this subject in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and see what fruit it will bring forth. I would like much to contribute an article on this subject, but I know my inability to do it justice. With best wishes for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER,

J. L. CLEMMER.

FAIRFIELD, June 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR:

Hell's not a myth, as by some reckoned,
To frighten childhood, first and second,
But 'tis a truth most hotly true,
And not a priestly bugaboo,
As he will find who now denies it,
When the fool comes to realize it.

That there's a hell I cannot doubt it;
Pray, how, sir, could we do without it?
No hell! Absurd! 'twould never do.
Where would we send our neighbors to—
Those who in faith and politics
We differ from—but to Old Nick's?

Beware of men like Ingersoll,
Who say there is no hell at all.
Of men like Darwin and Tyndall,
Who don't believe in Adam's fall,
But rather hold, contrariwise,
That we've been always on the rise.
Shun these apostles of all evil,
Vile emissaries of the devil,
For they the unwary soul seduce
And lead it straightway to the deuce.

Religion some cuss defines to be "Conventional hypocrisy."
Satan, with sorrow, I avow
Is doing a brisk business now.
Hell scores but little at this writing
And heaven still seems uninviting.

A. O. SCOTT.

BURTON, June 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Thanks for the three copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER; I read the Iconoclast, Investigator, and other Liberal papers; but somehow THE TRUTH SEEKER surpasses them all, in my opinion, though they are all good, and may they all long wave and never waver in the good work before them in suppressing superstition in all its forms, the greatest curse, in my opinion, the world endures.

I am going to try and organize a Freethinkers' association here, though orthodoxy has full sway, and such a course might probably subject one to many curses, and perhaps imprisonment, as in the case of the worthy founder of that stanch paper; and in the production of so much fine common-sense literature, as such, I think Mr. D. M. Bennett had no superiors, and few, if any, equals; and though it will be not in our time, I hav not a doubt but his name some day will be cherished as the great reformer, and founder of truth and honesty, to the suppression of crime, superstition, and orthodoxy (they all meaning the same).

Inclosed please find fifty cents, for which I wish Mr. Bennett's "Answers to Christian Questions," and "Crimes of Preachers." I hav never seen those. I love to read anything from Mr. Bennett's able and inspired pen, and before the year closes you may look for an order from me for many of the works I see advertised in THE TRUTH SEEKER; I will do what I can to procure you a list of subscribers here, and think it the duty of every liberty-loving individual to do likewise. Hoping you deserved success, I remain, Truly, H. B. JONES.

REPLY TO DR. TREVITT.

WEST FARMINGTON, June, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me a column in the ever-welcome TRUTH SEEKER, for I desire to say a few words to my kind Materialistic friend, who attempted to answer my article to T. Winter. I fully agree with you, doctor, that we should treat each other with respect in our discussions, and I assure you that I am in excellent humor, but I may get terribly in earnest ere I get through. Doctor, I wish to straighten you up a little, for you hav switched off the track in several places. If I succeed in getting you on the track, please keep the headlight up, and ever after stay on the track. Spiritualists are to be blamed for the error being extant which Materialists hav fallen into. You say: "Now, Brother Noe, I would like you to point me to one instance where you find life without organization." Bless your big soul, doctor, that is not our premises. There is not a Spiritualist of brains (and they most all hav) who claims there is life independent of organization. It is true, Spiritualists speak of "disembodied spirits," disembodied man conveying the idea that we will be bodiless in the next sphere of life. I wish my Spiritualist brethren would say what they mean, for our Materialist friends are pretty good at grabbing at straws; hence, hav grabbed at this. Oh, no, doctor! no such thing as life without organization with me! I cannot conceive of such an idea. I am an Atheistic Spiritualist, as godless as the orthodox devil, and he has no god, for, if there was a god who created him, he would surely deny creating a devil who has beaten him at his own game, and I would not blame the devil for denying that the cruel, blood-thirsty god of the Bible had anything to do with him. I could not believe that God was in the form of a human being, a man on a large scale sitting astride the "white throne," neither could I believe there was an intelligence independent of organization; hence, I am godless. Let me say once for all that Spiritualists claim and teach that we will hav a body, a fac-simile of the grosser one we hav here, a body just as tangible in the next sphere as our grosser bodies are here. We will know each other there as well as here. Now, doctor, please remember our premises until next week at least. You ask me if I am not aware that all the burden of proof lies with me! No, sir, I am not. Materialists claim that death ends all, that life is the result of organization, that Materialism is true. Spiritualists claim life beyond the grave. Where is the difference? You affirm as well as we. It just as clearly devolves upon you to prove your ism as it does us to prove ours. You say I make assertions. When I assert Spiritualism to be true, I can giv the whys and wherefores. I say I know it by its being demonstrated to me through the senses of sight, hearing, and feeling. When Winter says Spiritualism is all a fraud, that we are all deluded, that spirits never hav and never will communicate, he fails to giv any whys and wherefores. Do you see the difference, doctor? His is an idle assertion without any backing, and when he is asked how he knows they never hav, and never can communicate, he is up a stump, and you know it. Very true, what are facts to me may not be facts to you. Demonstrations I hav had are no evidence to you. You insist upon evidence before you can believe, and that you should hav, but pray tell me why you believe Materialism to be true without evidence. We don't claim to hav knowledge of the future that you can't get. Here is the difference. Spiritualists are willing to investigate Spiritualism to ascertain whether it be true or not, while Materialists are a set of negationists, who are wise enough to know all about it without investigation. No, it is not necessary for you to believe in order to get demonstration. All that is necessary is for you to investigate with an honest desire for the truth. You say bring along the facts, if you hav them, and demonstrate it to us. It is not my place to demonstrate it to you. It is not my duty or desire to lay a sack of gold at your door.

I say to you, doctor, go out like a man in search of the facts. If they are not worth hunting for they are not worth having. I suppose the reason your parents do not communicate with you is because you do not giv them the opportunity, but shut the door in their faces instead. Now, a few words in regard to life. You ask if my questions are answered. Yes, you hav answered them, but not satisfactorily to me. Now, see here, doctor, it seems to me you hav got into trouble—and just as I expected. You say life is the result of organization, and when the organization is gone, good-bye to life. Life being the result—the effect, the cause of course must exist prior to the effect; hence, there must be an organization before there is life, according to the Materialistic view; but I see you hav life before there is physical, human organization for it to dwell in. In speaking of the male and female elements, you say: "The moment these two elements are brought together, conditions being natural, life commences." You say: "That is the time life enters the fetus." Again you say: "By experiment we find that by bringing together certain unorganized elements which hav an affinity for each other, life is formed and a new organization is started." Doctor, it seems to me you hav a mixed, compound, complex fraction, and withal a simple one. Life is formed and a new organization is started. Now you hav life just as the organization is started. Started, mind you; no organization yet. Then pray tell me how life is the result of organization. Life enters the fetus the moment these two elements come together, you say. Bless your soul! there is no fetus there yet. Now, you see, doctor, you hav got life before there is any organization of the future being. I am sorry you got on my side of the question by accident, for I think you are needed on the other side. You misunderstand me badly when you charge me with saying that life commences at four and a half months. I claim that life has no beginning, and will not end. "You believe life to be the manifestation of vital operations in certain of nature's compounds, and when this compound is destroyed life is no more." I see by your logic that human beings are compounded into existence and dissolved out. You being a doctor of medicin, your reasoning surprises me. You say: "When these two elements come together, life commences." Which implies that the female furnishes part of the life of the new being. Of course there is no life in the ovum until it reaches there from the male. The ovum contains no more of the life of the human being, than the earth contains the life that is in the grain of corn. The female is the receptacle for the life deposited there by the male, just as the earth is the receptacle for the seed deposited. Now, doctor, I shall hav to invite you to go a little farther back. It's true we are wading quite deep; but let us wade a little deeper. You hav life to begin the moment impregnation takes place. Doctor, you come so near getting life from nothing, I think you must hav been taking lessons from that distinguished old gent who made the world, and some stars also, out of nothing.

I asked Brother Winter where life came from, at what stage of development it entered the fetus, and how it entered. If life is the result of organization, it occurs to me that the structure ought to be about completed before the life principle moves in to take possession. How hav you answered these questions? You hav life, as an inherent property of matter, manifested through vital operations, in certain of nature's compounds. You hav life enter the fetus, before there is any fetus, but just as it starts. Are you not aware, doctor, that it is a demonstrated fact that seminal fluid being ejected into warm water, by the aid of a microscope, living, moving entities can be seen? From this it is clear that the male alone furnishes the life, and that it exists prior to the time the male and female unite, and that the female element you speak of has nothing to do with forming or commencing life, as you hav it, it being her province to develop a physical house, or machine, if you please, for the life to liv in and manifest through. Certainly, life has always lived; it never began, and, I believe will never end. You ask, "Then is not all animal and vegetable life immortal?" I believe that everything possesses an immortal principle, from the atom to the "genus homo." I hav no line of distinction to draw. I believe that we hav always been independent entities, having traveled up through all the lower gradations. You think that "Spiritualism is a broad stepping-stone from the church to the natural and open field of Materialism." Doctor, Materialism is not natural. Such an open field! Oh! how barren, how bleak, how cold! What a field! You hav not a shrub, not a flower, not even a Canada thistle therein. You hav no new fields of pastures green to invite us to. You ask: "What is there about eternal sleep that is repulsiv to us." Suppose, doctor, you should be taken dangerously ill, very suddenly, would you not like to recover to attend to some unsettled business? When are you going to be all ready to lie down and take that eternal nap? When will you get through bidding adieu to relations and friends?

Suppose you had a loving daughter of fifteen from home, and she should be sent for when you were taken ill, would you not be anxious for her arrival, that you might take her hand and gaze once more into her lovely face? You ask what could bring us more joy than eternal rest and sleep. You can't rest when you are not tired, you can't sleep when you are not sleepy. Talk about the joy of eternal sleep! Would you be there to enjoy it? Come, doctor, along with me to the next sphere of life, where we can meet our loved ones, and there gather together upon the mossy banks of the spiritual waters, and then journey on from sphere to sphere, ever finding new fields to survey, ever meeting different flowers, ever meeting birds of different plumage. Compare this to your eternal sleep, and tell me not that the former will not bring more joy than the latter. A. ALLEN NOE.

That Popish Fraud.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The priests hav recently had the following advertisment in the Liberal papers of this country, and "addressed to Jews and Christians of every denomination:"

"A Catholic circular: 'Louise Latean; Her Stigmas and Ecstasy," by Dr. Augustus Bohling. Translated from the German for the Catholic Review by Rev. W. Walsh, D.D., Professor of Moral and Dogmatic Theology in St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, Ireland."

And all this is done just as if popery itself were not a lie from the beginning, and no nun like Louise Latean had ever been detected, when entranced, in making the scratches upon themselvs here called the "stigmata." Thus it is: one huge lie told for a while requires numerous small lies to support it and keep it afloat.

Those who remember my article on Ideology in this paper last August, "The Trance Idea in History," may recollect that I gave a correct explanation as to how the trance always comes on (as to its immediate cause), and how it is the nuns, when bamboozled in a state of religious trance, make these scratches upon themselvs, called the "stigmata," to gratify and please their confessors and priests. And why not, when they see how much is made of these "marks" on their hands and feet and faces, when they hear the "holy priests" pronounce them "miraculous" and produced "by the almighty power of God?"

Precisely so the priests said of that nun in France who had the stigmata when she declared "the priest had bewitched her," and she had him arrested for the liberties he had taken with her. And the entranced nun in California had the "miraculous stigma" until she had been detected in her process of scratching her own person, which she exhibited as the "true stigmata."

And here it is in place to remark that these scratches in a state of trance are confined to the popish church. And we see how difficult it is to detect the cheat when it occurs under any form of mysticism, ancient or modern. And hence, when from this consideration a liberal and independent mind refuses to invest in any form of mystical phenomena, he is, by some one victimized by mysticism, censured and denounced as false to himself or a hard-hearted skeptic. Nor is it to be much wondered at that those once captured "by faith" in mystical phenomena are so seldom recovered to science and human reason. I hav, however, often thought I might perhaps, by and by, publish a platform formulating a few ideas of the past and of humanity's future, upon which all truly liberal people might cordially unite. Certainly they should unite, so as not to be so liable to run against and jostle one another.

Quincy, Mass., June 8th. LAROY SUNDERLAND.

Poetry.

How the Women Went from Dover —1662.

From the Atlantic Monthly.

The tossing spray of Cocheco's fall
Hardened to ice on its rocky wall,
As through Dover town, in the chill, gray dawn,
Three women passed, at the cart-tail drawn!

By the meeting-house in Salisbury town
The sufferers stood, in the red sundown,
Bare for the lash! O pitying night,
Drop swift thy curtain and hide the sight!

With shame in his eye and wrath on his lip,
The Salisbury constable dropped his whip.
"This warrant means murder foul and red;
Cursed is he who serves it," he said.

"Show me the order, and meanwhile strike
A blow at your peril!" said Justice Pike.
Of all the rulers the land possessed,
Wisest and boldest was he, and best.

He scoffed at witchcraft; the priest he met
As man meets man; his feet he set
Beyond his dark age, standing upright,
Soul-free, with his face to the morning light.

He read the warrant: "These convey
From our precincts; at every town on the way
Giv each ten lashes!" "God judge the brute!
I tread his order under my foot!

"Cut loose these poor ones and let them go;
Come what will of it, all men shall know
No warrant is good, though backed by the Crown,
For whipping women in Salisbury town!"

The hearts of the villagers, half released
From creed of terror and rule of priest,
By a primal instinct owned the right
Of human pity in law's despite.

For ruth and chivalry only slept,
His Saxon manhood the yeoman kept;
Quicker or slower, the same blood ran
In the Cavalier and the Puritan.

The Quakers sank on their knees in praise
And thanks. A last, low sunset blaze
Flashed out from under a cloud, and shed
A golden glory on each bowed head.

The tale is one of an evil time,
When souls were fettered, and thought was crime,
And heresy's whisper above its breath
Meant shameful scourging and bonds and death!

What marvel, that hunted and sorely tried,
Even woman rebuked and prophesied,
And soft words rarely answered back
The grim persuasion of whip and rack!

If her cry from the whipping-post and jail
Pierced sharp as the Kenite's driven nail,
O woman, at ease in these happier days,
Forbear to judge of thy sister's ways!

How much thy beautiful life may owe
To her faith and courage thou can'st not know,
Nor how from the paths of thy calm retreat
She smoothed the thorns with her bleeding feet.

JOHN G. WHITTIER

The Bad Boy Has a Thoughtful Spell.

From Peck's Sun.

"What are you sitting there for half an hour for, staring at vacancy?" said the grocery man to the bad boy, as he sat on a stool by the stove one of these foggy mornings, when everybody feels like quarreling, with his fingers clasped around his knee, looking as though he did not know enough to last him to bed. "What are you thinking about any way."

"I was wondering where you would hav been to-day if Noah had run his ark into such a fog as this, and there had been no fog-horn on Mount Ararat, and he had passed by with his excursion and not made a landing, and had floated around on the freshet until all the animals starved, and the ark had struck a snag and burst a hole in her bottom. I tell you, we can all congratulate ourselvs that Noah happened to blunder on to that high ground. If that ark had been lost, either by being foundered or by being blowed up by Fenians because Noah was an Englishman, it would hav been cold work trying to populate this world. In that case another Adam and Eve would hav to be made out of dirt and water, and they might hav gone wrong again, and failed to raise a family, and where would we hav been. I tell you, when I think of the narrow escapes we hav had, it is a wonder to me that we hav got along as well as we hav.

"The more I read, the more I think. I don't believe I can ever be good enough to go to heaven, anyway, and I guess I will go into the newspaper business, where they don't hav to be good, and where they hav passes everywhere. Do you know, I think when I was built they left out a cogwheel or something in my head? I can't think like some boys. I get to thinking about Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, and of the dude with the cloven hoof that flirted with Eve, and treated her and Adam to the dried apples, and I don't think of them as some boys do, with a fig-leaf polonaise, and fig-leaf vests. I imagin them dressed up in the latest style. I know it is wrong, but that is what a poor boy has to suffer who has an imagination, and where did I get the imagination? This confounded imagination of mine shows me Adam with a plug hat on, just like our minister wears, and a stand up collar, and tight pants, and peak-toed shoes, and Eve is pictured to me with a crushed-angleworm-colored dress, and brown striped stockings, and newspapers in her dress to make it set out, and a hat with dandelions on, and a red parasol, and a lace handkerchief, which she put to her lips and winks with her left eye to the masher who is standing by the corner of the house, in an attitude, while the tail with the dart on the end is wound around the rain water barrel, so Eve won't see it and get scared. Say, don't you think it is better for a boy to think of our first parents with clothes on, than to think of them almost naked, exposed to the inclemency of the weather, with nothing but fig leaves pinned on? I want to do right, as near as I can, but I had rather think of them dressed like our folks are to-day, than to think of them in a cyclone with leaves for wearing apparel. Say, is it wrong to fight, but don't you think if Adam had put on a pair of boxing gloves when he found the devil was getting too fresh about the place, and knocked him out in a couple of rounds, and pasted him in the nose, and fired him out of the summer garden, that it would hav been a big thing for the world? Now, honest?

"Some boys can take things as they read them, and not think any for themselvs, but I am a thinker from Thinkerville, and my imagination plays the dickens with me. There is nothing I read about old times but what I compare it with the same line of business at the present day. Now, when I think of the fishermen of Galilee drawing their seines, I wonder what they would hav done if there had been a law against hauling seines, as there is in Wisconsin to-day, and I can see a constable with a warrant for the arrest of the Galilee fishermen, snatching the old apostles and taking them to the police station in a patrol wagon. I know it is wrong to think like that, but how can I help it? Say, suppose those fishermen had been out hauling their seines, and our minister should come along with his good clothes on, his jointed rod, his nickel-plated reel, and his silk fish-line, and his patent fish-hook, and put a frog on the hook, and cast his line near the Galilee fishermen, and go to trolling for bass? What do suppose the lone fishermen of Bible times would hav thought about the gall of the jointed-rod fisherman? Do you suppose they would hav thrown stones in the water where he was trolling? or would they hav told him there was good trolling around a point about half a mile up the shore, where they knew he he wouldn't get a bite in a week—the way a fellow at Muskego lake lied to our minister a spell ago? I tell you, boss, it is a sad thing for a boy to hav an imagination," and the boy put his other knee in the sling made by the clenched fingers of both hands, and waited for the grocery man to argue with him.

"Oh, pa and the minister can't make a first payment on me. Pa gets mad when I ask questions, and the minister thinks I am past redemption. Pa said yesterday that baldness was caused, in every case, by men's wearing plug hats, and when I asked him where the good Elijah (whom the boys called, 'Go up, old bald-head,' and the bears had a free lunch on them,) got his plug hat, pa said school was dismissed, and I could go. When the minister was telling me about the good Elijah going up through the clouds in a chariot of fire, and I asked the minister what he thought Elijah would hav thought if he had met our Sunday-school superintendent coming down through the clouds on a bicycle, he put his hand on my head and said my liver was all wrong. Now, I will leave it to you if there was anything wrong about that. Say, do you know what I think is the most beautiful thing in the Bible?

"Well, I think the finest thing is that story about the prodigal son, where the boy took all the money he could scrape up and went out West to paint the towns red. He spent his money in riotous living, and saw everything that was going on, and got full of benzine, and struck all the gangs of toughs, both male and female, and his stomach went back on him, and he had malaria, and finally he got to be a cowboy, herding hogs, and had to eat husks that the hogs didn't want, and got pretty low down. Then he thought it was a pretty good scheme to be getting around home where they had three meals a day and spring mattresses, and he started home, beating his way on the trains, and he didn't know whether the old man would receive him with open arms or pointed boots; but the old man came down to the depot to meet him, and right there before the passengers, and the conductor and brakemen, he wasn't ashamed of his boy, though he was ragged and looked as though he had been on the war-path, and the old man fell on his neck and wept, and took him home in a hack, and had a veal pot-pie for dinner. That's what I call sense. A good many men nowadays would hav put the police on the tramp and ordered him out of town. What! you going to close up the store? Well, I will see you later. I want to talk with you about something that is weighing on my mind," and the boy got out just in time to save his coat-tail from being caught in the door, and when the grocery man came back from breakfast he found a sign in front, "This store is closed till further notice.—SHERIFF."

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Alleghehy City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

"THE VOICES,"

—BY—

WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

TENTH EDITION.
JUST ISSUED.

PRICE, - - - $1.00.

From pages of reviews we giv one brief extract from Judge Baker, formerly of New York city:

"Considered in the light of a controversial or didactic poem, it is without an equal in contemporaneous literature—the birth of an audacious mind, and is destined to excite greater and more wide encircling waves of sectarian agitation than any anticredal work ever published."

This work is nutritious food for Liberal thinkers, and the greatest eye-opener of blind bigotry and superstition that has yet appeared, while it presents the author of nature, and human nature, in a rational and exalted light.

The work is divided into four parts, viz.: "The Voice of Nature," "The Voice of Superstition," "The Voice of Prayer," and "The Voice of a Pebble," which blend in their combination like a quartet in music, and are replete with reason, philosophy, and sarcasm.

The work contains 226 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound in cloth, with heavy board and beveled edges, and has a fine steel-plate engraved likeness of the author from a photograph by Sarony from life.

If, Then, and When. By the same author. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodox Hash, With a Change of Diet. By the same author. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
(Sole Agency for New York),
21 Clinton Place, New York City.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between Mrs. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D. W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN.

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

A VALUABLE TESTIMONIAL.

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK, June 11, 1883.

KERNER PEN AGENCY: I am very much pleased with the Kerner Stylographic Pen. Find money inclosed for six more. I have used all other stylographic pens, but find yours much superior to all.

H. J. THOMAS.

Mr. Thomas is an old journalist, an editor, and has had a large experience as a writer. His name is familiar to many, and we have his permission to refer intending purchasers to him if they wish further information.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Address GEORGE MACDONALD,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 21 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co.,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.

Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
Price, $2.00. TRUTH SEEKER Office. 21 Clinton Place, New York

---

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, cents. Sold at this office.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.
A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York city.

THE
GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and
A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.
With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN's edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS

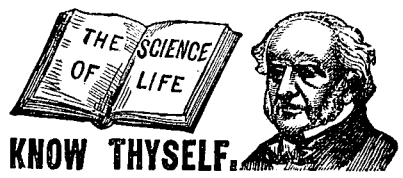
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and turpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill nnd experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief,

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

Is not the devil entitled to a very large share of gratitude from the human family for the indispensable part he performed in this grandest and sublimest scheme of salvation which God or man ever devised—if it is of such a character? Is not the devil also most essential to God in other directions? In his divine and benevolent scheme of punishing his poor, fallible creatures to the latest moments of eternity for misbehaving or misbelieving, who could carry out his kind intentions so faithfully as the devil? What other being could be induced to the nether regions of fire and brimstone, remaining patiently in that super-heated locality to pitch and punch into the burning lake, for unknown millions of years, countless billions of poor human wretches who had no hand in bringing themselvs into existence?—D. M. Bennett.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S DAY (24th Aug., 1572) ought to be forever kept by humane and reasonable persons as one of humiliation and mourning.—Voltaire.

INDUSTRY and temperance are twin virtues that always lead to happiness.—Elmina D. Slenker.

FROM cant of all kinds Cæsar was totally free. He was a friend of the people, but he indulged in no enthusiasm for liberty. He never dilated on the beauties of virtue, or complimented, as Cicero did, a Providence in which he did not believe. He was too sincere to stoop to unreality. He held to the facts of this life and to his own convictions; and as he found no reason for supposing that there was a life beyond the grave, he did not pretend to expect it. He respected the religion of the Roman state as an institution established by the laws. He encouraged or left unmolested the creeds and preachers of the uncounted sects or tribes who were gathered under the eagles. But his own writings contain nothing to indicate that he himself had any religious belief at all. He saw no evidence that the gods practically interfered in human affairs. He never pretended that Jupiter was on his side. He thanked his soldiers after a victory, but he did not order Te Deums to be sung for it; and in the absence of these conventionalisms he perhaps showed more real reverence than he could hav displayed by the freest use of the formulas of pietism.—Froude's Cæsar.

I HAV just said there was nothing but death and desolation in these hideous Alpine places, but I forgot. In the most forlorn and arid and dismal one of all, where the racked [sic] and splintered debris was thickest, where the ancient patches of snow lay against the very path, where winds blew bitterest and the general aspect was mournfulest and dreariest, and furthest from any suggestion of cheer or hope, I found a solitary, wee forget-me-not flourishing away, not a droop about it anywhere, but holding its bright blue star up with the prettiest and gallantest air in the world, the only happy spirit, the only smiling thing, in all that grisly desert. She seemed to say, "Cheer up! as long as we are here, let us make the best of it!" I judged she had earned a right to a more hospitable place; so I plucked her up and sent her to America, to a friend who would respect her for the fight she had made, all by her small self, to make a whole vast despondent desolation stop breaking its heart over the unalterable, and hold up its head and look at the bright side of things for once.—Mark Twain's Tramp Abroad.

WEE, modest, crimson-tipped flower,
Thou's met me in an evil hour;
For I maun crush amang the stoure
Thy slender stem;
To spare thee now is past my power,
Thou bonnie gem.

Cauld blew the bitter-biting north
Upon thy early, humble birth;
Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth
Amid the storm,
Scarce reared above the parent earth
Thy tender form.

The flaunting flowers our gardens yield,
High sheltering woods and wa's maun shield;
But thou beneath the random bield
O' clod or stane,
Adorns the histie stibble-field,
Unseen, alane. —Burns.

MR. MOODY says of the lost: "If they would, they could not receive Christ and find mercy." Why? Who has ordered that? Who has given life to men under this horrible condition, that they shall hav no real chance here, and then be shut up to hopeless inability forever? Who has made improbability [improveability?] a fact of this life only? Who has ordered that the first few steps—the first experiments, of life shall determin its eternal character? Who is it that has so ordered things that, anywhere, the wish to improve shall be eternally denied? There is only one reply; it is this: So God has ordered it. Then I say plainly: If such a God there be, he is himself the arch-demon of the universe; his cruelty is unspeakable; his injustice is immeasureable; his rule is the most detestable of tyrannies; his heaven is the scandal of the universe, and it is shameful to be saved.—Hopps on Moody's Sermon on Hell.

ONCE, seeing the inevitable way
My feet must tread through difficult places lay,
I cannot go alone, I cried, dismayed;
I faint, I fall, I perish without aid.
Yet, when I looked to see if help was nigh,
A creature weaker, wretcheder than I—
One on whose head life's fiercest storms had beat—
Clung to my garments falling at my feet.
I saw; I paused no more, my courage found;
I stooped and raised her gently from the ground.
Through every peril safe I passed at length,
For she who leaned upon me gave me strength.
—Phœbe Carey.

ORDINARY people are so used to be dazzled with riches that they pay as much deference to the understanding of a man of an estate as of a man of learning; and they are very hardly brought to regard any truth, how important soever it may be, that is preached to them, when they know there are several men of five hundred a year who do not believe it.—Addison's Sir Richard De Coverley.

Odds and Ends.

A FASHION paper says: "Nothing but coral necklaces can be seen upon society belles this season." Is there not some mistake about this? Why, such a scanty costume would— O heavens! there must be an error in the report.

THERE was a young man who said, "There!
I can steal in during this prayer!"
But the shriek of his shoes
So pervaded the pews
That he sank in his seat in despair.

THE epitaph that went upon the tombstone of a man in Arizona who loved his neighbors' horses not wisely but too well, and who was vicious in a dozen other directions, reads as follows: "He was pretty mean in some respects—but then he was meaner in others."

"DON'T you think Parson Brown is a man of considerable ardor?" inquired a friend of Mr. Jollie. "No," was the reply; on the contrary, I inferred from the exhibit made at dinner the last time he invited me to dine with him, that he was a man of very little larder."

"WHAT are we going to switch here for?" asked a tired passenger on an Arkansaw railway train. "Well, you see," replied a cynic who sat near, "a drunken man with a wagon and yoke of steers has been driving up on the last car for some time, and we hav switched to let him pass."—Arkansaw Traveler.

A NICE little maiden named Plummer,
Fell in love with a grocery drummer,
And the taffy he gave
She concluded to save,
So she canned it. (It lasted all summer.)
—Cape Ann Advertiser.

IT is supposed that the refusal of Harvard College to confer the title of LL.d. upon Gov. Butler was owing to a scarcity of that brand of titles in the college. The overseers looked over the list of titles and only found one "LL.D." in good repair, and as that one was intended for John L. Sullivan, of course Butler had to be left. It is always best to recognize true genius, anyway.—Peck's Sun.

AT a recent revival in one of the eastern cities a number of repentant sinners had given their experience, and before each one the minister in charge had announced with a flourish of trumpets that "Mr. So-and-so, a reformed drunkard, would now relate his experience." In this way a "reformed gambler," a "reformed jockey," a "reformed organ-grinder," and various other "reformed" agents of Satan had told how they were trying to be good. Finally "Jem" Lade, a noted sport from the town, arose and made his way to the vestry-room. It was characteristic of Lade's that even when he was the fullest of the cup that cheers and likewise inebriates, he was to all outward appearances the most sober and decorous individual in existence. This added to a clerical cut of coat which he affected, removed all suspicion from the mind of the minister. "Do you wish to giv your experience?" he asked, as Lade shook him cordially by the hand. "Yes," said Lade, coughing to disguise his hiccoughs, "that's what I'm here for." "How shall I announce you, my dear brother," patting him encouragingly on the back. "Oh, just say I'm—hic—well I'm a—a oh h—ll, say I'm—hic—a reformed minister." He was not allowed to proclaim the glad tidings.

A MAN was walking along one road, and a woman along another. The roads finally united into one, and reaching the point of junction at the same time, they walked on together. The man was carrying a large iron kettle on his back; in one hand he held the legs of a live chicken, in the other a cane, and he was leading a goat. They neared a dark ravine. Said the woman: "I am afraid to go through this ravine with you; it is a lonely place, and you might overpower me and kiss me by force." Said the man: "How can I possibly overpower and kiss you by force, when I hav this great iron kettle on my back, a cane in one hand, a live chicken in the other, and am leading this goat. I might as well be tied hand and foot." "Yes," replied the woman, "but if you should stick your cane in the ground and tie your goat to it, and turn the kettle bottom-side up, and put the chicken under it, then you might wickedly kiss me in spite of my resistance." "Success to thy ingenuity, O woman!" said the rejoicing man to himself. "I should never thought of this or similar expedient." And when they came to the ravine, he stuck his cane into the ground and tied the goat to it, gave the chicken to the woman, and said: "Hold it while I cut some grass for the goat;" and then—so runs the legend—lowering the kettle from his shoulders, he put the fowl under it and wickedly kissed the woman, as she was afraid he would.

AT a negro baptizing the other day a slim preacher took a fat sister down into the murky waters of a bayou. Just as he dipped her head under the water she slipped from his grasp and glided under the root of a large cypress-tree, from which sad entanglement it was impossible to extricate her until life was extinct. The preacher, without the slightest show of embarrassment, raised his hands, and turning to the crowd on the bank, exclaimed: "De Lawd gibbeth an' de Lawd taketh away, an' blessed be de name ob de Lawd." "Dat's all right, so far as de Lawd is consarned," replied the drowned woman's husband; "but what's I gwineter do? I ain't got no 'jection to de Lawd takin' her away, ef he 'vides me wid anuder wife 'bout de same size." "De Lawd knows his own business," said the preacher. "But dat ain't de p'int," persisted the husband. "I wants a wife, an' I wants her right heah. Yerse'f tuk dat 'oman inter dat water, an' Ise gwineter hold yerse'f 'sponsible. I'll gin yer ten minutes ter git me a wife, an' ef at de eend ob dat time yer ain't done made de 'rangements, I'll maul yer till yer couldn't baptize a cat. Does yer heah?" The preacher reflected a moment, and, addressing a sister, said: "Sister Kate, ter keep down a 'sturbance, won't yerse'f marry de gen'leman?" The sister agreed that immediate matrimony was somewhat in her line, and then the grief-stricken husband, turning to the preacher, exclaimed: "De settlement am satisfactory, bruder. Souse de next lady."—Arkansaw Traveler.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

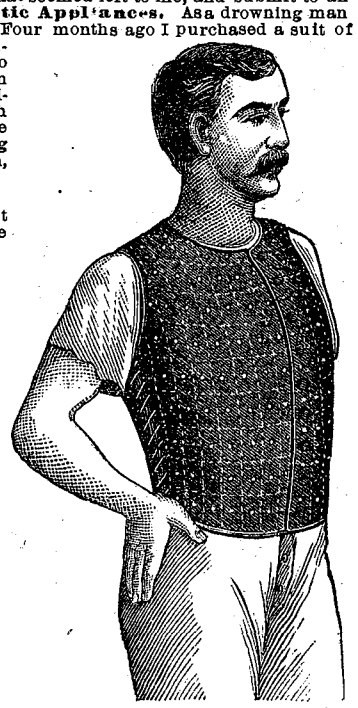
Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.



DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information,
Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 27. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, July 7, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

ARTHUR SYER, of England, recently poisoned his baby brother because he "wished him to go to heaven."

POPE LEO XIII. has an annual income of $1,800,000, but it is said that his expenses for food are but fifty cents a day.

DISRAELI, when taunted as to his being a Jew, replied: "One-half of the world worships a Jewess; the other half worships her son."

"HADN'T I better pray for rain to-day, deacon?" said a Binghamton minister Sunday. "Not to-day, dominie, I think," was the reply, "the wind isn't right."

"THE work that I am compelled to perform," said a dissatisfied minister during a sermon, "would kill a mule, and I don't believe that I can stand it."

REV. DR. PRYOR, of Virginia, sets but slight value on church honors, if the report is true that in the late general assembly at Lexington he said he would take fifty cents for his D.D.

REV. MR. PROUT, editor of a Virginia City (Mon.) religious paper, says: "Editing this paper is like trying to swing a very large cat in a very small garret without hurting the garret."

"NEVER engage in anything you would not open with prayer," said a very strict orthodox preacher. Whereupon an irreverent individual arose and inquired, "What would you do with a dozen oysters?"

"IT is considered a disgrace for a Hindoo girl not to be married when she is eleven or twelve years old." All the difference there is in the customs of the Hindoos and the people of this country is that the American girl is given a little longer time, but at the age of 25 or 30 she feels the disgrace just as keenly as a Hindoo girl could.

LORD SHAFTESBURY wants to know if the failure of the National Refuges for homeless and destitute children, is consistent with the great wealth of London. The London Freethinker thinks that a far more pertinent, and less impertinent, question than that of his lordship would be, "Is the existence of homeless and destitute children consistent with the great goodness of God?"

THE principal subject for discussion by the American and Foreign Bible Society, during its anniversary at Saratoga, is the necessity for an investigation of the charges preferred against the Baptist Missionary Union of Boston, which accuse the officers of the union with retaining for their own use funds that should hav been sent to the missionaries of the union in Burmah, and of falsifying accounts so that these sums were not missed from the treasury of the union.

THE Baltimore Methodist, in a sarcastic article on the circus which recently exhibited in that city, says: "Of course, no Methodists were there. No Methodist preacher peeped in with one eye and around with the other to see if anybody knew him! No Methodist carried his children at 1 o'clock to see the animals, and stayed till 2 to see the performance of the ring! Oh, no! All, of course, saved their money to make liberal contributions to the missionary cause and to build new churches."

The Waverly, Iowa, Republican reports that "the citizens of Riverside, Washington Co., hav selected Col. M. E. Billings, of this city, to deliver an oration to them on the Fourth of July. Riverside is the town where the colonel discussed theological matters with a local preacher last winter, and it appears that his style captivated the popular fancy, his selection over other proposed speakers having been made unanimous by a meeting composed of representativs of all the churches as well as the more worldly portion of the community."

A CHICAGO clergyman had a parrot which had picked up a good many evil sayings, and which had on that account become objectionable as a member of his family. As this clergyman was a few days ago making preparations to be married, he sold the bird, so as not to hav the creature for an annoyance to the coming bride. Two days afterward the purchaser brought the parrot back, and said that he would not hav such a profane noise maker in the house. The bird's offense consisted in the frequent screaming of a curse on the imaginary book agent who was presumed to be coming in when the door opened. As it had been in Presbyterian families from its infancy, nobody could tell where the poor parrot had learned such language. The pastor is now trying to giv the bird away.

AT one of the religious summer resorts the Sunday regulations were, two or three years ago, enforced with such rigidity that an old committee man mounted guard along the beach at daybreak on the morning of the Day of Rest to make sure that nobody should break either the law or the day by going in to swim. One Sunday morning this severe committeeman found three or four good brethren quietly enjoying an early bath. He ordered them to come out of the water, and threatened to take away their clothes, which they had left on the sand. Thereupon a couple of the brethren ran after the committee man and threathened to put him into the water, clothes and all. This frightened the committee man so greatly that he ran away as fast as his elderly legs could carry him. The brethren finished their bath with all desired leisure, and took occasion to make fun of the committee man and coadjutors, so that their work became both ridiculous and odious. The result of this and of what it led to was that Sunday rigidity became greatly relaxed, and finally was abolished. This religious resort now allows steamboats to land at its docks on Sunday, and even encourages them to do so.

THE National Reformer, of June 24th, says: "On Sunday a reception was given in Paris, at the Winter Circus, in commemoration of Garibaldi's death. General Canzio, Garibaldi's son-in-law, was the honored guest of the occasion. M. Delattre, deputy for Paris, occupied the chair, and on the platform were Signor Piancina, vice-president of the Italian Assembly, the deputies Comte de Douville Maillefeu, M.M. Lockroy, Tallandier, Clovis Hugues, Camille Pelletan, Vernhes, and Maurel. M. Yves Guyot was also present. The Standard says: 'The affair was got up by an anti-Clerical society. In the center of the platform was a large plaster bust of Garibaldi, but the building generally was adorned with the flags and emblems of different Atheistic associations. In front of the platform was a banner, bearing in large letters the well-known motto, "Ecrasons l'Infame." Girls and boys of Atheist schools took part in the demonstration, the boys playing trumpets at the close of the speeches, and the girls and infants presenting bouquets to the Italian guests. Several Italian deputies, and members from Freethinking societies from Italy and Spain, were present. The audience consisted chiefly of the lower middle class, and probably numbered two thousand.'"

A MOTHERLY-LOOKING old colored woman, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, came into the office yesterday and asked if she could not hav a notice "put in de paper 'bout a no-account dog dat's going about workin' ha'm under de cloak of 'ligion." "Who is he, auntie? What's he been doing?" "Lewis Garvey. Goes around preachin' at Zions and other places; and, honey, he has a wife and chillun. He's scum, an' I got a rock in dis yer basket. If I meet him I'll blow his heart out. Me an' my husband—my name's Mary Cook—he and me had six children, an' durin' the wah dey was all sold but me an' one child, 'Merica, an' we two been together ever sence. She's always been a good child until a few ebinins ago, when dis black debbil got hold of her." "What's her name?" "'Merica—United States of America Cook. It's too long, an' we call her 'Merica. She's twenty-three. I'm sixty-eight. Heah 'tis," handing the reporter a slip of paper. "I writ South for it. I wakened up de oder mawnin' an', reachin' over, Baby—I call her Baby 'cause she's de only one—wasent dare. I gits up an' foun' de do' locked. I fo'ced it 'an hunted till I foun' her wid dis villin Garvey. He 'low'd de girl wouldn't deny him nothin', an' he stan's up in de church with all de insurance an' sassy like an' preaches de gospel. Dat girl, always so good to me, her ole mother, is like a wile cat. No, I took no cowhide, but I jolted her sum. Put it in de paper an' I'll be obliged. It may make him g'way an' leave my child alone."

ON the subject of baldness Herr Reclam, a German professor, has recently made some timely observations. He does not think, as is sometimes said, that loss of hair is the result either of impaired health or of much study. The strongest men are often bareheaded, and German professors, who are nothing if not studious, are distinguished above all men by the profusion of their locks. On the other hand, soldiers and postilions, who wear heavy helmets and leather caps, and wear them a good deal, are frequently as bald as billiard balls. From these facts Herr Reclam draws the conclusion that baldness comes chiefly of the artificial determination of blood to the head, and to the heat and perspiration thence arising. The result is a relaxed condition of the scalp and loss of hair. If the skin of the head be kept in a healthy state, contends the professor, the hair will not fall off. To keep it healthy, the head-covering should be light and porous, the head kept clean by washings with water, and the hair cut short. The nostrums vended as hair restorers, and on which a fabulous amount of money is wasted by the ignorant for the benefit of quacks, he denounced as worse than useless. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred they are worse than useless. Cleanliness and cold water are the sole trustworthy specifics; but when once the hair roots are destroyed, not all the oil of Macassar, the bear's grease of Siberia, nor the cantharides of Spain, will woo back the vanished locks.

THE following account of a church row is from the Chicago Daily News. As the religious papers keep silence concerning the fracas, we must allow the account to be correct: "The Rev. Dr. Parker and the Rev. Mr. Everts, two light-weights of Hartford, Conn., fought with bare fists in the baptismal font of the South Baptist church on Sunday. The Marquis of Queensberry rules were not observed, but some blows were got in on either side which would hav done credit to Mr. Sullivan or the late Mr. Elliott. The little difficulty grew out of an attempt on the part of Dr. Parker to introduce Congregationalism into the church, which Mr. Everts would not permit. We admire Parker rather more than Everts, because he was determined to baptize the children he had brought to church, and thus put them beyond the chance of being lost, before he took off his coat to fight Everts. His anxiety about the souls of those children marks him as a conscientious Christian, and it would hav been much better for Everts had he waited until the children were baptized before he gave Parker that left-handed 'wiper' in the stomach. However, both of these brethren hav zeal—they hav shown it—and we can pardon much in view of the earnestness with which they fought their Christian battle. Brother Everts went from Chicago to take up his humble burden as a Baptist preacher, and Parker—well, we some way feel that Parker, too, must be a product of the wild and fetterless West. Both are godfearing men, but Parker doesn't like a Baptist, and Everts elevates his nose when he sees a Congregationalist. At least this has been the situation. How it will be, now that they hav tested each other's mettle and hav come so near going to glory together, remains to be seen. It's not improbable that they will be like David and Jonathan hereafter, for they are evidently the kind of men who respect good fighters."

News of the Week.

THE trade dollar now passes at only eighty-five cents.

THE health of Prince Bismarck, of Germany, is said to be improving.

THE Ocean Grove, N. J., Camp-meeting was opened for the season last Sunday.

THE decrease in the public debt during June will amount to about $17,500,000.

A NEGRO who had committed rape was lynched at Bowling Green, Mo., last Saturday.

CHOLERA is raging in Egypt. One hundred and nine persons died in Damietta on the 30th.

AN excursion steamer upset on Tonowanda Creek, N. Y., on the 1st, drowning four persons.

HARVARD was victorious this year over Columbia and Yale in the annual college regattas.

SIX men were killed in a railroad accident, twenty-five miles from Bradford, Pa., on the 5th inst.

THE American rifle team are in England and are practicing at West Broomwich for the international match.

SARTORIS, the husband of Gen. Grant's daughter Nellie, is implicated in a scandal with a certain Mrs. Bush.

BISMARCK, Dakota, pays the government $100,000 for the privilege of having the capital of the territory located in that city.

THE pope is endeavoring to effect a reconciliation between the Vatican and the French government. It is not yet known how successful he will be.

THE subject of pauper emigration from Ireland to this country is receiving the attention of the government. The evil is becoming a serious one.

SIX hundred and seventy-four Mormon converts were landed at this port last Sunday. The majority of them were Scandinavians; the rest English.

A CATAMARAN beat a horse from New York to Stony Point, Conn., last Sunday, by five hours, making the distance, ninety miles, in ten hours thirty minutes.

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL, of Ohio, who gained notoriety by defrauding the poor people of Cincinnati out of something like a million dollars, is reported to be in a dying condition.

THE New Jersey legislature has passed a law that no boy under 12 and no girl under 14 shall work in a factory or mine. It is said this law will take 3,000 juvenils out of the factories in Paterson alone.

THE editors of the Richmond Whig and State fought a duel last Saturday. Elam, of the Whig, was wounded in the thigh at the second fire. Neither of the combatants had been arrested at last accounts.

OVER $15,000,000 in United States fractional currency is still outstanding, although it is practically out of circulation. Most of it is supposed to be lost or destroyed. It is a clear gain of this amount to the government.

A CATHOLIC priest among the Indians at White Earth Indian reservation is charged with fraud in the administration of affairs. The priest was summoned to meet the inspector last week to answer the complaint, but refused, and an expedition has started after him. Bloodshed is expected.

PROF. BROOKS, of the Red House Observatory, Phelps, N. Y., reports a telescopic observation July 1, of an enormous group of spots now central upon the sun's disk. The diameter of the group is 50,000 miles, and it is visible to the naked eye. The spots exhibit violent cyclonic action, and electrical storms and auroras accompany this solar outbreak.

Communications.

Covenanterism.

The great founder of the Christian religion seems to hav been unique in his ideas concerning the taking of oaths and legal obligations, believing that the custom was wrong in itself, and injurious in its consequences to society. To his disciples, who regarded his word as law, he says, in Matt. v, 33: "Again ye hav heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the lord thine oaths; but I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool. . . . But let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." The apostle James, imbued with the same spirit, vehemently urges the observance of this rule in his general epistle to the Christians, in these words: "But above all things, my brethren, swear not; neither by heaven; neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation."

It is wonderful to see how men who believe in the plenary inspiration of the New Testament, in the supreme divinity and headship of Christ over the church as lawgiver and king, and would fight, and hav fought, like devils in behalf of these doctrins, do, nevertheless, practically trample them under foot, and treat them as of no importance whatever when we come to the matter of oaths. Jesus says, and his apostle repeats it, "Swear not at all." The church says, Nay, but we will swear, and will teach the people to swear also.

The only exception we can make to this general charge against Christendom of gross disobedience to the command of its acknowledged lawgiver, is in the case of the Quakers, who, in courts of justice as witnesses, and in official stations, simply testify and obligate themselvs by yea and nay, as Christ directed.

Those people called Infidels, believing that oath-taking is a relic of superstition, as well as an insulting reflection upon the honor and truthfulness of those who swear, so far follow Christ and the Quakers; and when called on to giv testimony, simply affirm. All the political governments in Europe and America, with the single exception of ours, influenced by the antichristian teaching and example of the church, exact oaths of office from everyone employed in their service, till it has become an unmeaning ceremony. I now proceed to show, from facts indubitable, that oath-taking is an almost synonymous expression with oath breaking, and has no effect whatever in making men speak the truth or do what they promis.

The most illustrious and impressiv case of oath-taking in the history of the world occurred in the British Isles, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, when the "National Covenant, or Confession of Faith," was sworn to on seven different occasions, between the years 1580 and 1651. The object of the "Covenant" was to enforce the theology and morality embodied in the "Confession of Faith," by requiring kings and princes to maintain the true religion of Christ Jesus as therein taught, and "that they be careful to root out of their empire all heretics and enemies to the true worship of God, who shall be convicted by the true kirk of God of the aforesaid crimes." The Catholic church has claimed from time immemorial that in regard to the extirpation of the Protestant heresy, government, by the will of God, was simply her authorized agent to punish the men whom she condemned as heretics. The Scotch Presbyterians made identically the same claim in the words above quoted, and enforced the claim as long as they had power to do so. This "National Covenant" was sworn to and subscribed by all the people from the king down, in the most solemn manner conceivable, with hands uplifted to heaven, and imprecating upon their souls God's everlasting wrath if they violated their engagements.

But instead of things growing better, they grew worse, until the year 1643, when, at the instigation of the Scotch, and as a panacea for all evils, the three kingdoms of Scotland, England, and Ireland, with King Charles at their head, swore to and subscribed a new ordinance called "The Solemn League and Covenant." The document is too long and verbose to be quoted in full, but I will giv the passages which bear upon the points in question. The Covenant runs thus: "We, noblemen, barons, knights, gentlemen, citizens, burgesses, ministers of the gospel, and commons of all sorts in the kingdoms of Scotland, England, and Ireland, after mature deliberation, resolved and determined to enter into a mutual and solemn league and covenant, wherein we all subscribe, and each one of us for himself, with our hands lifted up to the most high God, do swear that we shall, without respect of persons, endeavor the extirpation of popery, prelacy, superstition, heresy, profaneness, and whatsoever shall be found to be contrary to sound doctrin and the power of godliness, . . . and so that the Lord may delight to dwell in the midst of us, and that the Lord may be one, and his name one, in the three kingdoms." After a long list of the things they promis to do to show forth the power of godliness, they wind up with these words: "And this covenant we make in the presence of Almighty God, the searcher of all hearts, with a true intention to perform the same, as we shall answer at that great day when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed." This was the famous "Solemn League and Covenant," the oath and subscription to which, by the population of the three kingdoms, it is claimed, made the English, Scotch, and Irish people a "Christian" nation, a peculiar people, in covenant with God, as the Jews were under the theocracy of Moses. This is the Covenant which, it is maintained, is in as full force upon their posterity, dejure, but not de facto, as it was upon the men who actually swore to and subscribed it in 1643. And this kind of relationship to God is what the organization called "National Reformers," are now struggling to bring about in this country by an amendment of the Constitution declaring,

I. "That Almighty God is the source of all authority and power in civil government.

II. "That the Lord Jesus Christ is the ruler among the nations.

III. "That the Bible as the revealed will of God is the supreme law of the land."

And, that this theological creed, when introduced into the Constitution, may not stand as a dead letter, and of no account in the enterprise of making us a Christian nation, these reformers ask,

IV. "That such changes be introduced into the body of the Constitution as may be necessary to giv effect to these amendments in the preamble."

This means that a religious congress shall make laws, and religious judges expound them, and a devout executiv enforce them, as was the case in Scotland. And when this is accomplished, and the prisons are full of honest non-conformists, who cannot take the oath, these revolutionists hav the stupendous impudence to declare that "no injustice would be done to those few individuals who are enemies of the Christian religion, and who claim the right to prohibit the nation, as such, from all religious worship." To advance this backward movement toward the sixteenth century, an ably conducted paper has been established in Philadelphia, conventions are frequently held, and lecturers are sent out to influence the masses of the religious people. The sentiment of loyalty to Christ as the captain of their salvation is played upon by the clergy, as it was eight hundred years ago by Peter the Hermit, when he preached up the war of the Crusades to rescue Jerusalem and the holy places from the Saracens, in order to prepare the way for the second coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, to take his seat upon the throne of universal empire. But to return to the argument.

There never was in this world a better chance to test the truth of the Covenanter idea that "a nation is a moral person;" that it can hav a religious character and a conscience, and that it can perform religious worship, than was afforded at the time when the "Solemn League and Covenant" was sworn to. For the oath-takers were homogeneous in every sense, the English being all English, and the Scotch all Scotch, and Protestant, except in Ireland. Surely a nation whose God was the Lord by a solemn and deliberate act, and among whom a covenant-keeping God made his dwelling-place, was now on the highway to universal holiness. Surely it was, and would forever continue to be, a model nation, after which all other nations in future times could safely pattern their affairs, when they saw the good results of being in covenant with God. Religion would become the very business of the kingdom, and every day in the week would be holy as a Sabbath. Thus, basking in the smiles of Jehovah, they would hav the strongest incentivs to honor him in their daily walk and conversation, and enjoy the consciousness of the spiritualizing effects produced by this covenant relation. But what was the fact? Why, in five years—not fifty, when an apostate generation might hav come upon the stage—while the men who had personally taken the oath of the covenant were still living, the whole nation from center to circumference, and from the king on the throne down to the laborer in his cottage, had degenerated to such a pitch that it became necessary to propitiate the wrath of the Almighty by getting up "A Solemn Acknowledgment of Public Sins and Breaches of the Covenant," and be all sworn over again!

But before giving a sample of the universal lapse of the three kingdoms into wickedness, allow me to remind the reader that what I am now going to quote is not taken from some inimical historian's account of the matter, full of misrepresentation and exaggeration, but from the document drawn up and signed by the Covenanters themselvs. Here it is as follows: "We, noblemen, barons, gentlemen, burgesses, ministers of the gospel, and commons of all sorts, within this kingdom, . . . do humbly and sincerely, as in his sight who is the searcher of hearts, acknowledge the many sins and great transgressions of the land. We hav done wickedly, our kings, our princes, our nobles, our judges, our officers, our teachers, and our people. We hav not remembered to render unto the Lord according to his goodness, and according to our own vows and promises; but hav gone away backward by a continued course of backsliding, and hav broken all the articles of that solemn league and covenant which we swore before God, angels, and men. We hav been so far from endeavoring the extirpation of profaneness, and what is contrary to the power of godliness, that profanity hath been much winked at, and profane persons much countenanced and many times employed, until iniquity and ungodliness hath gone over the face of the land as a flood; nay, sufficient care hath not been had to separate betwixt the precious and the vile, by debarring from the sacrament all ignorant and scandalous persons according to the ordinances of this kirk. It were impossible to reckon up all the abominations that are in the land; but the blaspheming of the name of God, swearing by the creatures, profanation of the Lord's day, uncleanness, drunkenness, excess, and rioting, vanity of apparel, lying and deceit, railing and cursing, arbitrary and uncontroled oppression, and grinding of the faces of the poor by landlords and others in place and power, are all become ordinary and common sins; and besides all these things, there be many other transgressions whereof the lands wherein we liv are guilty."

Now, if this was an honest confession of the truth in the case, it proves, beyond all question, that the repeated and fearful oaths which these Covenanters took, over and over again, resulted in no good whatever in the way of reformation, but proved them to be a nation of perjurers and hypocrits, addicted to all kinds of wickedness; and that there was nothing at all in their so-called covenant relations with God which was certain to make them loyal either to God, their king, or their most solemn obligations. Oath taking was always a condition precedent to oath breaking and perjury! This must hav been the reason why Jesus declared that in giving testimony saying more than yea or nay "cometh of evil." This must hav been the reason why the Apostle James says that the oath-taker places himself "in condemnation." I will digress a moment by elaborating this point. When you swear a man in a court of justice, and make him call down the vengeance of God upon his soul and body if he do not speak the truth, you insult him and undermine his manhood and self-respect, and treat him as a rogue. An oath goes upon the presumption that every man in his every-day life is a habitual liar and a mean, unprincipled person. You appeal to the lowest and most unmanly passion of his nature—the fear of punishment. Treat a man as a cowardly knave by always suspecting that he is one, and you make him a knave. Reduce a man to the condition of a slave, and you make him both a liar and a thief. Giv him back his stolen freedom, his manhood and self-respect, and you place him under the most powerful motivs to act honorably and right. This is why so many reclaimed drunkards go back to their cups, like the "sow that is washed to her wallowing in the mire." You make him sign the pledge and swear that he will abstain from all liquor, "with the help of God." You push him off his own legs, on which all true men stand when they are going to do an important thing, and he leans on the arm of an anthropomorphic and therefore a mythical God. Then, when the temptation to drink comes, he yields, secretly feeling that it was no great harm to do so, just this once, or the Lord would hav helped him to resist the temptation. I think you would meet with much better success in the temperance cause if you would throw away your pledges and oaths of total abstinence "depending on God's help," and instead of setting the poor drunkard's feet upon such stilts, appeal to his manhood, and strengthen the joints and sinews of his legs, so that he can stand upon them and fight against his ignoble slavery to a bad habit.

In my war upon the whole system of oath taking, which treats the best of men as if they were imbecils or rascals, I draw upon the great poet of nature, whose distinction is that he probes and analyzes the human heart, and exposes its secret springs of action. He givs his views of the degrading effect of oath taking, and the superior advantage of the simple word of honor in inducing men to speak the truth and do as they promis. In his "Julius Cæsar," where the conspirators assemble at the house of the noble Brutus, to plan the taking off of Cæsar—"not that they loved Cæsar less, but that they loved Rome more"—in answer to the proposal of Cassius that "we swear our resolution," Brutus answers thus:

> "No, not an oath. If not the faith in men,
> The suffrance of our souls, the time's abuse—
> If these be motivs weak break off betimes,
> And every man hence to his idle bed;
> So let high-sighted tyranny rage on,
> Till each man drop by lottery. But if these,
> As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
> To kindle cowards, and to steel with valor
> The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen,
> What need we any spur but our own cause
> To prick us to redress? What other bond
> Than secret Romans that hav spoke the word
> And will not palter? and what other oath
> Than honesty to honesty engaged,
> That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
> Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous,
> Old, feeble carrions, and such suffering souls
> That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear

Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain
The even virtues of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressiv mettle of our spirits,
To think that, or our cause, or our performance
Did need an oath; when every drop of blood
That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
Is guilty of a several bastardy,
If he do break the smallest particle
Of any promis that hath passed from him."

This philosophy of Brutus coalesces exactly with that of Christ, and both agree that the simple yea or nay of a true man is more to be relied on for fulfilment than if he were chased into the path of duty by a thousand devils, all clamoring for his damnation in case he did not speak the truth. Nay, more than this; they seem to agree that appeals made to men's fears of hell, instead of to their manhood, cut the hamstrings of endeavor, so that they limp in the pathway of duty.

But even in the department of love, where both parties, especially the man, are so voluble in their sacred vows, the great poet of nature speaks the language of wisdom and prudence. Like all good men, he wishes love to be a permanent cement between hearts, and therefore, in his "Romeo and Juliet," he makes Juliet say to Romeo:

"Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say, Aye,
And I will take thy word; yet (for) if thou swearest,
Thou mayest prove false; at lovers' perjúries
They say Jove laughs. O gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully."

But Romeo, like most other lovers in the full flush of their admiration of their loved ones, bursts out into an oath of fidelity:

"Lady! by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops."

Juliet, however, being a woman with more sagacity, and with deeper interests at stake, interrupts him and says:

"Oh, swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,
That nightly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable."

Romeo then asks, "What shall I swear by?" to which the wise and philosophic Juliet says, "Do not swear at all."

Now, in the light of these teachings, so profound in their wisdom, let us return to the case of the oath-takers, to the Solemn League and Covenant. It is, however, observable that in the long catalog of sins and crimes which they had committed, there was one which they did not commit; and that was the capital crime of heresy. Leprous as they represented themselvs to be, from head to foot, with moral and deadly disease; reeking with immoralities of all kinds, they, one and all, stuck to sound believing. In all their defection, their faith suffered no damage, but they continued to be as orthodox as the devil. Do not malign the devil by charging him with heterodoxy, for an "inspired" apostle declares that the devils all believe, and so sincerely that they "tremble" while they believe. And the history of all past ages, as well as the present, shows, in thousands of instances, that the most diabolical lives may consist with evangelical piety and orthodoxy.

The Philadelphians hav recently been celebrating the 200th anniversary of William Penn's landing on the banks of the Delaware river, and his laying the foundations of the great state which bears his name in its corporate title. And the fact is worthy of mention in this discussion that the famous treaty of friendship which he and his fellow-Quakers made with the Delawares, Mingoes, and other Susquehanna tribes of Indians, was consummated without any oaths at all; and was, in the language of a distinguished Frenchman, the only treaty known in history that was never sworn to and never broken.

If any one wish to put in a plea for our Covenanting forefathers, that all these terrible and humiliating confessions of sin were made in a kind of palavering or Pickwickian sense, and that they did not mean what they said, like similar confessions which we hear in the pulpit every Sunday now, the advocate damages the cause of his clients by his apology. For what a degrading and blasphemous conception of the heart-searching and reins-trying God they must hav had, when they believed that he could be fooled and bamboozled by a lip confession of sin, while the heart was reeking with deceit and hypocrisy!

And now the descendants of these Covenanters in the United States, untaught by and unashamed of the stupendous failure of their ancestors of Scotland, are bent upon a repetition of the experiment, and that under the most unfavorable circumstances, of making this heterogeneous people of ours a "Christian nation," by inserting into the preamble of the Constitution a confession of faith; altering the body of the Constitution so as to conform to it, and requiring Congress to carry out its provisions by law! These Covenanters do not recognize this government as lawful, because of the secularity of the Constitution, and the absence of any recognition of God, or of religion of any kind, which marks its character. They will not vote at the polls; will not sit on a jury, or hold office of any kind; and only pay taxes as a quid pro quo for the protection which the government, by its army, its navy, and judiciary, givs their persons and property, both at home and abroad. In the wake of these leaders are a motley number of half-breeds—Ephraimites—"cakes not turned," as the prophet calls them, and therefore baked only on one side—consisting of ex-judges, ex-governors, presidents of colleges, doctors of divinity, and a multitude of others, who, on stated occasions, utter their inarticulate nonsense, some in favor of putting God into the Constitution, and others protesting against taking him out.

But if you would take the five thousand one hundred and thirty-three (5133) theological dogmas, or phases of faith, which the Rev. Dr. Patterson, of Chicago, counted in the Westminster Confession of Faith, and with a hydraulic press stuff the whole of them into the Constitution of the United States, and then go round and swear all the people, from the president down, by the same fearful oaths and imprecations which the Covenanters took, it would not make us a Christian people. It would, however, make us, as it did our ancestors in the British Isles, a nation of liars, scoundrels, and hypocrits. It would put the clergy in power again, and they would establish courts of high commission in every state of the Union, and hand over to their agent, the civil magistrate, any man they would spot as a heretic and dangerous to the "covenanted" faith! The famous test act, so long in force in England, requiring all to take the sacrament in the established church before they could hold office, was one of the sequelæ of the Solemn League and Covenant. Atheists, Deists, and orthodox men of the most immoral lives, before they could sit in Parliament, or hold any other office, would come to the "Lord's table," and go through the solemn mummery of partaking of the body and blood of Christ, till the bishops themselvs, a class who never had very delicate stomachs, sickened at the hypocrisy, and most reluctantly agreed to a change! This is history. And what is the use of reading the history of past times if we learn no lessons of wisdom from it? The framers of our Constitution did read history. They saw, too, with their own eyes, the deadly effect of a union of the state with the church all over Europe, and organized the new government as a purely secular institution, securing to every man his right of believing and worshiping as he pleased, or not believing and worshiping at all. These Covenanters, however, are not pleased with this arrangement, which makes religion a matter between a man and his god, and makes all the citizens equal before the law. Although the state, by its leniency, actually makes them a favored class, by exempting them from the duties of citizenship in the matter of voting, holding office, and serving on juries, they want the additional right, backed by the power of the government, to compel all people to conform to their religious opinions, or accept the alternativ of going to prison. The head men of this revolutionary movement, though not the tail, firmly believe the doctrin of the Scotch and English covenants; that the proper function of the civil magistrate under a "reformed" government, such as they seek to establish in this country, would be to do the behests of the church in enforcing the law against heretics and non-conformists, since the clergy are the "embassadors of Christ," and say they know what is the will of God on these subjects. This, I am aware, is a heavy charge, but I will substantiate it by proof. In chapter xxiii, section 3, of the "Westminster Confession of Faith," to which the Covenanters hav sworn, and now maintain their allegiance, it is distinctly affirmed that "the civil magistrate hath power to suppress all blasphemies and heresies, reform all abuses in worship, to settle all the ordinances of God, and cause them to be observed; and for the better effecting thereof, he hath power to call synods and to provide that whatever is transacted in them be according to the mind of God."

But how is a civil magistrate, who concerns himself with secular affairs, to know what is the mind of God in a given case? Obviously, by asking the clergy, who alone are the commissioned expounders of his will, and who hold in their hands the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and can open or shut the gates as they see fit. But what clergy? Ah, there's the rub! The Catholic? No; they are Papists. The Episcopalian? No; they are Prelatists. The General Assembly Presbyterians? No; they are mere half-breeds; for, when they organized as a sect, they struck out of the Confession the whole of this section, and so far became traitors to Christ, and cannot be trusted with anything that concerns his crown rights as king of nations. Shall the civil magistrate consult any of the many new sects that hav arisen in modern times—Methodists, Baptists, and others? No; for they are "Independents, Arminians, and heretics," condemned by the Solemn League and Covenant. The clergy then, who know the mind of God as to what is heresy, and who will constitute the court of high commission, and use the civil magistrate as a servant to enforce its decrees, will be the little squad of "witnesses for the truth," called Covenanters, assisted by pious ex-judges as assessors! And this will be the ruling precedent, taken from the National Covenant, "Whoever shall be convicted by the true kirk of God as a heretic, and enemy of the true worship of God as thus established by law," he is the man that the civil magistrate, bound by his official oath, is to "root out" of the land.

If you wish to form some adequate idea of what would be the condition of things in this country, in case the "national reformers" carry out their plans, read the Covenanter documents themselvs, and especially those chapters in the second volume of "Buckle's History of Civilization," in which he describes the proud arrogance of the clergy on the one hand, and the ignominious subjection of the people on the other, when the "Solemn League and Covenant" held sway, and made Scotland a "Christian" nation. The dominion of the ministers and church sessions was so cruel and inquisitorial, and to this age so incredible, that, for the truth of all his statements, the historian quotes from the Covenanter records themselvs. "The kirk session which enforced the decisions uttered in the pulpit, was so supported by the superstitious reverence of the people, that it was far more powerful than any civil tribunal.

"By its aid, the minister became supreme. For whoever presumed to disobey him was excommunicated, was deprived of his property, and was believed to hav incurred the penalty of eternal perdition. The clergy interfered with every man's private concerns; ordered how he should govern his family, and often took upon themselvs the personal control of his household. Their minions, their elders, were everywhere; for the parish was divided into several quarters, and to each quarter one of these officials was allotted, in order that he might take special notice of what was done in his own district. Besides this, spies were appointed, so that nothing could escape their supervision. Not only the streets, but even private houses, were searched and ransacked to see if any one were absent from church while the minister was preaching. To him all must listen, and him all must obey. Without the consent of his tribunal, no person might engage himself either as a domestic servant or a field laborer. To speak disrespectfully of a preacher was a grievous offense; to differ from him was a heresy; even to pass him in the street without saluting him was punished as a crime."

The lesson which history teaches us on a thousand pages is that no ecclesiastic can ever be trusted with the liberty of other persons. The moment he feels that he is an "embassador of Christ," and that he holds in his hands the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and either frames, or accepts, a theological creed, and says he knows it is true, and that all others are false; and when he sincerely believes and feels that all men must either believe it as he does, or be eternally damned in a lake of fire and brimstone, the very benevolence of his character will lead him to persecute. For what, he says, is imprisonment in a dungeon, or burning the body at the stake, if, by such disciplinary punishment the victim's immoral soul can be saved? Paradoxical as it may be, and false as it may and does seem to some, it was the benevolence of Calvin's nature that led his agents, the Syndics of Geneva, to sentence Servetus to be burnt with slow, instead of quick, fire with the hope that at the eleventh hour and fifty-ninth minute, if not before, he would recant his heresy and go to heaven. And it is this sincerity and conscientiousness of the persecutor which makes us so shudder at his bloody work. When a man inflicts injury upon another, from anger or malice, his anger may cool with time, and his malice be turned into pity. But when he weeps from sympathy for his victim, as Farel did at the execution of Servetus, and burns the heretic solely from a sense of duty to God and the church, and to save his soul from hell, persecution becomes a matter of principle, and no man who has a spark of independent thought is safe.

There are two classes of persons who are differently affected when they contemplate these facts and this reasoning. The first indignantly laugh to scorn the idea that a handful of blatant conspirators can carry out their purposes against the people and government of the United States by a radical change of the Constitution such as they propose. They trust the intelligence of the people and their love of liberty to defeat the realization of any such scheme. They refer with triumph to the tide of affairs which is now setting in from, instead of to, the church, both in Europe and America. They sneer contemptuously at the long array of names—Episcopalians, Methodists, Universalists, Unitarians, and other halfway Christians who hav enlisted in this movement, and who would be among the first to be sent to prison under a "reformed" Presbyterian government. They quote the admissions made by the religious press, based on statistics, that the church has lost its former power over the people; that they do not attend its ministrations as they once did; that the candidates for the Christian ministry in all Protestant sects are comparativly few, and generally men of third or fourth rate abilities, who, in their pulpit efforts, cannot command the respect of intelligent people. They point to the census table, which shows that when compared with the whole population of the country, the church is in a small minority. The other class believe that under all these surface appearances, they see signs of trouble. They argue that this is a popular government, and that if law is the expression of the will of the people, the people, like the ocean, can be lashed into excitement by demagogs and fanatics, during which laws can be enacted and deeds done, the evil of which cannot be repaired. They point to the fact that a handful of rebels in the South in 1861 induced millions of men to offer their lives and property to build up a slave-holding oligarchy in which they had no interest whatever, but the success of which would hav been to them a lasting injury. They point to the Anabaptist movement in Germany, which cost tens of thousands of lives before it could be suppressed, as proof that the religious sentiment is so deep in human nature that when manipulated by a fanatical priesthood, it stops at nothing short of success in executing its plans, or death. They cite instances in the legislation of this country to show that half a dozen sober, unscrupulous, and vigilant men, can, in the expiring hours of Congress, get bills passed and made into laws, in the name and by the authority of the people, which never could hav gone through the ordeal of discussion, and which are injurious to the people. And when an iniquity is surreptitiously framed into a law, especially if it enures to the benefit of the church, it is almost impossible to hav it repealed.

It is true that the general intelligence and freedom of the people are a safeguard against fanaticism. It is true that no one now believes, nor could be made to believe, what for long centuries was accepted as true, that the kings of England, by virtue of their sacred anointing, could, by a touch, cure the disease of scrofula, or king's evil. It is true that it would be impossible to revive the belief in witchcraft, although there are as many witches now as there ever were; and to get up a crusade for their extermination, although the Bible statute, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv," has never yet been repealed. But it is not true that intelligence in every case is the death of superstition. To the Protestant mind there is nothing more absurd than the doctrin that after a prayer by a priest, a wafer of bread is transmuted by miracle into the body, blood, and divinity of Jesus Christ, and that the cummunicant can eat and digest his God. Yet two of the best men, and as well bred scholars as the Oxford University ever produced, left the ministry of the church of England, joined the Catholic church under a cloud of opprobrium, and, like thousands more of the most cultivated minds in Europe and America, believe in transubstantiation as firmly as you disbelieve it. Is it folly, then, to suppose that men of intellect, under an "inspiration" of the deity, might not consecrate their powers to the enterprise of bringing the people and government of the United States into covenant relations with God, as one of the conditions precedent to the second coming of Christ? The Salvation Army in England is made up of the most ignorant and uncultivated fanatics; yet they raise large sums of money to carry out their plans. And even bishops are inquiring whether a union of the Salvation Army with our American revivalists, Moody and Sankey, is not necessary to convert the masses in London to Christianity! We take too much for granted when we say that intelligent, and otherwise good men, cannot believe absurd dogmas, and engage in wild, revolutionary schemes. Faraday, as a chemist, and natural philosopher, outshone his illustrious preceptor, Sir Humphrey Davy, in his daring and successful investigations in the field of science. In one of his lectures, he says: "In knowledge that man only is to be condemned and despised, who is not in a state of transition?" And yet this great man was a Sandemanian, and adopted a cast-iron creed, which, in the estimation of most other people, was a mass of absurdities. These considerations, and others cognate to them, hav filled the hearts of many with apprehension that a fanatical religious revolution, or at least a bloody endeavor to get one up, is among the possibilities of the future. Our hope, too, is in the intelligence of the common people who vote. But they must be enlightened on this particular subject, for at first blush the enterprise commends itself to the Christian sympathies of the peeple. It is only when they understand the principle which lies at the foundation of the movement; and when they reflect upon the heterogeneous character of our people, that they will be convinced that the project is wrong in itself, could not be carried out without bloodshed, and that, even if it could be accomplished peaceably, it would not improve the moral condition of our people, any more than the Solemn League and Covenant improved the moral condition of the Scotch and English nations. And this is the object I hav had in view in this essay.

Then let us rally around the Constitution as our fathers made it, and declare our calm and intelligent purpose, which an oath could not strengthen, that we will preserve it at all hazards and make the divorce between the state and the church perpetual. But I revoke the word divorce, for that implies a previous marriage. Our government was never married to the church, as all the governments of Europe hav been, and still are. It has never yielded to the meretricious suggestions and advances of the harlot who has led all other governments astray. The peculiarity of our government is that it is neither masculin nor feminin, but stands isolated in the neuter gender. It is not "a moral person" at all, capable of believing a creed and worshiping God. It is incapable of the sentiment of love, pure or impure; and therefore cannot commit the crime of adultery to which the church invites it. It is simply a contrivance of the wisest men who ever lived, by which the people protect their persons and property from foreign and domestic invasion, and promote the general good. It enjoins the worship of no God; recognizes no religion whatever, prescribes the observance of no Sabbath, requires of its officials no religious oath, and knows of no other world but this. Totally different in these respects from all other governments on earth, and attributing the peculiarity to the wisdom of our fathers, whose grand conception was that governments were made for the people, and not the people for governments, let us stand round our secular Constitution, and say to the priesthood of all religions, who may wish to tamper with it; and say it so loudly and firmly that they will hear and heed: Hands off!

A. B. BRADFORD.

The Real Enemies of the Church.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The above heads a long editorial in a recent issue of the Sun. The alarm was sounded on account of a challenge issued by the New York State Freethinkers' Association, which holds its annual meeting at Rochester on August 29th. It seems that the Liberals want some able divine to giv an address defending or sustaining the claims of the Christian religion, or against Infidelity, or both, as the case may be.

"Of course," says the pious Æneas of the Sun, "no sensible man would go to Rochester to defend his religious faith in that Infidel meeting." Then he goes on to say that such Infidels are worth very little attention from the church, for they are pretty sure to be philosophical quacks. Now if there ever was a sheet published whose editor deserves the name of quack more than the New York Sun, I should like to find it. A quack is a person who palms off a nostrum on a credulous public, of the nature of which he knows nothing. Look at the insane articles that appear periodically about sun spots—not the New York Sun, for that is immaculate—but the great luminary. Now the hack that writes these articles is a veritable quack, and it can be proved in a hundred instances that he knows nothing about science, either practically or theoretically. It would not be so bad if the editor of the Sun only dabbled once in a while in science, but he must turn his attention every now and then to theology. He even goes so far as to tell the church the kind of Infidelity that is dangerous, as if all kinds were not weakening. He declares that there is a destructiv force undermining theology, and that the force is within the church itself. The Infidels without are easily handled, says this wiseacre, but it is not so easy for the church to close its ears against the bleating of its own lambs. Still there has been quite a number of recreants among the clerical brethren that even the general assembly did not dare to meddle with. Ho! ho! So the shepherds within the fold hav been reading Tom Paine and other Infidel books, or hav the Freethinkers, of whom Dana makes so little account, really been whispering, like Satan in the garden of Eden, on the sly? It would seem that if they are incapable of conducting a controversy with learned theologians—save the mark!—they can at least get their ideas smuggled into the sanctuaries. This, however, was cleverly done, for there was the flaming sword to keep them out.

Such men as Talmage, who only skim the surface in theology, hav made plenty of noise, but somehow such blatant divines do not scare the wolves away from the poor sheep. Neither can such feeble editorials as those that appear in the Sun do any good. The Freethinkers, under different names, are a body of workers extending from one end of the civilized world to the other. They are inside the political coteries, and even his holiness, the pope, is afraid of them, or why does he meddle with such a trifle as the Irish question to his own detriment? Ah, he hears the rumbling of the latent thunder, and like an anxious shepherd he sends out his encyclicals to warn his poor sheep of the approach of the cyclone. What are the warnings of our general assemblies but imitations of the pope's anathema? They little dream what they are doing, for they are actually hastening the destruction to their religions they are trying to avert. It is well known that simple air has a tremendous power when it is compressed. Why, they are even now boring a tunnel under the Hudson on this principle, and in spite of all they can do the air becomes unmanageable. Freethought is much of the same nature when it is hindered, for otherwise it breaks out in the most unexpected places. Yes, much as this power is despised by the Sun's penny-a-liners, this power will permeate society, and in spite of all a tyrannical press can do it will cause tyrants in every part of the world to tremble.

But there is even a doubt in Dana's mind concerning the authority on which the orthodox religion rests, for he says, if the Bible is not the word of God, the church has lost its chart and compass. The Freethinker of the present day says that God had nothing to do with the composition of the Bible. He has a perfect right to examin the scriptures, for even Christian ministers and learned scholars are sifting it and tracing the authority on which it stands to its very foundation. But the strangest thing is that a man of Dana's caliber should hav a finger in this quarrel among the religionists. I doubt if he ever studied the elements even of divinity, or more than gave a cursory glance at the works of Voltaire, Paine, and other Infidel writers. It will be better for him after this to turn his powerful mind to religious subjects, and study Freethought works, so that when he undertakes to write about men with brains he can do so without quoting so much trash from the columns of orthodox papers.

JAY LEWES.

New York, June 26, 1883.

Mr. Leland as a Missionary.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am still following up my mission. My last report was from Alliance, Ohio. A large and influential committee there had the project of a state convention in charge. They met last Sunday morning, and discussed the proposition for an hour. There was some opposition at first, but it nearly disappeared as the discussion advanced, and the committee finally decided by a vote of ten to three to hold the convention.

There is a very fine society of Liberals at Alliance—an Independent Society—and they wish as yet to remain independent of any League or other organization. They began some years ago as a Liberal-Christian church, but they soon dropped the word "Christian," and they hav been progressing in other ways since, till now they are as Liberal as any League can be. They comprise Spiritualists, Materialists, and all the shades between, and are as harmonious as Liberals who agree to stand and work on a secular platform ever get to be. They hav had their trials and difficulties, and hav overcome them, and their experiences teach them how to agree and fit them for harmony. They hav a fine hall of their own to meet in. It is rather churchy in appearance, owing doubtless to its semi-Christian origin, but it is well lighted, tastefully decorated, and every way pleasant and attractiv. The music, too, is delightful. Many a Christian strays in there and finds the heaven below which he was looking for above. They say, or sing,

> "This is the way I long hav sought,
> And mourned because I found it not."

Mrs. Lake occupied the morning hour, and pointed her hearers very radically to the "Higher Life," and Mr. W. F. Peck spoke in the evening. These kindred oratorical drops that hav mingled into one, cross each other at the Alliance railroad depot, with only chance for a glance and a shake. Well, we had to hurry on board at 4 P.M. to fill our evening appointment at Salem, where Mr. Peck lectured in the morning. These two devoted Liberals continue to grow in power and eloquence, and consequently in popular acceptance from year to year. Mrs. Lake never appeared to better advantage than at these two lectures.

At Salem we found a large and intelligent audience. After Mrs. Lake's lecture I presented the plan for a state convention. This was a regular League meeting, well informed with regard to League work. A committee was appointed to co-operate with Alliance and other committees, and after a few minutes of conference they decided unanimously to go in for the convention. These committees will communicate with other Leagues and Liberals in Ohio, and the time and place for the convention will be announced hereafter.

At Cleveland I met Thomas Lees, and spent a day with him calling on Liberals. At Toledo, M. O. Waggoner took me all around town, introducing me to Liberal and Christian alike, and at both places the call for a state convention met with general favor. There is a desire everywhere to hear Mr. Wakeman, and I prepared the way for special lectures by him in these places. I am chock full of interesting details which, if, while I am on the wing, a quill of it would write, you should hav; as it is, they must wait.

T. C. LELAND.

Jackson, Mich., June 30, 283.

A DOUGLASVILLE merchant bought a lot of cocoanuts, and after emptying the milk filled them up with liquor, forming something of a cocoanut toddy. The other day the minister of the town went into the store and wanted to buy a cocoanut. The merchant was in despair, but managed to tell the gent of the cloth that the nuts were unsound. The minister seemed anxious to procure one and told the merchant that if they had milk in them they were all right, and shaking one was convinced of their soundness. The merchant could do nothing more and sold him one, hoping he would get out of the scrape in some way. In about half an hour after the minister left the merchant received a note from him, saying: "Send me six more cocoanuts exactly like the one I purchased of you."—Douglasville Star.

Notes.

WHAT fools an implicit belief in the Bible make of men is shown by the statement that an abbe of Europe advocates the formation of a joint-stock company, with the view of exploring the bottom of the Red Sea, in the hope of discovering some relics of the drowning of Pharaoh's host.

THE English Baptist returns of church membership show a decrease of something like 5,000 as compared with last year. It must be that water is becoming unpopular in England since the advent of the unwashed Salvation Army, or else the practice of bathing has been substituted for the rite of baptism. Either being the case, the Baptist church is in a bad way.

"How Missionaries Work in Turkey," is the title of an article just published in a religious paper. This does not refer to the Thanksgiving Day exercises of clergymen, although ministers are known to "work in" more turkey with the rest of their food than any other class of men. "How Colored Preachers Work in the Hennery," would be an appropriate sequel to the foregoing.

OF the seven hundred and thirty ministers of the United Presbyterian church, one hundred and ninety-two are without charge (commercially speaking, out of a job); and of the eight hundred and thirty-nine congregations, one hundred and ninety-eight are vacant. This is according to the official report. It looks as if Presbyterianism were not a growing power in the land, and yet it would be safe to predict that these statistics are more favorable to that church than next year's will be.

"TAKE comfort, afflicted Christian!" says the National Baptist. "When God is about to make pre-eminent use of a man he puts him in the fire." It looks to us as though a man would not be of pre-eminent use, after enjoying a short stay in the fire, to any one except cannibals, who hav often been known to put the Baptist's theory in practice upon the persons of missionaries. Very few Christians, we imagin, are panting for this sort of pre-eminence.

THE readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER this week will find on another page a very long and interesting dissertation on "Covenanterism," by the Hon. A. B. Bradford. This article we hav transferred from a rather poorly printed pamphlet just brought out in Pennsylvania to the broad and legible columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Just at the present time there is no greater danger threatening this government than the success of the God-in-the-Constitution party, represented by the National Reform Association. The association is a resurrection of an extinct species of religious mastodons, and is as much out of place in this century as is the astronomy of the Rev. John Jasper.

THE recent census of India, according to an article in the London Daily News, shows the population of that great country to be 253,891,821 persons. This is far in excess of what was supposed to be the number of inhabitants, and presents a respectable appearance even by the side of China. The population is divided as follows: 187,937,450 Hindoos, 50,121,585 Mohammedans, 6,426,511 Nature Worshipers, 3,418,884 Buddhists, 1,862,334 Christians, 1,853,426 Sikhs, 1,221,895 Jains. The "Nature Worshippers" referred to in the foregoing represent the aboriginal (Cushite) population of India, the "hill-tribes," etc., found mostly in the forests of Arsam, Chota Nagpore, the Central Provinces, Berar, etc. The Christians are divided about equally between the Catholic and Protestants churches. The number is a very poor showing for the amount of money and number of men engaged.

THE first church congress of the Canada Episcopalians has just been held. The only paper read which created any stir was by the Rev. Mr. McKenzie, and which dealt mainly with the amusement question. Theaters, this speaker said, should be visited by Christians only "very occasionally." He could not condemn social dancing. Card playing in homes was not altogether immoral. Many will breathe easier to know that the few games of seven up they played in their childhood do not necessarily doom they to everlasting fire. Many burning questions, however, were left unsettled by these Canadian ministers. For instance, the matter of whether Paine's works ought to be held by the customs officers of Canada was not touched vpon; and how the spread of Freethought in the provinces was to be checked was left unsettled. These are questions of moment, a discussion of which would hav made this convention of the Episcopalian Kanucks interesting.

THE Fifty-third Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, otherwise Mormons, has recently been held in Salt Lake City, Utah. A correspondent of a New York paper says no other religious body in the country can muster so many adherents. The city was crowded with attendants from all parts of the West. The writer draws this picture of the Mormon throng:

"Of the adult portion the bulk are evidently foreign born, and in features and utterance as evidently English or Scandinavian. They were born into low plebeian estate and hav lived at the bottom of the social scale. Eyes are dull and faces are without expression. All signs are lacking of brain power, of independent thought, of daring in self-management. They hav had long and dire training in obedience, and no longer care, or are able, to choose or act for themselvs in matters high or low. It is only the intellectual dregs of the nations that Mormonism can gather, and these are readily shaped and manipulated at the will of the shrewd leaders."

This is about what we might expect people to be who are as religious as the Latter-day Saints. Still, from the description given, it would be hard to distinguish between them and the crowds of Irish and Italian Catholics who swarm to these shores. A trip to the Battery, at the lower end of New York city, would reveal to the visitor, in the adherents of the Romish church of Italy and Ireland, the same sort of debased human beings that congregate at the annual conventions of the Mormons in Salt Lake City. Incidentally, as showing how the Mormon church is managed, it is stated that the financial reports at the convention were accepted by those present without being read!

A WHILE ago the Advocate published one of Col. Ingersoll's funeral addresses, to show what in its eyes is criminal—that he did not believe in a God, or heaven, or hell. Now it says that it has reason to know that the publication "led more than one to stand back from the brink of ruin." If this is the case, we hold that it is the bounden duty of the Advocate, if it is sincere in its desire to spread the gospel, to publish all of Col. Ingersoll's lectures. If his orations are the best missionary documents the Advocate can find, it certainly must print them or be open to the charge of lack of zeal "in the master's work." The saving of one soul from the eternal torment so kindly prepared by the Methodist God, is worth reams of paper and miles of space. Hell is such a horrible, abominable, damnable place that the snatching of even one brand from its burning is a stupendous work, worthy of even the mighty genius of the Advocate. We feel sure none of Mr. Buckley's sermons ever really saved a soul, and if Ingersoll's orations hav saved "more than one," he ought to be willing to omit his own writing and substitute the colonel's. But the world must either doubt the Advocate's zeal or truthfulness as to the number of converts the oration made, for further along we see that "with this man" Mr. Buckley "has done." He will print no more of his "souless metaphors and words." Is this decision arrived at in fear of the number of converts they will make?

MR. D. W. CRAIG, in our "Friendly" columns this week, comes to the relief of Mr. Andrews from the imputation made in THE TRUTH SEEKER a week ago, that the latter gentleman's writings lacked the perspicuity calculated to make them readily understood, and which the importance of the subject discussed demands. Mr. Craig has the faculty of understanding too much. He finds charges in the article referred to which were never made; and in our distinct avowal that we believed Mr. Andrews has clearly in sight the point at issue, Mr. Craig sees the insinuation that his writings are meaningless. We do not, it is true, like our correspondent, accept the significance of anything on faith. A good deal that the other "philosopher" he alludes to said was set down long ago as incomprehensible, and many intelligent people hav not as yet seen any reason to reverse that decision. When Mr. Andrews speaks on popular subjects in popular language, his utterances are not exceeded in value by those of any other person. He is a scholar, a sage, a philosopher, a scientist, an orator. This we say out of pure admiration for his attainments, and because it is true. We do not think it is necessary to say over again what was said last week; neither do we wish to unsay anything. We can only refer the reader to the series of articles from Mr. Andrews's pen publishing in THE TRUTH SEEKER. We hav the testimony of Mr. Craig himself that the sense is at times obscure. Furthermore, it is not certain that those whom Mr. Andrews "took in hand" as early in their lives as Tristram Shandy's troubles began in his, know any more about Universology, or anything else, than those who "caught on" later.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Freethinkers of Sydney, Australia, held an outdoor picnic on April 29th, which was attended by about fifteen hundred people.

JOHN E. REMSBURG is coming East in August. Liberals desiring his services should address him at once. His permanent address is Atchison, Kan.

MRS. AMELIA H. COLBY will answer calls for Sunday lectures in New York and vicinity. Her address until September next will be 123 West Eagle street, Buffalo, N. Y.

E. C. WALKER spoke at Miltonvale, Kan., June 17th, 18th, and 19th. He expects to be at Arrington, Kan., July 4th, and on July 6th he will start for a month's trip through Iowa. Those desiring lectures will please address him at Valley Falls, Kan.

THE Spiritualists and Liberals of Western Michigan will hold a five-day camp-meeting at Four Mile Lake, near Paw Paw, commencing July 26th. Among the speakers engaged are Mrs. L. E. Drake, of Michigan, and A. B. French, of Ohio. Inspirational, vocal, and instrumental music by Mrs. Olie Denslow, of Indiana, will be a feature of the program. Trains will be run at reduced rates to accommodate all who desire to attend. L. S. Burdick is president of the association, and C. M. Sheffer its secretary.

THE fifth annual camp-meeting of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists will be held at Flint, Mich., August 17th to 27th. The executiv board of the association announce that the arrangements for the meeting are in a satisfactory stage of progress. Among the speakers already engaged from outside the state are Hon. A. B. Bradford, of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. H. S. Lake. Mr. Bradford was formerly a Presbyterian minister, but has grown clear out of his creed and his clerical robes, and is now a representativ Spiritualist and Liberal. Mrs. Lake is one of the most gifted female speakers on the Spiritual and Liberal rostrum. Mrs. Margaret Fox Kane, the only survivor of the original Fox family, is engaged to attend the meeting, and in addition to her mediumship gifts, will tell the people the story of Hydesville in 1849, in which she was one of the principal actors. Mrs. Olie Child Denslow is engaged to sing. The local feeling at Flint, we learn, is unanimous and earnest in favor of making the coming meeting a success beyond any of its predecessors, and the secretary states that his correspondence shows a similar feeling throughout the state. David Turbush, of Flint, has been appointed financial secretary for the meeting, and will hav responsible charge of all financial details. W. I. Cronk is president, and S. B. McCracken secretary.

After the Coronation.

From Cincinnati Saturday Night.

At last the much dreaded by highly necessary ceremony is over. The soldiery hav discharged their musketry, the detectivs their duty, the czar has been safely crowned, and Moscow is at rest. The Nihilists hav packed up their dynamite and moved to St. Petersburg, and the czar and czarina, in the retirement of their royal iron-clad bed-chamber, hav been engaged in a delightfully peaceful discussion of the grand event in which they hav both been the central figures.

"And now, dear," said the czarina, yawning and kicking off a gold-mounted slipper, "don't you think you had better take off your things?"

"Na-a-w, I don't," and the czar tilted his crown a little further on to his ear and swaggered around the room, flirting the tail of his coronation robe in a particularly aggravating manner.

"Don't be a fool, Aleck," snapped the czarina.

"I tell you I ain't going to take this crown off, nor I ain't going to take this robe off, neither, until I get ready. I'm the czar of all the Russias, I am, and if I want to go to bed with them on I can do it, and don't you forget it."

This outburst of independence completely dumbfounded the czarina, and she had not a word to say as she continued to divest herself of several millions dollars' worth of jewels and expensiv and highly perfumed clothes, but there was an ominous glitter in her eye that betokened anything but submission.

"I want you to understand that. You, yes, you!" continued the czar, a little frightened at his own boldness and dazed by his wife's unaccountable silence. Then observing no signs of a revolt, he added, "I've been so bothered about business here of late that I've allowed you to do pretty much as you pleased, but now that I've got this crowning affair off my mind, I propose to run this establishment on a new and improved plan," and the czar wheeled around in front of a pier glass and viewed himself with a self-satisfied smirk.

By this time the czarina had got down to her fighting clothes, and she suddenly confronted the czar with a look that Alexander had learnt to respect and which started him at such an extent that his highly prized crown toppled off and rolled under the bed.

"You've allowed me—you're going to run this establishment!" shrieked the czarina. "Come out of that robe, do you hear?"

The czar of all the Russias hastily disrobed.

"Leave that crown alone!" she yelled as the trembling man attempted to crawl under the bed.

"I was only going to get it for you," said the wretched monarch.

"Never you mind about getting it for me; you go to bed and I'll 'tend to the crown."

Needless to say that Alexander the Third retired immediately, and before the czarina was through with him that night he would hav bartered his kingdom cheerfully for a quiet corner in one of his own Siberian mines, and terrors of dynamite were double discounted.

The Mormon's Choice.

Where Utah's soft zephyrs caress the bright flowers,
Or ripple the lake's briny waves,
Where temples point upward their glittering spires,
Worn types of divinity's slaves;
In a home fair to see, a man and his bride
Sit, watching together the scene.
With tremulous tone they whisper of fears
The courage of pride cannot screen.

For a season so brief that it seemed but a day,
Enjoyment so cheats us of time,
Lived they and lovéd they, the dream of all dreams,
Sublimest of pleasures sublime.
Now dread of some horrible doom, like a pall,
Hangs over and darkens their lives,
While adoring their faith, their loving hearts quail
At a thought which faith's mandate revives.

Stern authority teaches man's duty to God,
Enjoins the polygamist's creed;
Who ere would not forfeit salvation's rich crown
Must seal his belief with the deed.
He so handsome, so brave, so tender and true,
How could she her peer thus resign?
She, gentle and loving, and lovely to view,
None but her could to him be divine.

The vigilant watchers record the delay,
And mark the devotion with hate,
For apostasy's crime a harsh penance prepare,
As the canon's fulfilment they wait.
More murky, more somber, the ominous clouds,
'Till day wears the dusk hue of night;
Each breast sighing sorrow, his brow sad and curved,
Her beautiful face wan with fright.

Grace, weary of waiting, the morrow appoints
To hear the offender's defense;
Assemblage august, vicegerents of God,
Nicely skilled in the art of pretense.

Presses closer the question, Why sever sweet ties?
By obeying fanatical rule,
Why crush the emotions, the best part of life,
To bow at the shrine of this ghoul?
Apprised when his fate Heaven's court would decide,
Knowing, too, his life hung on a thread,
Abjuring and cursing the cruel behest
With his bride in the darkness he fled.
Away through the distance, o'er desert he speeds,
'Till reaching the hoarse-moaning sea,
Then beyond, by the shore of another bright lake,
Himself and his loved one are free.

Though the morrow shine brightly, Sanhedrim will wait,
Foiled, jealous-eyed watchers and ward;
The walls which late echoed to love's tender tones,
By the silence of absence is marred.
Religion divest of superstition and myth,
And what will be left save the shard?

Concord, Ky. 283. VIRGINIA E. VANCE.

Not an Isolated Case.

From the Radical Review.

A reader of The Review writes to us that nothing givs him more pleasure than reading our paper, but that he cannot take it any longer as it ruins his business, and he cannot afford to move so often. He closes his epistle with the fervent hope that "superstition may flee from the intellect as wild beasts in front of civilization." If everybody would follow his noble example, how superstition would flee!

Communications.

Human Rights, No Matter How Exercised.

Liberalism is set for the defense of human rights. This is its mission in the world. Under its banner a thousand differing opinions find expression, but it does not stand for any one of these opinions, but for the right of each and every opinion to hav a fair presentation before the bar of reason, not for to-day only, but for all time. No matter how severely any opinion may be condemned by the judgment of the vast majority, it still has a right to be. No opinion is ever to be barred out by any dictum from being frankly expressed in every possible manner, so long as it can find a lodgment in the heart or brain of a single individual.

The question of human duties is not the paramount question of to-day, but the question of human rights. Duties are valueless except as rights precede them and find expression through them. No one can do his duty in a high, or honorable, or useful fashion unless he is a free man. Slavery destroys every particle of virtue. There can be no virtue without freedom and its responsibility. Make a man a slave and you make him a machine, and the worst machine in the universe for any valuable results. If we are to hav machines let us hav them of wood and iron, and not of brain and muscle. Humanity had better perish than be bound in shackles.

Only in the air of liberty can duty become noble and exalting. Then, indeed, when crowned with freedom, it is effulgent, godlike, beautiful, and entrancing, the fascination and the joy of living. We need not fear for virtue when liberty prevails, for with the sweep of liberty the fountains of moral impulse burst forth with resplendent power. Liberty is the creator of the highest and noblest virtues which humanity can possess.

We must labor for liberty—supreme individual liberty; and wherever liberty is invaded we must be quick to resent the encroachment, for we must realize that the progress of humanity in all its sublimest achievements is endangered.

No matter how disagreeable other things involved may be, if the main question is freedom, then we must leap to the defense. In no other way can we maintain what is beautiful and glorious in human welfare.

We must learn to distinguish between liberty and the exercise of liberty. Each individual is responsible for the manner in which his rights are exercised. That is not the business of any other, nor is one to be held responsible for what another says or does in the expression of his thought. It is for universal liberty that we stand, but not for any particular exercise of that liberty. Many a thought and many a word may be entirely opposed to our own; none the less must that thought and word be free, even as our own thought and word must be free, though the whole universe might be arrayed upon the other side. We guarantee each individual's liberty, but when that liberty is perfectly attained, then our skirts are forever clean. It is not for us to follow and see how that liberty is made use of; a watched liberty is but little better than slavery. To giv freedom, and at the same time assert that if one does not make a good use of it we will not see to its preservation, is but a form of despotism. It is inevitable in the wild dash and crash of human thought and struggle that a thousand things will be said of which we disapprove; none the less decisivly and clearly must we maintain the utmost freedom. To neglect one's liberty because one uses it with an ill grace is a crime against liberty, and indirectly a degradation of what is purest and most beautiful. If we wish to preserve the noblest virtues of man, his most refined and loftiest culture, his grandest ideals of truth and beauty, then must we stanchly defend the right even of the coarsest assertion of individuality, for in this there is a unity, namely, liberty itself, and if we allow liberty to receive a blow in its lowest and crudest form of expression, then does that blow also pierce its highest life, and so the most exquisit blossoms of liberty lose something of their luster. We must defend liberty all around, in every form and manifestation of it, for wherever liberty is there is a divine life, a hope and a struggle for something better, and only by the preservation of liberty, even to its most ugly and defiant attitude, can its largest and serenest fruits be attained for the advancement of the world.

I express these necessary and fundamental thoughts in view of the recent arrest of Mr. Heywood. Frankly we may condemn his method of writing. Those leaflets may grate on our sensibilities. I hav no doubt the vast majority of Liberals disapprove of them, and hav no wish to defend them simply as leaflets. We are not called upon to approve of these individual utterances. They are not our own, and therefore we are not responsible for them. The writer must take the whole and sole responsibility for this particular expression of his individual views. Liberalism has no more to do with these particular views than orthodoxy. What the leaflets say, or how they say it, is not the question at issue—but the right to publish them; that is the issue, and we must not allow ourselvs to be shoved off from this issue because the leaflets are so disagreeable. We are not to consider the character of the leaflets, but simply the freedom of publication, and of this there can be no question with every right-thinking Liberal. To put Mr. Heywood in prison for expressing his opinion in this particular way would be an outrageous tyranny. No government whatsoever, and no society and no community, has any right to so intrude upon individual liberty.

These leaflets are not obscene. They are honest, earnest discussions of a great question. They throb with passionate conviction. A man's heart and a woman's heart burn and quiver in every sentence. There is absolute sincerity. The very fury of the utterance only shows the intensity of the thought that thus leaps like a volcanic flame. Let such thought come forth clothed in what garment it will. It is a garment of fire that will surely cleanse itself in the pure thought of others. Words so tremendously freighted with human feeling cannot be obscene. They are true to the man's and the woman's nature, and for them they are the loftiest and the holiest.

Let that be as it may; and each judge as they will approve or disapprove—that is perfectly right—for every opinion and word must be sifted by the severest criticism. But the liberty to put forth these leaflets must be unflinchingly maintained, and the very fact that we do not like the form of expression must only make us more strenuous in the defense. It is not a question of our likes or dislikes, but a question of liberty. It is not for what the leaflets say that we stand and make a fight, but for that which is anterior to the very existence of the leaflets and infinitly transcends them in importance, the right to any and every expression of human thought. It is this that confronts us, and no mere question of literary taste. It is our bounden duty, whatever may be the expression, to maintain human rights; for only by their maintenance in all circumstances can they become as they must become, the most potent factor in human progress.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Infidel Philosophy.

It is matter of great wonder to the Christian that so many thousands visit the rivers in India every year to bathe in their sacred waters. Men and women are seen bending under heavy burdens of this precious water, which is borne inland hundreds of miles because they believe God has given to it peculiar virtues. It is used for the healing of the people afflicted with various maladies; and then the people believe that they secure divine favor by coming in contact with anything as holy as these waters are considered to be.

The time spent and the suffering endured by the millions who visit these sacred waters every year can scarcely be computed.

It must be conceded that if it were possible to show these poor deluded mortals that these waters hav no more efficacy than any other water, and that the belief in their virtues is wholly based upon superstition, a great blessing would be conferred.

The Christians send missionaries to India at a cost of many thousands of dollars a year, in order to lift the mind of the poor heathen above his superstition.

I see in the Weekly Magnet, a Christian paper published at Chicago, a statement that eighteen dollars had been raised, in pennies, the savings of a whole year, from an infant class in Sunday-school, for missionary purposes

Now, I am inclined to think that a missionary from the "Thugs" of India would benefit these Christian robbers just about as much as a Christian missionary would benefit them.

It is safe to say that not one dollar of the eighteen filched from those innocents will ever reach India or any other country, or be used for any other purpose than to pamper an already bloated priesthood. These children were told all about the mothers who throw their babes to the crocodile; about the widows who are burnt on the funeral pile with their husbands, and about bowing down to wood and stone; and about many other things which the minister cared far less about than getting their pennies. I take it upon myself to say that getting the money from these children, through misrepresentation, is the meanest act of which I ever read. But meanness in a Christian is just as natural as the kick in a mule.

How we ought to pity the poor Hindoo, says the minister, in his missionary sermon, who through ignorance and superstition carries water from the river Ganges for hundreds of miles. The same minister plunges a feeble old woman, past eighty, through the ice, when the mercury is below zero, to wash away her sins. Pray where is the difference?

He takes a piece of bread and by a certain hie-hoe-horem process turns it into God and then eats him. He takes a glass of wine and by the same process turns it into God's blood and drinks it. If there is anything in all heathendom which outranks this for superstition, it is unknown to me.

The Christian turns with perfect disgust and loathing from the Faus of Africa, because they hav been making some square meals out of a fat missionary, but he leaves the cannibal in the shade. The cannibal only eats his kind, while the Christian eats his God and then drinks his blood. In Asia, in Africa, in South America, in the islands of the sea, the Christian sees fields for missionary labor. But, could he be induced to turn only one eye inward, he would see that his own mind is a barren waste of superstition and ought to be reclaimed by the labors of the true missionary.

"O wad some pow'r the giftie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us
And foolish notion.
What airs in dress an' gait wad lea'e us
And ev'n devotion!

Naples, N. Y., June 24, 283. JOHN PECK.

Our London Letter.

The constant and numerous petitions sent to the Home Secretary for a mitigation of the sentences on the victims of the infamous blasphemy laws hav hitherto been of no effect, and as far as can be seen at present will be of no more avail than those sent to the president in favor of D. M. Bennett. Bigotry is still too powerfully represented to admit of justice being done, and mercy is out of the question. Religion is still eminently respectable, and as the parsons can control many votes in the agricultural districts, it will not do for those now in authority to release the prisoners against such opposition, or the majority of the clergy will do their best to throw them out of office at the next election. Common sense, justice, or the lives of two or three men not belonging to the aristocracy, are nothing in the scales against the desire for political power and the enjoyment of large official salaries.

In our condemnation of clerical intolerance, however, we must not forget to giv due honor to those clergymen who, scorning cheap popularity, dare to raise their voices in favor of our friends, and are working together with us to obtain the repeal of the acts relating to that bogus crime called blasphemy. On the other hand, it can scarcely be understood why G. J. Holyoake, who has been called the father of Freethought, should at this critical moment stand aloof and decline to render the assistance that would naturally be expected of him under the circumstances. He defends his position on the ground that neither he nor his friends petitioned for his own release, and that those now in prison should patiently submit to what he almost seems to consider a merited punishment. But he appears to forget the difference of the times. He lived a life of luxury compared to that of Messrs. Foote, Ramsay, and Kemp. These three are treated as felons, being placed upon exactly the same footing and under the same rules.

Martyrdom may be a very glorious experience sometimes, but when it assumes the form of twenty-three hours' solitary confinement, and one hour exercise with thieves and other criminals, with just sufficient food to irritate the glands of the stomach, and not nearly sufficient to satisfy the cravings of hunger, no companionship, no books nor writing materials, no visits from friends, except once in three months, and then but for a few minutes, in the presence of a warden, it is not quite so desirable. Doubtless the wish and intention of the prosecutors is to physically ruin their victims, and unfortunately they may only be too successful. We already see the result of their cruelty—the publisher, who is now released, is too ill to attend to business, and is confined to his bed seriously ill; the two who are yet in durance are suffering from the effects of their treatment, and may acquire life-long disease in consequence. This may be satisfactory enough to the God of the Christians and his admirers, but surely not to any one worthy the name of man. We see clearly in the record of history that mankind never develops so much cruelty to its fellow as when religion is brought into the matter; and yet how often is it repeated from the pulpit and platform that religion makes man more gentle and kind to others, and extracts all the savagery from his nature! Believers in God are strange perverters of the signification of words. Such lying utterances are so often made that the deceivers no doubt in time believe what they say, as their hearers hav done long before.

Freethinkers must see more and more the absolute necessity of clearing from the world the noxious weed of religion or creed, before men will hav any proper brotherly feeling so much boasted of and so little practiced by the religious community. This state will never be brought about while creeds flourish; they must be uprooted and destroyed; and then, and not till then, will the gospel of humanity hav an opportunity of raising its head and proving the blessing it assuredly must be. The day may still be far distant when the futility of supernatural worship will be fully recognized; all myths die hard and lingeringly, but their decay will be hastened by the diffusion of secular knowledge, and the miserable, flickering rush-light of dogma will be extinguished by the pure, steady flame of reason and science. Let us hasten that day by all the means in our power.

London, June, 1883. J. D.

Translation.

The Tomb of Fanaticism.

[An examination of Lord Bolingbroke's doctrines. Written by Voltaire in 1767 and translated from the French by Avery Meriwether.]

CONCLUSION.

I draw the conclusion, then, that all sensible men, all men of property, will ultimately look upon Christian sectarianism with disgust. The great name Theist which we have not sufficiently honored is the only name which we should assume. The only evangelist we should read is the great book of nature, written by the hand of God and sealed with his seal. The only religion which we should profess is the religion of reverencing God and being an honest man. For it is impossible for such a religion, pure and eternal, to produce evil, just as it was impossible for the fanatical Christian not to commit evil.

No one could ever learn from the religion of nature to say: "I came not to send peace but a sword" (Matt. x, 34). Whereas that is the first confession of faith we hear from the mouth of a Jew they hav called Christ.

Men are indeed blind and evil-disposed, to prefer an absurd sect, sanguinary, assisted by hangmen, and surrounded by butchers; a sect which can only be approved of by those to whom it has given power and wealth; a sect which was only originated in a very small part of this world from a simple and universal religion, which even according to the confessions of the followers of Christ was the religion of the human race during the times of Seth, Enoch, and Noah. If the religion of the primitiv patriarchs is true, it certainly follows that the religion of the Jesus-sect is false. The rulers of countries submitted at first to that sect, believing that they would endear themselves all the more to their people. They did not perceive that they made themselves first the slaves of the priests, and now half of Europe is striving to render itself independent.

And what king, may I ask, what judge, what father of a family, would not infinitely prefer to be master of his own house, rather than be a slave of a priest?

Why! the countless number of citizens molested, excommunicated, reduced to beggary, killed, led into the shambles; the number of princes dethroned and assassinated, has not yet opened the eyes of men! If they have been opened the people have not yet overturned that woeful idol.

"What shall we put in its place?" I am asked. If a ferocious beast is sucking the life-blood of my neighbor, and I requested you to dispatch it, would you ask me what was to replace it? You demand a thing a hundred times more hateful than the pagan pontiffs who were content to tranquilly perform their ceremonies and sacrifices, who did not enchain their mind by dogmas, who never contended with the magistrates, who never introduced discord among men. And yet you have the effrontery to ask what is to replace that set of fables called Christian creeds. I answer, God, truth, virtue, and the laws of punishment and reward. Preach uprightness, not dogma. Be ye the priests of God, not of men.

After weighing Christianity in the balance of truth, it becomes necessary to consider it in the light of policy. Such is the depraved condition of the human race that what is true is not always the most advantageous. There would be much danger, and very little reason for wishing to overturn by one blow the Christianity of the papal states. I hold that in our island it is necessary to permit the hierarchy established by an act of Parliament to exist, and always hav such under the control of civil legislation, and thus prevent it from committing a crime. It is without doubt to be desired that the Christian idol should be overthrown, and that we should offer to God our homage all the more pure, but the people are not yet worthy of this. It is sufficient for the present that our church* be continued within its present limits. The more the laity are enlightened, the less will the priests be able to do harm. Let the laity strive to enlighten themselves and to blush at their mistakes, and bring themselves little by little to be citizens.†

*Voltaire means, of course, the English church.

† It is not possible for any one, however depraved he may be, to reasonably answer all that my Lord Bolingbroke has said. I myself, with one of the greatest mathematician's of England, hav attempted to believe that the followers of Christ could allege plausible reasons for their creeds, but I found none. This book of Bolingbroke's is the thunderbolt which will destroy superstition. All that which our divines and English theologians have to do is only to preach the laws of morality and to render papistry forever hateful to all people. By this they will be endeared to us. Let them render detestable that sect which is founded upon deceit, maintained by persecution, rapine, and bloodshed; a sect inimical to kings and the people, and above all an enemy to our constitution, the happiest conception in the universe. It has been granted to Lord Bolingbroke to destroy this theological madness, just as it has been granted to Newton to expose the errors of physical laws. May all Europe be soon illuminated by this light. Amen. [A note by Mallet, the posthumous editor of Bolingbroke's works, London March 18, 1767.]

[THE END.]

The "I" and "Not I."—Which First?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The idea that spirit made matter long since soured on my stomach. Two distinct problems culminated positivly in my mind over thirty years ago, and before I had even read a word about it or heard of the Darwinian plan. I became convinced from my own reflections, first, that man was not created, but that he evoluted from nature; second, that if Spiritualism is true, man's physical being evolutes the spirit, and that, like blasted fruits and seeds, some physical bodies fail to evolute a spirit; that in this the fact of the survival of the fittest also maintains.

I hav been grandly entertained perusing in your columns the controversy between S. P. Andrews and S. P. Putnam. I hav for years entertained a high admiration for my great-minded and Liberal-spirited namesake, Stephen Pearl Andrews. But, sir, I think in this contest Mr. Putnam has the advantage by reason of having a sure grasp upon the scientific facts of, first, matter, then mind; first, brain, then thought. And now, that great, clear-sighted logician, T. B. Wakeman, has gone and put a clincher upon the argument, that makes it as transparent and clear as crystal. Long may those noble minds wave!

T. S. ANDREWS.

South Rockwood, Mich., June 24, E.M. 283.

The Under Dog in the Fight.

I know that the world, the great, big world,
From the peasant up to the king,
Has a different tale from the tale I tell,
And a different song to sing.

But for me—and I care not a single fig
If they say I am wrong or am right—
I shall always go for the weaker dog,
The under dog in the fight.

I know that the world, the great, big world,
Will never a moment stop
To see which dog may be in the fault,
But will shout for the dog on top.

But for me, I shall never pause to ask
Which dog may be in the right;
For my heart will beat, while it beats at all,
For the under dog in the fight.

Perchance what I've said I had better not said—
Or 'twere better I had said it incog.,
But with heart and with glass filled cnock to the brim,
Here's health to the bottom dog. —David Barker.

An Explanation Wanted.

MR. OTTO WETTSTEIN: In your article, published June 2d, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, you speak of the atoms and force as if they were identical; do you mean that force and the atoms are one and the same thing? or do you mean that force is a property of the atoms? If you will look over the third column of your essay, you will see that you hav not made this point quite clear; at least it is not clear to me, and I am quite anxious to get the exact meaning of your statements on this head.

If you mean that force is a property of the atoms, will you please state whether it is simply the inherent motion of the atoms, or whether it is the cause of the motion, or the result of motion, or whatever else you may conceive it to be? MRS. E. HEDDON.

Dowagiac, Mich.

AN EXPLANATION SUPPLIED.

MRS. E. HEDDON: In response to your request, permit me to say that I cannot giv an authoratativ answer, as my opinion—being a jeweler—is crude and superficial thought, rather than philosophical research. But the correctness or falsity of these minor points does or would not at all weaken the force of my principal argument, that whatever is tangible and real—all entities—must be composed of matter, and this matter—being external—therefore exists prior to all functions, attributes, capabilities—including intelligence and mind.

Existence is a fact. The basis of all existence is matter. To make it more clear: whatever is substance, tangible, real, visible, reducible into component parts or elements; whatever we can see, feel, weigh, and analyze, comprising the sum-total of all existence, this has been termed matter and is matter. Attributes, properties, functions, motion, quality, potency, etc., cannot exist per se, be manifest, operate, move, or functionate until the material—substance—alone making all these things (so to speak) possible—exist first. Therefore, when science postulates that all matter is composed of atoms in greater or lesser aggregation, and the ultimate invisible atom—though beyond the grasp and conception of man—the only unit, it becomes self-evident that if force were one thing, independent of matter, and the atom another thing independent of force, one-half of the universe, or more or less, might at any time be a vast aggregation of absolute dead matter or inertia, and then, of course, remain in an condition of statu quo forever. Change in such a case would be the exception, eternal standstill the order of the universe. But this being contrary to observation and experience, and as dead matter or inertia has as yet not been discovered, I venture to aver that force is a property of the atom, and consequently also ever the cause, but never the effect, of motion. The atom represents abstract existence, considered together with force, varied or special existence.

I should be pleased to hear the opinions of our learned editor and also those of Prof. Underwood, upon this complex subject. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Rochelle, Ill., June 11, 1883.

A New League.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav the pleasure of announcing the establishment in Oakland of an auxiliary Liberal League. How the matter was accomplished can be easily enough told. As an old Freethinker of some twenty-five years' standing, I hav often thought it strange indeed that a city like this should be without a Liberal League, and more especially knowing that Oakland is often called the Athens of the Pacific; so wherever there is learning, wherever there is intelligence, and we might say wherever there is much beauty of situation and surrounding, as we hav here, there ought to be a hall of science—some temple dedicated to humanity; and it also follows we ought to hav plenty of Freethinkers—quite a host of Liberals, in a place like this. Well, on this hint we acted, and Messrs. Schow, Snyder, Mills, and myself resolved ourselvs into a committee to hunt up the lost sheep of the house of Ingersoll and our late lamented Bennett. We succeeded much better than we anticipated. We are not a little flushed with the excitement and enthusiasm attendant upon such a successful capture as we made—securing forty-two names to our petition to the National Liberal League for a charter, and I make bold to predict it won't be long before we hav a list of over a hundred activ members. I must go back, though, a little bit, as I find I am somewhat getting ahead of my story. As recently as the 29th of April we had our first meeting at Mr. Schow's, 677 25th street, only four being present. On the 6th of May we just doubled ourselvs, as it were, and again, on the 20th, at Mr. Mill's house, we got to about the mystic orthodox number of twelve. This result is very satisfactory from a New Testament standpoint, but as we cannot hav too many apostles of Freethought, we propose multiplying and replenishing in this city till we become a power for the propagation of truth, justice, and righteousness.

By the way, much praise is dueMr. Schow for his activ and energetic efforts in behalf of our Liberal movement, and I am also glad to say he is ably seconded by Mrs. Schow, a lady just as enthusiastic for the good cause as one could wish. Several of us Liberals are indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Schow for the kind hospitality dispensed on several occasions.

On May 26th I made a proposition to the "St. Andrew's Society" for the use of their room on Sundays at the rate of four dollars per month, which was granted unanimously. This room is a very comfortable one and well suited for our purpose at the present, but if we increase in numbers, as we are likely to do, we shall probably hav to hire a hall yet. We hav had now four meetings at the room, 1058 Broadway, the last three meetings especially being well attended—about thirty members present each time. There is great interest evinced at our meetings, and the under-current of enthusiasm which wells up every now and then for the cause of progress and reform promises well to accomplish something tangible in the future. Just so soon as we get matters into proper working order we shall hav our friends, Col. Kelso and Dr. J. L. York, to come and giv us a series of lectures each. The harvest here at present bids fair to be a plenteous one, and we hav an abiding faith that the laborers will be on hand and not found wanting. A. WALLACE HENGHAN,

Sec. pro tem. Oakland Aux'ly Liberal League.

Oakland, Cal., June 20, 1883.

The Freethinkers' Convention.

The following announcement that appeared in a late number of the New York Herald explains itself:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 10, 1883.

The New York State Freethinkers' Association has announced that its annual meeting this year is to be held in Rochester, beginning August 29th and continuing, probably, one week. The prospects and promises are that this meeting will be very much larger than the one held last year in Watkins. Although the association is a New York state organization, it has members in nearly every state and territory in the Union and in the Canadas. Some of the ablest Freethinkers in the country hav promised to be present, and the prospect is that it will be a gathering of many hundreds of persons called "Infidels" by the Christian church.

H. L. Green, the secretary of the association, announces that he is authorized to make the following offer to the evangelical church of the United States:

"The orthodox church of the United States, or either branch of it, is cordially and urgently invited to appoint some one of its representativ men as a missionary to attend the Rochester Convention, and the association will agree to giv him two hours on its platform, without interruption, at any session of the first three days of the convention, to make an address defending or sustaining the claims of the Christian religion or against "Infidelity," or both, as he may choose. The association will also agree to pay the actual expenses of such representativ to and from the convention and while in attendance thereupon, and will treat him in all respects in the most decorous manner. It is only required that any church making such an appointment shall notify the secretary of the association, H. L. Green, of Salamanca, N. Y., of the same twenty days before the meeting of the convention. H. L. GREEN."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - - JULY 7, 1883.

Great Consolation.

The Christian Advocate finds a great deal of fault with unbelievers and unbelief. The last charge is that Infidelity has no consolation for the relativs and friends of the dead. It quotes the following address of Felix Adler over the remains of a lady of this city, whose body was cremated. The service took place at her residence, No. 7 Fifth avenue. Over the inanimate body Mr. Adler said:

"Thoughts of the dead are painful, like the keen edge of a knife. Thoughts of the dead are lonely, like the echoes of a desolate house. We gather around the body, dear friends, to count our loss and feel a certain sad solace. But it arouses the utter, utter depth of our bereavement. There is no grievance for grieving so great as to deny the extent of grief. There is no jealousy like that with which the sorrowing watch their sorrow. And yet sometimes there comes a case in which all extravagance of grief seems justified, and in which even rhetoric cannot exaggerate the cause of sorrow. Such a cause of grief is this.

"In what words of comfort shall I speak to you? I cannot speak to you concerning the meeting in another world. That problem is too much surrounded with difficulties. The mystery that envelops human existence is too dense and deep for mortal eye to penetrate. Let those speak confidently on this subject whose reason warrants it or whose consciences will permit. I cannot say to you that it is better that she is dead. I cannot, in any sense, make it appear that your loss is less of a loss. And yet I can try and nerve you to bear that loss. I can tell you that man is placed on earth not only to be happy, but that we are here to perform the task of making the world better and ourselvs better. Though your happiness has fled, the tasks of life remain, and in the performance of those tasks you will find a strength and solace that the worldly and selfish little dream of.

"So the time has come when the last word must be spoken, and in the name of all here present I now speak it—farewell, a long farewell. When thou art carried away from here thy body will not molder in any grave, nor be food for worms. The pure element of fire will quickly return thee to the elements whence thou camest; as clean as thy life was will be thy death. If thy body passes away, there is that which cannot pass of good that was in thee. Thy memory will remain embalmed in the hearts of those who knew thee, and cover thee forever with the sweetest flowers of undying love."

And the Advocate comments:

"This is all that he could say. Hav we done him wrong in declaring that he has no God, no savior, no heaven? Place beside his words, as cold as the lifeless body before which he stood, this from the lips of him who was touched with the feeling of our infirmities: 'Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.'

"The logic of Professor Adler's teachings, in weariness of life, in inconsolable grief and loneliness, is suicide. And many practically applying them are rushing

'Mad from life's history,
Glad to death's mystery
Swift to be hurled—
Anywhere, anywhere
Out of the world.'

"Let those who hav the jewel of faith hold it fast, and be ever ready to giv a reason for the hope that is within them to every one that asketh them."

The editor of the Advocate is a minister. He is presumably honest in his belief. Suppose he had been called upon to speak a few words to the mourning friends. What would he hav said, knowing that the lady died as the great majority die, not holding communion with any church? If he had been honest with himself, his creed, and the surviving friends, he would hav said something like this:

MY FRIENDS (who, being all heretics, are already doomed and damned): I am called upon to perform a very sad duty—sad because our friend is now suffering the torments prepared by God for all unbelievers. I cannot deny that she whose body lies cold before you was a good woman. I cannot deny that she was benevolent in her deeds, honest in her dealings, a virtuous wife, a splendid mother. I cannot deny these facts — they stand out before all the world; but, alas! her goodness without a belief in God was only a millstone about her neck. It was Christ himself, the great savior of the Methodists, who said: "Except ye believe and are baptized, ye cannot be saved." And again: "He that believeth not shall be damned." As our dead friend did not believe, she is of course damned. She had not been baptized, and therefore she is damned for that. I know you think it hard to say this, but I must be honest with you. That is the Christian creed. The theory of the Andover New School of Theology, that the dead and damned hav a little time on probation wherein they may repent before being cast into hell, is all wrong. Joseph Cook has said there is no probation, and the Advocate agrees with him. Of course the Catholic idea of purgatory is all wrong. The unbelieving dead step direct into hell. There is no escape. Do you know what the condition of our friend now is? I will quote for you opinions of eminent Christians as to the state of the dead. Baxter's "Saints' Rest" is pre-eminently orthodox. Of the condition of sinners like your friend he says:

"Your torments shall be universal. . . . The soul and the body shall each hav its torments. The guilt of their sins will be to damned souls like tinder to gunpowder, to make the flames of hell take hold of them with fury. . . . The eyes shall be tortured with sights of horror, and hosts of devils and damned souls. The ears shall be tortured with the howlings and curses of their companions in torments. Their smell shall be tortured with the fumes of brimstone, and the liquid mass of eternal fire shall prey upon every part. . . . No drop of water shall be allowed to cool their tongues; no moment of respit permitted to relieve their agonies."

Mr. Bunyan was a saint; of course he told the truth about the companionship of your friend. He tells us that

"All the devils in hell will be with thee howling and roaring, screeching and yelling in such a hideous manner that thou wilt be at thy wit's end, and be ready to run stark mad again from anguish and torment. . . . Here thou must lie and fry, and scorch, and broil, and burn for evermore."

We cherish the name of Jonathan Edwards as one of the pillars of the church. He knew the condition of the damned and the ecstatic bliss of the saved, as well as any man. Had your friend believed and been baptized, she would hav been a saint and, according to Mr. Edwards:

"The saints in glory will be far more sensible how dreadful the wrath of God is, and will better understand how terrible the sufferings of the damned are, yet this will be no occasion of grief to them, but rejoicing. They will not be sorry for the damned; it will cause no uneasiness or dissatisfaction to them, but on the contrary, when they see this sight, it will occasion rejoicing, and excite them to joyful praises."

Your friend is not now a saint, rejoicing in the great and unfathomable love of God, but is among those of whom Mr. Benson, a great Methodist light of England, says:

"Infinit justice arrests their guilty souls and confines them in the dark prisons of hell, till they hav satisfied all the demands by their personal sufferings, which, alas! they never can do. . . . God is present in hell in his infinit justice and almighty wrath, as an unquenchable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture. His fiery indignation kindles and his incensed fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being and render all their powers most acutely sensible, thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their natures will admit. . . . Number the stars in the firmament, the drops of rain, the sands on the sea shore, and when thou hast finished the calculation, sit down and number all the ages of woe. Let every star, every drop, every grain of sand, represent one million of tormenting ages; and know that as many more millions still remain behind, and yet as many more behind them, and so on without end."

The place and details of your friend's punishment, righteous according to the Bible, is told us by that eminent divine, Rev. J. Furniss, C.S.R.R.. His description is a text-book for the instruction of the young, and is authoritativ:

"We know how far it is to the middle of the earth; it is just four thousand miles; so if hell is in the middle of the earth, it is four thousand miles to the horrible prison of hell. Down in this place is a terrific noise. Listen to the tremendous, the horrible, uproar of millions and millions and millions of tormented creatures, mad with the fury of hell! Oh! the screams of fear, the groanings of horror, the yells of rage, the cries of pain, the shouts of agony, the shrieks of despair, from millions on millions! There you hear them roaring like lions, hissing like serpents, howling like dogs and wailing like dragons. There you hear the gnashing of teeth, and the fearful blasphemies of the devils. Above all, you hear the roaring of the thunders of God's anger, which shakes hell to its foundations. But there is another sound. There is in hell a sound like that of many waters. It is as if all the rivers and oceans of the world were pouring themselvs with a great splash down on the floor of hell. Is it, then, really the sound of waters? It is. Are the rivers and oceans of the earth pouring themselvs into hell? No. What is it, then? It is the sound of oceans of tears running down from countless millions of eyes. They cry forever and ever. They cry because the sulphurous smoke torments their eyes. They cry because they are in darkness. They cry because they hav lost the beautiful heaven. They cry because the sharp fire burns them. . . . The roof is red-hot; the walls are red-hot; the floor is like a thick sheet of red-hot iron. See, on the middle of that red-hot iron floor stands a girl. She looks about sixteen years of age. She has neither shoes nor stockings on her feet. The door of this room has never been opened since she first set her feet on this red-hot floor. Now she sees the door opening. She rushes forward. She has gone down upon her knees upon the red-hot floor. Listen, she speaks. She says: 'I hav been standing with my bare feet on this red-hot floor for years. Day and night my only standing place has been this red-hot floor. Sleep never came on me for a moment, that I might forget this horrible burning floor. Look at my burnt and bleeding feet. Let me go off this burning floor for one moment—only for a short moment. Oh; that in this endless eternity of years, I might forget the pain only for one single moment.' The devil answers her question. 'Do you ask for a moment—for one moment to forget your pain? No, not for one single moment during the never-ending eternity of years, shall you ever leave this red-hot floor.'

The condition of that young girl is the condition of your friend. Her worth and beauty and good deeds are now writhing snakes twisting about her form. Her drink is brimstone, and the Rev. Mr. Ambrose says that "When the damned hav drunken down whole draughts of brimstone one day, they must do the same another day. The eye shall be tormented with the sight of devils; the ears with the hideous yellings and outcries of the damned in flames; the nostrils shall be smothered, as it were, with brimstone; the tongue, the hand, the foot, and every part shall fry in flames."

But, my friends, although you are already doomed and damned, you can repent and avoid this terrible fate. It is only necessary that you believe. If you cannot believe without evidence you can say you do, and I think, from the number of hypocrits in my church, that that is just as good. Recollect how many red-handed murderers go direct from the gallows to the gates of glory. Heresy, I know, is worse in the sight of God than murder, but as the Bible says there is one crime worse than being an Infidel, I am led through the latent grain of human love which I suppose must be in my heart to hope—mind you, I only hope, for I hav no Biblical evidence—that even some Infidels will be forgiven by God and taken to Abraham's bosom, which is the most expansiv and capacious bosom in the universe. No heathen Chinaman can ever hope to iron a shirt large enough to cover that bosom. And if you do repent at the last moment and go to the mansions which the Methodists and Presbyterians and other orthodox churches hav prepared for those who pay the preacher and support the church, you will be perfectly happy although your wife and friend is in hell. The bliss of the elect exceeds the power of my pen to portray. I will leave it to the eminent divines who hav written upon this subject, and who knew as much about it as I do, to describe it. While your friend is in hell where

"Clattering of iron, and the clank of chains;
The clang of lashing whips, shrill shrieks and groans,
Loud, ceaseless howlings, cries and piercing moans,"

Fill the air, and where

"Legions of devils bound themselvs in chains,
Tormented and tormentors, o'er them shake
Thongs and forked iron, in the burning lake,
Belching eternal flames, and wreathed with spires
Of curling serpents rouse the brimstone fires,
With whips of fiery scorpions, scourge their slaves,
And in their faces dash the livid waves,"

You will be in heaven watching your friends below. And therein will consist your happiness, for the Rev. Mr. Emmons tells us that

"The happiness of the elect in heaven will in part consist in watching the torments of the damned in hell. And among these it may be their own children, parents, husbands, wives, and friends on earth. One part of the business of the blest is to celebrate the doctrin of reprobation. While the decree of reprobation is eternally executing on the vessels of wrath, the smoke of their torment will be eternally ascending in view of the vessels of mercy, who, instead of taking the part of those miserable objects, will sing, 'Amen, hallelujah; praise the Lord.'"

And he is re-inforced in his opinions by the Rev. Thomas Bolton, who pictures the pleasures of the righteous in these beautiful words:

"The godly wife shall applaud the justice of the judge in the condemnation of her ungodly husband. The godly husband shall say, Amen! to the damnation of her who lay in his bosom. The godly parent shall say hallelujah! at the passing of the sentence upon the ungodly child. And the godly child shall, from his heart, approve the damnation of his wicked parents who begot him, and the mother who bore him."

Upon hearing this you will not wonder that another eminent divine, the Rev. Thomas Vincent, was moved by the holy spirit to say that

"This will fill them (the saints) with astonishing admiration and wondering joy, when they see some of their near relativs going to hell; their fathers, their mothers, their children, their husbands, their wives, their human friends and companions, while they themselvs are saved. . . . Those affections they now hav for relativs out of Christ will cease, and they will not hav the least trouble to see them sentenced to hell and thrust into the fiery furnace."

And while we are upon this sad subject I would ask you to consider the words of the Rev. James Smith, as published by that philanthropic and humanitarian association, the American Tract Society. It is a heartrending picture of the forever, substantiated by Biblical references. Unless you hav chapter and verse you cannot conceive of the existence of such a doctrin. But it is as true as the Bible:

"The fire of hell is such that multitudes of tears will not quench it, and length of time will not burn it out. The wrath of God abideth on the rejector of Christ (John iii, 36). O eternity! eternity! who can fathom it? Mariners hav their plummets to measure the depths of the sea; but what line or plummet shall we hav to measure the depth of eternity?' The breath of the Lord kindles the flame of the pit (Isaiah xxx, 33). And where shall we find waters to quench those flames? O eternity! If all the body of the earth and the sea were turned to sand, and all the space up to the starry heaven were nothing but sand, and if a little bird should come once every thousand years and take away in her bill but a single grain from off that heap of sand, what numberless years and ages must be spent before the whole of that vast quantity would be carried away; yet, even if at the end of that time the sinner might come out of hell, there might be some hope; but that word forever breaks the heart. 'The smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever.'"

Such, my friends, doomed unless you repent, are the consolations of Christianity. Their great completeness cannot fail to strike you. Their adequateness you will not question. In them is seen, as in no other religion, the justice of God, his infinit love; for has it not been said, God is good? It is hard to be reconciled to death, but when you know with exactness what the fate of the loved and lost is you will, I trust, be as cheerful as you can. The picture I hav drawn you is the creed of the only true church of Christ—the Methodist. It is true the Presbyterian is a little more plainly and severely expressed, but the Methodists do not like too much plainness. They hav always condemned the outspoken manner in which Calvin pursued and burnt Servetus. All of the churches, however, hav substantially the same creed except the heretical Quakers whom our forefathers so vigorously flogged at the cart's tail and ruthlessly banished to the wilderness, and the heretical and ever-hated Unitarians, Universalists, Beecherites, and others of that ilk. Abner Kneeland was a Unitarian and we put him in prison and visited him not. To Beecher's assertion that there is no hell, it is quite enough to say that it is Beecher who says it, and his love of humanity is greater than his fear of God. He is not sustained in his assertion by the creeds of any of the orthodox churches. Our dead friend's memory may be embalmed in the hearts of all who knew her, as Mr. Adler would say, but as she was not a Christian, her soul, according to all church tradition and authority, is writhing in the flames of hell.

Such would be the consolation Mr. Buckley would offer to the mourning friends of a heretic if he could be as cruel as his creed and as honest as cruel. His consolation is certainly not open to the charge of coldness. And he whose heart was not troubled by such a horrible doctrin must hav an organ of stone. There may be a million mansions in "my father's house," but not one in a million of the people can ever rest there. The rooms are empty and echo only with the wails from below. They are vacant from garret to cellar, and on every front door might be inscribed the legend, "To Let." The conditions of the infinit landlord are so hard that he can find few tenants. Only men like Calvin and Knox and Wesley liv on heaven's Fifth avenue. The society is too exclusiv and the rent too high. To be a disciple of his, Christ says, we must hate father, mother, brother, and sister. The terms are so dear that no decent man can afford to occupy a mansion. Only the extremely penurious can save enough grace of God to hire a house up there in heaven.

We would like to compare statistics of the suicides among the Freethinkers like Adler and the Christians of Dr. Buckley's faith. Such insinuations as he indulges in are unworthy of even a ranting Methodist. He will either call the roll of those who hav "practically applied" Prof. Adler's sentiments and committed suicide, or rest under the imputation of dishonesty. We "pass the hat for one little fact."

Questions Answered.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: (1.) Will you confer a favor by informing two of your readers whether or not the exact same portion of the surface of the moon is always presented to the earth; that is, say for example, when the moon was full the last time a certain portion of its surface was presented to our view; now is that identical same portion of its surface always the portion of its surface we see when the moon is full?

(2.) What and where is the origin of Gypsy people?

(3.) Where and when did the Druids originate?

Titusville, Pa., George Brown.

1. The moon is an opaque body with no light of its own, receiving and reflecting the light of the sun. Its surface is covered with black spots, visible to the naked eye, which cause reflections of light, varying according to the position of the moon in respect to the sun. Like our globe, the moon presents evident traces of successiv geological revolutions. The moon has an annual motion around the sun. It also rotates upon its own axis. This motion is executed in something over twenty-seven days. It takes precisely the same time to accomplish its third motion, which is a revolution round the earth. Hence we always see the same atmosphere, and the moon always presents very nearly the same face to the earth.

2. It is probable that the gypsies came originally from India, but nothing is known certainly about them till about 1417, when they appeared in Europe. Korner called them oriental vagabonds. Another writer said they were "baptized heathens." Various mythical legends were attached to them. They were also supposed to be Egyptians, which name was soon corrupted to gypsy. It is likely they came through Egypt from India. Their dialect contains Greek, Slavonian, Magyar, and German words. Some writers assert that they were held as serfs in Europe as early as the eleventh century. When they first appeared in Germany they had letters from princes and dukes, which obtained them many favors. But they early appear to hav been incorrigible thieves and vagabonds, debased by superstition—some Christian and some pagan—and living a wild and unsettled life.

3. The word Druid designates a class of priests corresponding to the Magi, or wise men, of the ancient Persians. The derivation from the Greek word signifying an oak, though as old as the days of the elder Pliny, is alleged by most writers to be fanciful. In Cæsar (100 B.C.) is the first account of the Druids to be found in classical writers. He tells that in Gaul all the learned men were Druids or nobles. The Druids were the chief expounders of the law. They taught that the soul was immortal. Astrology, geology, physical science, and natural theology were their favorit studies. Just where they originated, or when, is of course not definitly known. It is probable the order of Druids existed several hundred years before the Christian era. The early Christian fathers speak of them, but in a manner which shows they knew nearly nothing about them.

Cook's Statistics.

Lecturing in Chicago recently on the "Seven Modern Wonders of the World," Joe Cook put down as the fifth wonder "the triumph of Christianity in our century." He said that "in the last eighty-three years Christianity had gained more than in the previous 1800 years. At the beginning of the century there was one of fifteen of the population in the evangelical churches. Now there was one in five." This, as every one knows, or ought to know, is pure mathematical fabrication. Statistics covering the whole country are very hard to get, but every time a growing city is canvassed the result is discouraging to the church. Take, for instance, Chicago. In answering a correspondent a paper published in that enterprising city gave these figures, based on the census and computed from the best data at hand. The compiler is a member of the Congregational Club of that city:

Year.	Churches and Missions.	Year.	Population.	Ratio of Members to Pop.
1840	6	1840	4,479	1 to 747
1851	28	1850	28,269	1 to 1,009
1862	84	1860	109,260	1 to 1,301
1870	187	1870	298,977	1 to 1,599
1880	242	1880	503,185	1 to 2,079

Mr. Cragin, the gatherer, says:

"These figures include Protestant and Roman Catholic churches, Jewish synagogs, two Mormon churches, several Spiritualist societies, and, indeed, every society listed in the city directory as religious organizations. There are 188 of the 242 churches given for 1880, which are classed as Evangelical Protestants, of which 38 hav services conducted in foreign languages. The population between 6 and 21 years is given as 155,000, while the total membership of Sunday schools is but 81,289."

By these figures it is seen that while but a little over forty years ago 1 in 747 was a communicant in some church; in 1880 only 1 in 2,079 indulged in that folly. Now, in 1883, it is probable that not over 1 in 2,500 is a member of any orthodox body. Of course a great many who do not take interest enough in religion to join a church are really Christians. This is notably the case with those parties who figure prominently and often in the police courts. The arrests in Chicago in 1882 were 1 in 18 of the population. This is owing to the increase in the Catholic population. About 1 Irishman in 10 either gets drunk or beats his wife once a week and is consequently punished. Every week in New York city about thirteen or fourteen hundred arrests are made, the most of them being for comparativly trivial offenses. Of these thirteen or fourteen hundred, nearly twelve hundred answer "Catholic" when asked by the police and court as to their religion. It is thus seen that not only is the better portion of the inhabitants of Chicago nearly all indifferent to the church, but that in all large cities the criminal ranks are recruited from the Catholic church. Cook's statement, read with these figures given, shows that he is undoubtedly entitled to the belt as champion liar of the century. This title we hav long been willing to concede to him, and our opinion is indirectly strengthened by this editorial opinion from the same Chicago journal. It is from the Inter-Ocean of June 23:

"Some of the Hindoos believe in 8,400,000 stages of existence for every mortal. Boston papers fail to state which stage Mr. Joey Cook evoluted into when he was out in Calcutta. Perhaps, however, he took out exemption papers from their laws of life. Nothing higher ought to be expected from a man who feels a call to boss the Chicago papers at a 1,000-mile range. Western admiration for the washing-day sage is at the boiling point. It might melt him with its ardor if he should happen into town on the Fourth of July."

"Joey" Cook completed his catalog of wonders by saying the sixth was "the current fulfilment of Bible prophecy," and the seventh was the "establishment of scientific supernaturalism." Now we ask Mr. Cook to point out the "fulfilment" of prophecy! Where is it? What is it? When was it? The assertions of a man who usually lies when he opens his mouth, count for little unless backed up by facts, and these Mr. Cook has forgotten to furnish. And his establishment of "scientific supernaturalism" is equally in his mind's eye. The two words cannot go together. Anything that is scientifically demonstrated cannot hav a supernatural origin, and the reverse is just as true. A supernatural story never had a basis of scientific fact. Science is nature. Super-naturalism is not nature. The two can never go together, and he who talks about scientific supernaturalism only show his ignorance of science and his misunderstanding of its relations to the world. He is, in short, a fool.

Cook's "criticisms of Col. Ingersoll and Mr. Bennett," which he indulged in, in the same lecture, are not worth further notice from us. He may continue to abuse these men till he is unable to longer voice his venom, but they will be remembered with honor, long after the mound over his body has been leveled by the rains.

The "Sun's" Two Kinds of Infidelity.

THE KIND THAT IS NOT "BLATANT."

From the Sun of June 25th.

The Infidelity the church needs to fear is not blatant. It does not assail Christianity, and delight itself by picking flaws in Christian priests and believers.

THE BLATANT KIND ILLUSTRATED.

From the Sun of June 26th.

The clergy hav figured with unusual prominence in the criminal record of the past few weeks. Almost every morning has brought news of some misdeed by a minister. We find one clergyman attempting suicide because he has been refused by a girl he professes to love; another shooting a brother minister because of some real or fancied insult to the slayer's sweetheart; and a third being carted off to jail in a prison van upon a charge of misconduct toward a member of his household.

To the Freethinkers of Canada.

THE ROCHESTER CONVENTION.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav been requested by some of my Liberal friends here (a request I most willingly respond to) to extend through The Truth Seeker and Investigator an invitation to all liberal-minded people within a reasonable distance of the city of Rochester, N. Y., and in particular to the Liberals of Canada, where I reside, an invitation to attend the Rochester Freethinkers' Convention, commencing August 29th and to continue five days. We wish to make this gathering, and we hav reason to think it will be, the largest and best Freethought convention ever before held. To all lovers of truth and to all desiring the best information upon questions of theology and reform, from the most enlightened minds of the day, this will be an opportunity such as is seldom to be met with.

Our friends in Rochester, who are many, will do what they can to make the entertainment agreeable, and we learn arrangements will be made with railroads to carry passengers at reduced fare to the convention. Now, friends, let us all who can, who hav got a little light upon the science of life, try to make this one of the greatest demonstrations in favor of Freethought principles that has ever taken place. The world is composed of atoms. Conventions are composed of individuals, and in unity there is strength.

From your sincere friend and the friend of humanity, John Ray.

Welland, Canada, June 18, 283.

"Answers to Christian Questions." By D. M. Bennett. Price, 25 cents.

We hav Charles Watts's paper, the Secular Review, on sale Yearly subscriptions also received. Price, single number, 7 cents; by the year, $2.75.

Selections.

How People Die.

From the Sun.

A veteran physician speaking on this subject recently, said: "Judging of the thoughts of men by their words just previous to death, I should say it often happens that a dying person givs no indication of thought upon a subject that has been the favorit topic of a life-time. I hav known activ business men, with important affairs unattended to, who died with words upon their lips that indicated absorption in some incident of the moment, generally relating to personal comfort. It was that sort of a death that Washington Irving died, saying, 'Well, I must arrange my pillows for another weary night; if this could only end.' Long suffering under the afflictions of a painful disease will serve to divert the mind of the strongest. Even the philosopher, Ben Franklin, was forced to say with his last breath, 'A dying man can do nothing easy.' It is a very common thing for dying persons to express sympathy with attendants who hav been fatigued in attending them. Among the last words of Sir Walter Scott were, 'Poor souls, I know you were up all night.'

"And yet, where there has not been protracted suffering, and where the administration of narcotics has not produced a wandering mind, a dying person will manifest an interest in whatever has been the uppermost thought of his life. Lord Chesterfield is reported to hav illustrated his proverbial politeness by requesting that a friend at his bedside should be given a chair. Very often the last words indicate thouthfulness for loved ones, such as the utterance of Charles II., 'Let not poor Neily starve,' or of Thomas Jefferson, who said, 'I resign my soul to God, and my daughter to my country.' It is but natural that whatever consciousness is left at the moment of death should be that of affection. I hav seen it expressed in a loving look, or a pressure of the hand, often long after the power of speech had gone."

"How about the facial expression of dying persons?"

"That is often spasmodic. The laughing or crying muscles are often excited in the convulsions of death, when there are no corresponding feelings. In the same way there are often muscular contortions of the mouths of infants, who are believed to be smiling, when in fact they are troubled with stomach ache."

"Hav you ever observed the visions and ecstatic delights that are often spoken of by religious writers?"

"Certainly. They are quite common, and not at all confined to religious persons. Experienced physicians testify that most persons die in a state of trance. Although they are apparently conscious, they pass away in a state of dreaming. Often they seem to be listening to musical sounds. Sometimes they seem to be beckoned to by angels."

"And do you regard such exhibitions as purely physical?"

Just as much so as any dream. They are controled by the ordinary thoughts and feelings; the every-day life and education and imagination of the subject in precisely the same way as a dream is so controled. Generally a dream is a reproduction of a waking thought. The curious jumble of subjects in a dream is the result of absence of volition. There is a suspension of the functions of the median tract of the brain. The same thing occurs in the mesmeric trance. The suspension may be temporary, and then the person may not only return to consciousness, but remember some of the curious things seen in the vision. Something of the same nature occurs in taking opium. In the earlier stages of opium eating, the subject appears to hav two mental operations going on at once. One is fantastic and odd, the other normal and regular. In such a case, one is able to keep up a running comment on the visions passing before his eyes.

"The death of a healthy person is always a very different thing from the death of a diseased person. In cases of accident, where persons know that they must die in a very short time, unless the shock has been very great, they preserve their customary trains of thought; they direct their affairs with comparativ composure."

"Hav you ever known persons to die in a comical mood?"

"There are historic cases. Douglass Jerrold is reported to hav said, 'Why torture a dying creature, doctor?' and everybody remembers the dying joke of Robert Burns—'Don't let the awkward squad fire over me.'

"It must be remembered, however, that what are called the last words of great men may hav been uttered a considerable time before death—either hours or days. Some allowance must be made for the impossibility of procuring testimony. When the late Dr. Beard died, after having become widely known as an intelligent and educated skeptic, his sister proclaimed that he had recanted on his deathbed, and had indicated his hope of heaven by pointing upward, and saying, 'Higher, higher.' But the attendant, who was beside Dr. Beard, said the words, 'Higher, higher,' had no reference to a future state of existence, but were simply an indication that the doctor wished to be raised on his pillow."

Hot Bed for Rowdies.

From Pomeroy's Democrat.

At Hamilton, N. Y., is located the Madison University, where Baptist preachers are hatched out and harnessed for hauling humanity heavenward. Hamilton is about twenty miles south from Syracuse. Six miles from Hamilton is the village of Earlville, a quiet, modest place. On the first of June the young religious whelps there studying for the ministry in order to be dedicated to the cause of Christ, to the number of fifty, decided to haze two young men who would not join the card parties, drunken bouts, and raids upon prostitutes engaged in by the others. To this end a committee of the fifty select loafers here being educated for the ministry of Jesus went to Earlville and engaged Felt Hall for the night, saying it was for a society meeting of the students. The charges were paid and the keys given to them.

During the day the majority of the gang reached Earlville. After the two decent students had retired for the night, their room was broken into by a portion of the gang.

They were then ruthlessly compelled to dress, and were bound hand and foot and gagged. A closed carriage was in waiting, and into this they were thrust, and the horses' heads turned toward Earlville. The larger part of the participants had gone in advance by carriages.

They arrived at their destination about midnight, and immediately took charge of Felt Hall. Two large barrels had previously been prepared for the occasion. Sharpened nails had been driven into them from the outside, so that they protruded nearly an inch on the interior. The two victims were placed in these barrels, after the gags had been removed from their mouths. The barrels were then headed up. The floor of the hall was wet down, and a small fire built in the center. The barrels were then rolled from one end of the hall to the other, and several times around and over the fire. Revolvers were fired and firecrackers exploded.

The terrible din had aroused several of the villagers, who assembled about the hall. The cries of the imprisoned young men could be heard above all the confusion. A constable demanded admission to the hall, but was threatened with violence. He ungallantly retreated. The barrels were finally rolled down the stairs and into the street. The heads were knocked in and the two students liberated. They were more dead than alive, and presented a pitiable sight. When the citizens offered to lend aid and call for a physician, the firing of revolvers began a second time, and all were glad to retreat. The young men's clothing was nearly torn from their bodies, and the blood flowed from the wounds caused by their coming in contact with the sharpened nails. The hazers were indignant over the interference of the villagers, broke every street-lamp in the town, and destroyed other valuable property.

They made night hideous with their racing in the streets, firing their revolvers, and drinking liquors, and at three o'clock in the morning, without eating or paying for the elaborate supper prepared expressly for them, left Earlville for Hamilton and their college rooms. The two victims of their cowardice, brutality, and drunkenness were cared for by the people, and at last accounts were barely alive.

Every one of the loafers thus engaged should be fined $5,000 and be imprisoned till the fine is paid, and the proceeds should go to the victims of such cowardly proceedings. If the faculty of Hamilton College cannot make full amends for this outrage, and protect their decent students in the future, the property should be confiscated by the state and converted into a prison, or burnt.

A Western Opinion of Some of Our Books.

From the San Francisco Universe.

"Deity Analyzed," by Col. John R. Kelso, is a searching investigation of the myths worshiped by the Christians. The analysis of the god of the Bible is bold and rugged, and the godship of Jesus is riddled with stern facts. Col. Kelso tersely says that, "since the gods cannot possibly reflect anything higher than the conceptions of the ignorant and superstitious primitiv men who invented them, they are necessarily inferior to the finer conceptions of the best minds of the day." This is the key-note of the work, and is fully sustained throughout. The author of "Deity Analyzed" was for a number of years a prominent Methodist minister, and thus his early training has peculiarly equipped him for his inconoclastic work as a Freethinker.

"The Devil's Defense," a brochure in rhyme, is an appendix to "Deity Analyzed." The defense of his satanic majesty bears a legal as well as poetic aspect. He pleads his cause in open court, and before the whole world. The devil in this instance is not as polished and scholarly a creation as Milton's Satan; nor as subtle and profound as Goethe's "Mephistopheles," nor as sublimely horrible as Dante's diavola. Col. Kelso's colored autocrat, however, makes a plain and strong statement of facts which will convince any unprejudiced jury that he has been more sinned against than sinning. The "Devil's Defense" in many passages follows closely the Bible text, and it naturally follows that some gross impurities lower and degrade the devil's rythmical and forensic effort. These "intellectual outrages," as we term them, mar many Freethought literary works, and it is the duty of the Freethought press to expurgate them, employing, if need be, merciless criticism. The beauty, nobility, and grandeur of Freethought Philosophy must not be sullied by the libidinous and livid grossness of the Christian's Bible. "Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense," 471 pp. Price, $1.50. New York: TRUTH SEEKER Publishing House, 21 Clinton Place.

"Truth," a poem in Three Parts, by Mr. Edwin N. Kingsley, treats of the origin of the bible's god, his immaculate son, and that pleasant but mysterious theological gentleman known as the Holy Ghost. This trinity of gods is assailed with poetic weapons which, if not polished and refined, hav the effect of completely impaling the myths. They stand before us as frauds sanctified in crime, baptized in blood, and gory in murders. The poetic garb of "Truth" in the cantos devoted to the gods of the "unco guid" (as noble Bobby Burns scathingly stigmatized them) is not a garb resplendent with chaste and beautiful adornments—how could it be with such an unhallowed trinity in the perspectiv? In contrast with this are the poetic passages descriptiv of the Harmonial Philosophy or Spiritualism, and notably in Canto XIII. The latter contains an outpouring of poetic warmth, fervor, and "inspiration" which for beautiful imagery, exalted ideals, and sublime longings has been seldom surpassed. If this be fiction it is a species of intellectual ecstasy which can only tranquilize and ennoble the human race. "Truth," 40 pp. Price 25 cents. TRUTH SEEKER Publishing House.

"A Roman Catholic Canard" is a fabricated account of a scene at the bedside of Thomas Paine in his expiring moments. Our venerable Palestinian friend, Paul, says something about a lie abounding unto the glory of God—in which case it may, from the Christian standpoint, be considered a "white lie." The Roman Catholic Bishop Fenwick lied in abundance, if we may be pardoned the harsh and inelegant expression, and the Canard is thoroughly exposed in the work before us. Paine, like Hume and Gibbon, passed away from earth with philosophic fortitude. The priests, Protestant and Catholic, hav, with characteristic Christian meekness, united in assailing the memory of Thomas Paine, and their infamous assaults are entirely worthy of their infamous deity. "A Roman Catholic Canard," 19 pp. Price 5 cents. TRUTH SEEKER Publishing House.

Happy as a Lord.—A Change of Medicin.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

While Rev. Mr. Mulkittle was electioneering for the office of chaplain of the Arkansaw legislature, his son Willie, the inquisitiv, was amusing himself by watching his Uncle Henry, a young man in whom no guileless boy should in the least repose a moment's trust. Uncle Henry—telling truth which must not be concealed—revels with that class of men who shake the dice and tip the whisky bottle. While Uncle Henry loitered around the barn, Willie saw him, half suspicious that some one was near, elevate a long, lank bottle, and take a draft lingering and affectionate.

"What is that?" the boy asked.

"Medicin. The doctor told me to take it." And taking another loitering swig, he thrust the bottle under the hay. Shortly afterward, while the boy was standing on a chair in the sitting-room, searching the mantelpiece for any stray articles of interest that might be lying around, he overturned a bottle of bitters which smashed with a crash on the hearth. The thoughts of punishment frightened him into the extremity of immediate action, and gathering up the fragments of glass, he threw them away and swept the hearth. Then he went out to the stable, found his Uncle Henry's medicin bottle, hurried to the house, and placed it on the mantelpiece. The bottle was exactly like the one which had been broken, and as it contained medicin he did not think he was committing a serious crime.

When Mr. Mulkittle came home his wife met him and rushed forward for a congratulatory embrace, believing that his election was a fixed fact. "Go away," he said, in a sorrowful voice; "leave me, for the devil has broken his chains and I am defeated. Men who promised to vote for me did not—that is, to use a parliamentary phrase, went back on me. I only got two votes, and one of these changed from me before the vote was announced."

"But you got one vote anyway," said Mrs. Mulkittle, in an attempt at consolation; "you ought to be glad that one man stands by you."

"What does one vote amount to among ninety?"

"But can't you get the position of assistant chaplain?" suggested the wife.

"Assistant chaplain," repeated Mr. Mulkittle almost contemptuously. "Who ever heard of an assistant chaplain? Go away, Emily, and sit down. Don't make any more suggestions, for I've talked until I'm worn out."

Mrs. Mulkittle withdrew as a candidate for the position of premature consoler, and the minister, remarking with a sigh that he would resume taking his bitters, having neglected his health during the canvass, he took down the bottle, took a kind of Uncle Henry "pull," said "ah-hah," and sat down to grieve over his defeat. Feeling a slight improvement, he devoted another moment's attention to the bottle, sat down again, and saying, "but it's all right, Emily," arose and "tapped" the bottle again.

"Pa," said the boy, encouraged by his father's sudden show of good humor, "who was it said 'damn the meat?'"

"What do you mean?" asked the minister in astonishment.

"Didn't somebody in the Bible curse a ham?"

"Oh, you mean Noah when he cursed his son Ham."

"Tell me about him."

The minister visited the bottle again and said: "Well, Noah was the man who built the ark. After the flood Noah planted a vinyard, a lot of grapevines, you know, made some wine, and got drunk. He laid down and went to sleep, and then his son Ham found him; and seeing that he was naked, covered him up. When the old man learned that Ham had put the canvass on him—no, I take that back. I should not joke in regard to such sacred matters. When Noah found that Ham had seen him naked he cursed Ham."

"Did he say, 'Dad blame you,' like Jane" (meaning the cook) "said to the fire when it wouldn't burn?"

"No, he pronounced a curse upon him."

"Noah kicked the cover off, didn't he?"

"I suppose so."

"Did he plant the grapevines and get drunk the same day?"

"No, for he made the wine first."

"But you said he planted the vines and got drunk. Was Noah a good man?"

"Yes, he was one of God's chosen servants."

"What made him curse, then?"

Mr. Mulkittle lifted the bottle again, remarked that the bitters helped him, and said: "Noah cursed Ham because he was a bad boy."

"Do you curse me when I'm bad?"

"No, I wouldn't curse you for ten dollars."

"Why wouldn't you?"

"Because I don't want to. Emily, this kid—or boy, I mean—is the smartest chap in town. Emily, you are getting better-looking every day. Never mind; beat 'em next time."

"Who was it that danced?" asked the boy.

"It was David who danced before the ark."

"Was Noah in the ark?"

"No, it was the ark of the covenant. Let me show you. Now, you be the ark and I'll be David," and the reverend gentleman danced around the room. Mrs. Mulkittle, unable to solve the mystery of such levity, remonstrated, fearing that her husband might be delirious; but he assured her that he was all right, and that it was a cold day when a man could beat him for office. He pranced around the room, and the boy, in perfect opulence of pleasure, watched the proceedings. Another visit to the bottle, and the minister danced with increased grotesqueness, and the boy laughed in glee. Pretty soon Mr. Mulkittle sat on the floor and laughed boisterously; and then lying down, he said: "Goin' t'sleep now. Curse any man puts blanket over me."

Letters from Friends.

SCOTT RIVER, June 15, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $7.50, to be used as herein directed: for my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER $2.50; for Monument Fund, from James H. Lindsey, $1: Frank Smith, $1; M. A. Roper, $1; and from myself $1, and $1 for life-size lithographs of D. M. Bennett and R. G. Ingersoll.

MRS. ISABELLA ROBINSON.

MOUNTAIN VIEW, June 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to hear that the defendants beat the prosecution in the Star route case. Please send me "Answers to Christian Questions" by D. M. Bennett. I wil rub up some preachers when I get a chance. In conclusion I will say I like John Peck. Let us giv him full swing. THE TRUTH SEEKER is my rock and salvation. I could not get along without it.

Yours for Freethought and reform,

G. RICHARDSON.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 15, 283.

MR. EDITOR: When our absent and lamented friend, D. M. Bennett, visited this city I had the pleasure of introducing to him my distinguished friend, Col. Sam. Norris. The gentleman at the time subscribed for the first three volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." Mr. Morris has perused these with avidity and thinks them invaluable. He now desires to procure the fourth volume, and inclosed please find the order for it.

Yours for the good Cause and the true Cause,

BYRON ADONIS

SCRANTON, June 25, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $2.50 for subscription to the noble TRUTH SEEKER, and $1 for the Monument Fund. I became personally acquainted with our beloved friend, D. M. Bennett, at Glen Park Hotel, Watkins, N. Y.

I add my mite to erect a monument for our dear friend, but he erected himself a monument in life which will stand for all time to come. I will giv $4 more if a Bennett Hall is built in which his works on the loom of humanity may be taught. Paine and Bennett memorial halls will be the greatest temples built in America for Freethought. I would like to see the day when every church of God will be rededicated to man, and we may drink freely of the milk which flows in the furrows of nature.

FREDERICK HENCKE.

HUBBARD, June 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2.50 to pay for one year's subscription. I hope you will excuse me for not responding sooner. I am an old coal miner, and not blessed with much of this world's goods. But I would rather lose a meal a day than be without THE TRUTH SEEKER. My occupation has led me a little nearer the orthodox hell than men that make a living on the surface of the earth. In England I hav worked hundreds of feet toward the center of the earth and I hav been where it is pretty hot, but I never saw the devil, heard him, nor smelt him. But some of my Christian friends told me God lived there. I hav been in contact with some terrible mining calamities, and heard men praying and shouting for mercy, but God paid no attention to them—he killed them all the same. I never asked God a favor in my life and I was saved. They tell me God knows best what we want, and then they turn round and tell God what to do. Impudence!

ADAM ARCHBOLD.

PAYSON, June 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I want THE TRUTH SEEKER sent right along, and if I forget the date don't stop the paper, for while I liv you may depend on my subscription. I should not know how to keep house without having it around to tell us some good wholesome truth every week. I am doing a little missionary work by handing around the paper. I find that the leaven is working, and I am in hopes that next winter we shall be able to start a Liberal League here. If we had a few good lectures this fall and winter, I know that we could start with a goodly number of Freethinkers, as I find that the most of our husiness men are in favor of it. They are strong in their opinions, but they are waiting for some one to start the movement. If we can get H. L. Green here I think we would be all right.

Yours truly, GEO. B. BECKER.

DEL NORTE, June 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $4—$3 for my subscription, and $1 for the Monument Fund. I am a little behind time in paying up, but I hope you will excuse delay. E C. Walker speaks my sentiments on the prohibition question, and Thomas Winter on the Spiritualistic. No man, no law, has any right to dictate to me or anybody else what to eat or drink, and if Mr. Peck says that we are sick and tired of Winter's talk and writings he is making a great mistake. I and a good many TRUTH SEEKER friends think more of his writings than of all the Spiritualistic squabble ever written on paper. It has given no proof to the world as yet, not any more than the orthodox Christian of his monster Bible God. They hav thrown away God and Bible, made one step toward Liberalism, but hav to make another big step before they can call themselvs Liberals. It is a creed, a religious sect, as Winter says, and that is the best you can make of it. They cling to that future spirit land which nobody knows anything about. Does that pious desire of the Christian to liv forever make it so? or does the hope of the Spiritualist to meet in the spirit land make it so? No, surely not. It is very common out here in the far West, as I witnessed a good many seances and trances myself. I hav consulted and sat, as they say. A dead Indian chief came out of the spirit-land. Just think of it! to consult a dead, uneducated, barbarous brute of an Indian! And is it not disgusting to any man of common sense? So, Brother Winter, keep on throwing your bombshells as well in the Spiritualistic as the orthodox camp.

FRANK IHRINGER.

DOWLIN, TEXAS, June 25, 283.

ESTEEMED FRIENDS: I mentally bid you good-morning. This is June 25th. I hav seen no person in five years as old as I am. How large a per cent of all born reach that age (84)? I know no person that has. If it were not for the hope of a second or continued life, I should consider my span very limited. I am in good health to-day, but I feel that my sun is sinking very fast. I am an Agnostic; cannot say that I know I shall hav another life. I reason in this manner: I know I hav a life now; some good agent gave it at first. I did not procure it myself; I regard it as the best gift I ever had. I would not take a world for it. The giver must hav been a benevolent being, to hav bestowed as good a gift. He must hav wished me well. If my happiness were the motiv the bestower had in giving life for three score and ten, or, as in my case, four score and four years; if he be as powerful as benevolent, he might reasonably be expected to prolong my life to millions of millions of years, or to an eternity. If kindness moved him to bestow the first life as a blessing, the same motiv would impel him to perpetuate that life or giv a better. So my conclusion is that a better life may be expected. But, recollect, I think that if we find a heaven at first entrance into the next life, we must take a sufficiency of good deeds along with us to pay for the heaven. I don't deny that a heaven may be earned in the next life, but I think it would be a great gain to work it out in this life, inasmuch as heaven is better than here. To remember our good deeds is heaven; to remember our bad deeds is hell. The whole universe is doubtless progressiv. Man has always been capable of doing right and always capable of doing wrong, and always will be. Whenever he does right he has heaven in his own self. He remembers it with joy that is heaven. It matters not where we are, heaven implies no more than a condition. If you were walking the golden streets with guilty conscience, you would hav hell plenty, I look for more happy conversions in the next life than hav been in this life.

J. A. RUTHERFORD.

EUREKA.

CARTHAGE, MO., June 21, 283.

MR. EDITOR: The heading of my communication will prompt the question, What hav you found? I hav found a Utopia, a miniature paradise; a place where the truth alone is taught, the good appreciated, and the beautiful admired and encouraged; a haven of safety for the pursued; a resort for persecuted defenders of the truth. Liberal, Missouri, contains more versatility of talent, more sense and honor, more humanity, than any other place in this broad land ten times its size. It is a place without a government, a saloon, a preacher, or a pauper. Its climate is of the best, its water clear, cold, and sparkling, its location unimprovable. In short, it possesses, by nature, every element essential to the health and happiness of its people, among whom vice is a stranger, and virtue a cherished possession. Here drug stores contain everything in their line excepting whisky. The observing stranger is scarcely off the train before he is struck with the uniform manifestations of kindness, on all sides conspicuously prominent, evidently prompted only by a love of right. There is no opportunity to suspect a mercenary or selfish motiv in these cordial receptions. Each individual inhabitant seems only a part of a complete circle. A common interest apparently pervades the atmosphere. Strangers are not hustled hither and yon by rival land sharks and speculators, as in the average Western town. They might remain for weeks, and every hour would add to their assurance that no inquiries of a business or personal character would be made to jar their peace, mar their pleasure, or advertise anyone's bad manners. Any attention they might receive would be intended as a contribution to their comfort only. Their questions would be intelligently, courteously, and truthfully answered, whether put to smiling youth or trembling age.

Such, in brief, is a description of this justly celebrated Infidel town of Missouri. It is a place that every Liberal in America can refer to with unstinted pride. It is, and ever will be, a monument of glory to its generous and humane founder, who is not satisfied with destructiv Liberalism alone, but believes in constructiv Liberalism as well. Colonel Walser's highest ambition, as it seems to me, is to surround himself with that great, growing element that has—for all practical purposes—solved the problem of this, the only life of which we hav any positiv knowledge, and prove to the world that happiness is the only good; that the time to be happy is now, and the way to be happy is to make others so. The annals of history will be searched in vain for a more telling illustration of the superiority of example over precept than is found in the establishment and advancement of this Infidel town. Its progress has been watched with envy by jealous rivals, already doomed to inferiority in every feature admitting of a comparison. In these places, within a radius of fifty miles surrounding Liberal, the godly people manufacture lies and calumnies, calling its people a set of Freelovers, immoral, vicious, and degraded. These reports the writer has heard for the past two years, and, though familiar with the Christian mode of warfare, must admit that it required some effort to shake off the fear that there might be some fire where smoke was so plenty. I am only too happy to be able to state that the above description of Liberal, though limited, is true in every particular, and my only regret is the necessity of confining my article to reasonable space, which precludes the possibility of doing the place justice. I will not venture to predict its future. It has grand possibilities. With a constantly increasing population, and a corresponding increase of comfort and happiness to those already settled, its development must remain a matter of speculation. In the way of business, I know of no place in the West where small manufacturing could be carried on to greater advantage than here. Coal is plenty and easily obtained; the streams are skirted by timber, taxes low, railroad facilities good. The broad prairie surrounding the town is dotted with good farm-houses, and Liberal enjoys a good trade. So much for the town.

The grove meeting was held just north of Liberal, and lasted three days, commencing Friday, June 15th. About five hundred people were in attendance, representing fifteen states out of the thirty-eight. It was the first time in my life to mingle with any number of Liberals. Though unable to remember when I became an Infidel, it was so long ago, I can not describe what I enjoyed. The fact that so many people would stop work at this busy season of the year, and travel hundreds of miles to attend a Freethought meeting, made a lasting impression on my mind. It had such a peculiar significance I felt like praying, not forgetting the saviors deserving of thanks. I thought of the good Bennett, who labored so hard and suffered so much, and of how gratifying these evidences of appreciation for such labor would hav been to him, as they must be to all others still working in the same vinyard, could he hav been with us. It was a grand meeting. It did everybody lots of good, even those not there, and still wallowing in the old ruts. It was the happiest of all my experiences. The exercises consisted of lectures, essays, readings, vocal and instrumental music, interesting, entertaining, and instructiv throughout. Dancing was also indulged in to some extent by the younger people in attendance, concluding with a dramatic performance in the hall Sunday night. I will not undertake to particularize. Each and every one did the part consigned to them in a creditable manner, both in the grove and at the hall. It was so much superior in every way to any church arrangement that I hope it may never be my misfortune to be absent when a like meeting is in progress. I hope Liberals will attend these meetings, and encourage them everywhere, as I am certain no other instrumentality does more good. If I may judge by the effect this meeting had upon me, though always willing to defend my Infidel opinions, those who spare the time to attend Freethought meetings will go back to their homes full of hope and encouragement, satisfied that they are among the foremost of our race and generation in point of belief and sound morality, more competent and better prepared to meet the haughty, arrogant advocates of a false theology than ever before. I want every Liberal in the country to know that besides all this there is one green spot on earth where the persecutors of men and women fear to tread, and that is Liberal, Barton county, Missouri. With kind regards to Mrs. Bennett, I am, Yours for humanity,

CAPT. FRANK GREENE.

MR. S. P. ANDREWS AND THE PEOPLE WHO CANNOT UNDERSTAND HIM.

NEW YORK, July 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: With no intention of entering into the discussion going on between Mr. Andrews and Mr. Putnam, permit me to say a few words regarding Mr. Andrews's style of putting things, which seems to offend some people because of its alleged obscurity. I hav more than once heard persons, who had listened to Mr. Andrews in debate or read his books, speak in the highest terms of his vigor of thought, ripe scholarship, or oratorical ability, and conclude their eulogistic remarks with a "But I can't understand him." In the Liberal Club nothing is so sure to catch the ear of the groundlings and bring out a laugh as the customary allusion of the funny man of the club to the incomprehensibility of Mr. Andrews and his Universology; and now THE TRUTH SEEKER clinches the general complaint by intimating that the seven-column article which it publishes of this "eminently learned man" has no meaning, or that, if it has any, the meaning is obscured by a superabundance of words.

It is sad that the people cannot understand Mr. Andrews, but when they find fault with him on that account the situation begins to be funny. He has been trying hard and for long to make certain people understand him, but probably he did not take them in hand early enough. Like Tristram Shandy's misfortunes, the difficulty in their understanding began at least nine months before they were born, and Mr. Andrews should not be held responsible for it. He can state a proposition with admirable clearness, but it is too much to ask him to giv understanding to his readers. It is true that he shoots a little high sometimes, but if those who hear the report, and get a hazy notion of some ponderous metaphysical abstraction skurrying over their heads, will climb a tree, possibly they may get hit by an idea. Let them get up to his level rather than waste so much breath in shouting to him to aim lower. Possibly he may not be shooting at them exclusivly. Giv the grand old philosopher, whom his ablest opponent acknowledges to be the foremost metaphysician of this country and "the chiefest living incarnation of the logic of the universe"—giv him the credit, at least, of knowing himself what he is talking about and of having a meaning. If that meaning is not seen, do not too hastily jump to the conclusion that it is obscured only by the words with which it is clothed. Being familiar with many languages, Mr. Andrews does sometimes coin words for the occasion, but, so far as I am able to judge, the coinage is pure, worth a hundred cents to the dollar, and when his words seem far-fetched and his style obscure, the obscurity is probably local, and bounded by the ignorance of those who fail to see clearly.

It is written of another great teacher that the people to whom he spoke "understood him not," and, after 1800 years, Professor Adler adds, "Neither do we understand him." Nevertheless, as that other teacher's words hav made more stir in the world for eighteen centuries than any words that hav been understood, it is presumable that there is some meaning in them after all. Some people claim to understand both of these philosophers, and perhaps the number may increase.

In every field where I can follow him Mr. Andrews is, to my mind, one of the clearest of reasoners, and when I fail to fully grasp his meaning, it is because of my ignorance of his subject or terminology. I should never think of finding fault with him because I could not understand him. He does not belong to the class of men whose brains are in that mushy condition which is incompatible with clear thinking and lucid statement of thought, and when he chooses to write "with refreshing nearness to the ground," as he frequently does, he is understood there without difficulty. It seems to me that in the article which has been the immediate cause of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S criticism, or of voicing the criticism of others regarding Mr. Andrews's style, he has kept near enough to the ground for any fairly educated and intelligent man, or even a bright school-boy, to catch on. Mr. Wakeman's papers on the scientific gospels are tougher reading than anything that Mr. Andrews has written lately, and harder to digest, but I think it is a mistake to suppose that on that account they are not relished by the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, or are less valuable than the thinner mental pabulum that givs them less trouble to assimilate. Personally I should be better pleased if THE TRUTH SEEKER would giv more space to Mr. Wakeman, Mr. Andrews, and Mr. Putnam. If the people understand half of what these gentlemen say they will get more valuable ideas than they are likely to find in a much larger quantity of easier reading. D. W. CRAIG.

CENTERVILLE, UTAH, June 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I must tell you I hav lately had another letter from my sister in Sydney, New South Wales, with four numbers of the Liberal and the Harbinger of Light; and I tell you that ungodly heretic, Mr. Charles Bright, is agitating the very pious clergy more than ever since his return from America. I am afraid you will hav to write to him and tell him to hav a little mercy on the poor, pious, clerical humbugs. He should consider that their holy feelings are as fine and tender as other people's.

I see that one Rev. Mr. Spicer was going to hav a discussion with Mr. Bright on "Genesis and Geology," and some of the Sydney folks felt as tickled as if they were going to a circus. I am afraid Mr. Bright has become as ungodly as the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER and other American fearless thinkers. The editor of the Sydney Liberal mentions many Freethought papers lying on his table, and among them THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Boston Investigator. Judging from the contents of the Sydney papers, I should say it would be useless to send Joe Cook to convert those irrepressible Sydney heretics, for they made a good deal of fun of him when he was there. And Mr. Bright is a great many too many for another very reverend divine—Archbishop Vaughan, of Sydney. I am afraid you let some of the mantle of THE TRUTH SEEKER fall on Mr. Bright last year when he was in New York.

I expect that in the coming discussion Rev. Spicer will make his side of the affair quite spicy, and then, of course, Mr. Bright will step in and show the Sydney people the bright side of the subject; and then all the flavor of the spice will vanish—and maybe Rev. Mr. Spicer himself.

Well, Mr. Macdonald, I feel very sorry to hear of the conviction of Mr. Foote and others of the Freethinkers of England, for the "awful crime" of blasphemy—but I must correct that phrase and say "for the awful crime of publishing their ungodly paper, the Freethinker." I hope they will be able to bear up and liv to come out of the prison healthy men. But it's a disgrace and a reproach to the British government for these men to be where they are.

O ye priestly scoundrels! do all you can—do your best to persecute and traduce us Freethinkers. But, you vain, shallow mortals, know this: the day of the end of your infamy, hypocrisy, and all of your theological humbug, has dawned; and you, with your Jew God and Jew book (the Bible), must go down, and giv place to people who exercise their own reason and judgment—the better reason and judgment that kind Nature has endowed them with. So the sooner you step down and out the better it will be for all concerned in the welfare of humanity.

As ever, Yours for truth. WM. WILLIAMS.

CINCINNATI, June 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Something or nothing, which, dear TRUTH SEEKER? The human mind hath got to be something or nothing. Now I know of no half-way house between religious superstition and honest Infidelity. The first, I know, is popular, because ignorance most prevails. But were the great masses of people fully enlightened the many popular frauds, deceits, and falsehoods would very soon become extinct and leave the human mind perfectly free to discard and reject every assumed imposture and every false assertion which is now so much indulged in by scheming knaves and crafty charlatans. The true and outspoken Infidel despises all this jumble of deceit, all this pious cunning for gain. He loves truth for truth's sake. He loves nature because it never lies. He asks no pay, or wants it; he seeks no praise. All he asks is fair play and candid, honest sentiment. And right here I boldly proclaim that uncultivated truth is only to be found in the genuin Infidel, who ignores all and every pretext or sophism favorable to supernaturalism, and as spiritualism is a part thereof I oppose it.

There is no life beyond the grave,
And none will preach it but a knave.
He givs no proof beyond assertion,
And every crank hath got his version.

Materialism must triumph. It's the boss truth.

THOMAS WINTER.

MILO, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $4.00—$1.50 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and $2.50 for my Bible—the grand old TRUTH SEEKER—which I shall take as long as I can get money to pay for it. My subscription has not quite expired, neither do I want it to. Such truths as we get in THE TRUTH SEEKER are worth double the price you ask for it, and I hope no one will allow himself to receive the benefit of them until it is paid for.

I cannot express the deep grief that I felt at our dear Brother Bennett's death. When I tore the wrapper from my paper and saw the broad, black lines, I said, My paper is draped in mourning; some one is dead! I did not think for one moment it was Mr. Bennett. I hastily turned the leaves to learn the cause, and my eyes met this: "The Death of D. M. Bennett." I was dumb; I could not speak. I read again, for I thought my eyes had deceived me. If such news had come while he was away it would not hav been so surprising; but now that he had reached home safely, we were not looking for it.

It is very hard to lose our captain, just in the midst of the battle; therefore, every Liberal should buckle on the armor and fight with renewed vigor for liberty. I would offer my heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Bennett in her great loss, and would say, while she has lost a dear husband and companion, I hav lost a brother and friend, and I mourn with her.

May THE TRUTH SEEKER liv and carry out the great work which Brother Bennett had marked out for it. This is my sincere wish.

Yours for truth and liberty, SARAH E. GOULD.

OMAHA, June 25, 1883.

MR EDITOR: I hav secured four new subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and herewith send you the names and the money.

We hav organized a Liberal League here, with over twenty members. We hope to make it, during the course of time, a flourishing League. There is a great number of Liberals and Freethinkers of every description here, and all we need is organization to concentrate our purposes and forces. I will let you know more particulars when I next write.

Very truly, JOSEPH L. ANDREW.

INGALLS, June 23, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $10, to be used as directed.

I like the paper as well as ever, and almost everyone I lend a copy to says it has improved. I don't know whether there is a God in Israel or any other place; but I do know that the glorious old TRUTH SEEKER is making Freethinkers in Orange township. I can truthfully say that Infidelity has made life more enjoyable for me. No matter if I am poor, I can feel happy and take solid comfort in reading Paine's, Voltaire's, and Bennett's works.

Oh, by the way, I must tell the patrons of your paper that we hav a little Thomas Paine here. He was born on the 29th of January—probably the only one in America. I think it was quite a singular coincidence. A. BUTTERFIELD.

MONTREAL, June 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please apply the inclosed $5 toward the Monument Fund, which I am pleased to notice is assuming respectable proportions. It is most befitting that the last resting-place should be specially marked of one whose earnestness and indomitable pluck made him a hero in the struggle to maintain liberty of thought, to encourage investigation in the realms of science, and to establish the right of every individual to use their reason on all questions pertaining to life here and hereafter.

With sincere salutations, believe me

Yours faithfully, WM. T. COSTIGAN.

OLYMPIA, June 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $2, for which please lengthen the time of my subscription for your paper. I like THE TRUTH SEEKER for its liberality and outspoken manner, although we might not agree on Spiritualism, I being a Spiritualist. I think it is time all Liberals should work together upon points on which they do agree. O. F. BOUTWELL.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 22, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Having noticed that a collection is being taken in order to erect a monument to Mr. Bennett, I, one of the admirers of this eminent gentleman and benefactor to humanity, wish to offer also a gift to this cause. The gift is little, but so is my income. Therefore please accept the inclosed dollar with kindness. Wishing you all and everything I could and would wish to myself, I remain, Yours respectfully, ED. FEHRE.

ALTONA, June 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $5. Apply $2 50 to my next year's subscription and $1 to the Monument Fund and the balance as per bill inclosed. JOHN B. MCCALMONT.

THE Christian at Work observes: "The present pope should realize that the situation has materially changed within fifty years, and that the nineteenth century spirit of intelligence and independence has found its way even into Italy. A little while ago the officials sent him a bill for taxes on certain lands in Rome. The notice bore the following remarkable descriptiv form: 'To citizen Joachim Pecci; by trade or profession, pope; conducting business at the Vatican palace, Rome.' The taxes were duly paid, and the receipt made to 'citizen Joachim Pecci.' Such a circumstance would naturally teach a fallible man of ordinary intelligence that the business of pope is at low ebb in these days, and that it became him to be excedingly modest in asserting authority."

The Last Shall be First.

Mollie had a little ram,
Fleece black as rubber shoe,
And everywhere that Mollie went
He emigrated to.

He went with her to church one day—
The folks hi-la-rious grew,
To see him walk de-mure-ly into
Dea-con Al-len's pew.

The worthy deacon quickly let
His angry passions rise,
And gave it an unchristian kick
Between the sad brown eyes.

This landed rammy in the aisle;
The deacon followed fast,
And raised his foot again,
But, ah? that first kick was his last!

For Mr. Sheep walked slowly back
About a rod, 'tis said,
And ere the deacon could retreat,
It stood him on his head.

The congregation then arose
And went for that ere sheep,
But several well-directed butts
Just piled them in a heap.

Then rushed they straightway for the door,
With curses long and loud,
While rammy struck the hindmost man
And shot him through the crowd.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.

12t24

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine." "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, $1,25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, the Virgin Mary, and the Devil. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that the Bible is to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. By D. M. Bennett. 339 large pages. Paper covers 50 cents, cloth, $1.

BOOKS SOLD BY D. M. BENNETT.

MISCELLANEOUS RADICAL WORKS.

Exeter Hall. A theological romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By Wm. McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

The Day of Rest. By Wm. McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall," "The Heathens of the Heath," etc. Price, 10 cents.

History of the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early Fathers. By Dean Dudley. Price, $1.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. Sara A. Underwood. Price, $1.75.

The Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls By Miss Susan E. Wixon. Price, $1.25.

The Prophet of Nazareth; or, A Critical Inquiry into the Prophetical, Intellectual, and Moral Character of Jesus Christ. By Evan Powell Meredith, F. A. S. L. Price, $4.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By Morris Einstein. Price, $1.

The Koran. A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $2.

The Bible in India—Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By Louis Jacolliot. Price, $2.

Trance-Dynamic Cure By La Roy Sunderland. Price of Trance, $1.50; Dynamic Cure, $1.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur, Par Pigault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By Zepa. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-Seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. By Kersey Graves. Price $2.00.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. By Kersey Graves. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. Fish. Price, $1.50.

Old Theology Turned Upside Down, or Right Side Up. By Rev. T. B. Taylor, A. M. Cloth, $1.25; paper, $1,00.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. By V. B. Denslow, LL.D. With an introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.50.

Superstition in All Ages. By John Mesliер. A Roman Catholic priest. Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.

Antiquity of Christianity. By John Alberger. 12mo, 61 pp. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50.

Sequel to Essays, By same author. Price, 75 cents.

Scripture Speculations. With an introduction on the creation, stars, earth, primitiv man, Judaism, etc. By Halsey R. Stevens. Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp. Price, $1.50.

Faith and Reason; Heart, Soul, and Handwork By Halsey R. Stevens. Extra cloth. 12mo, 441 pp. Price $1.50.

The Modern Thinker. By various authors Being the most advanced speculations in philosophy, science. theology, and sociology. Second number. 8vo, 160 pp. Price, $1.00.

Positivist Primer. Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity. By C. G. David. Price, 75 cents.

The Ethics of Positivism. A critical study. By Giacomo Barzellotti, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. Price, $2.00.

Through Rome On. A memoir of Christian and antichristian experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. Price, $1.75.

Christ of Paul. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. Price, $2.00.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper. 12mo. 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20 cents.

The Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M Schlesinger, PH.D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. Price, 75 cents.

The Case Against the Church. A summary of the arguments against Christianity. Price, 50 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. Price, 75 cents.

Soul Problems, With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea. By Joseph E. Peck. Paper, 12mo, 63 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By James Jackson Jarves. Price, $1.25.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By John Stuart Mill. Price, $1.50.

Nemesis of Faith. By Anthony Froude. Price, $1.50.

Christian and Deist. Price, $1.00.

Socialism. Reply to Rev. Roswell C. Hitchcock. By a Business Man.

Modern Symposium. Price, $1.25.

Trial of D. M. Bennett. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 40 cents.

Some Mistakes of Moses. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, $1.25.

The Gods and Other Lectures. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

The Gods, etc., and The Ghosts, etc., in one volume. Price, paper, $1.00.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Price, 25 cents.

Was Christ a God? Conclusions drawn from apostolic writings. By F. Mensinga. Price, $1.50.

Abstract of Colenso on the Pentateuch. A comprehensive summary of Bishop Colenso's argument, proving that the Pentateuch is not historically true. Price, 25 cents.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible. One hundred and forty-four propositions, without comment, embodying most of the palpable and striking self-contradictions of the Bible. Price, 25 cents.

The Bhagvad Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. Cockburn Thompson. Price, $1.75.

The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic. By W. F. Jamieson. Price, $1.00.

Youth's Liberal Guide for their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger A.M. Price, $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By Warren Sumner Barlow. Price, 10 cents.

The Voices. A poem in four parts. By Warren Sumner Barlow. One of the most trenchant yet sensible satires on the notions, superstitions, dogmas, and inconsistent practices of ecclesiasticism extant. Price, $1.

STANDARD SCIENTIFIC WORKS

Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Every Freethinker should read them.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

WORKS OF CHARLES DARWIN.
Origin of Species	2 00
Descent of Man	3 00
Journal of Researches	2 00
Emotional Expression	3 50
Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols	5 00
Insectivorous Plants	2 00
Climbing Plants	1 25
Orchids fertilized by Insects	1 75
Fertilization in the Vegetable Kingdom	2 00
Forms of Flowers	1 50
Power of Movement in Plants	2 00
Vegetable Mould, etc.	1 50
WORKS OF PROF. THOMAS HUXLEY.
Man's Place in Nature	1 25
On the Origin of Species	1 00
More Criticisms on Darwin, and Administrative Nihilism	50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Invertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1 75
Critiques and Addresses	1 50
American Addresses	1 25
Physiography	2 50
The Crayfish	1 75
Science and Culture	1 50
Elements of Physiology and Hygiene. By T. H. Huxley and W. J. Youmans	1 50
Introductory Primer	45
WORKS OF PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2 00
On Sound	2 00
Fragments of Science	2 50
Light and Electricity	1 25
Lessons in Electricity	1 00
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2 00
Faraday as a Discoverer	1 00
On Forms of Water	1 50
Radiant Heat	5 00
Six Lectures on Light	1 50
The above 10 vols., 12mo Cloth,	19 75
Banquet at Delmonico's Paper,	50
Belfast Address Paper,	50
Essays on the Floating Matter of the Air in Relation to Putrefaction and Infection. 12mo Cloth,	1 50
WORKS OF HERBERT SPENCER.
First Principles	2 00
Principles of Biology. 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Psychology, 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Sociology Parts I., II., and III	2 00
Ceremonial Institutions: Being Part IV. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 25
Political Institutions: Being Part V. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 50
Data of Ethics; Being Part I. of the "Principles of Morality."	1 25
Study of Sociology (International Scientific Series),	1 50
Education	1 25
Paper,	50
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals	2 00
Universal Progress	2 00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Esthetic	2 00
Social Statics	2 00
The above 14 vols., 12mo	25 25
Philosophy of Style. 12mo Flexible Cloth,	50
Descriptive Sociology. Published in folio with Tables. Eight Parts now ready, namely:
English.
Ancient Americans.
Negritto and Malayo-Polynesian Races.
African Races.
Asiatic Races.
North and South American Races.
Hebrews and Phœnicians.
French.
Price of the first Seven Parts Each	4 00
Part 8	7 00
WORKS OF DR. J. W. DRAPER.
History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. 12mo	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols	3 00
WORKS OF H. T. BUCKLE.
History of Civilization in England. With a complete Index (not published in the English edition). 2 vols., 8vo Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra,	8 00
Essays; with a Biography of the Author. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00
Half Calf, extra,	2 50
The Life and Writings of Henry Thomas Buckle. By Alfred Henry Huth. 8vo	2 00
WORKS OF PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.
The History of Creation; or, the Development of the Earth and its Inhabitants by the Action of Natural Causes. A Popular Exposition of the Doctrine of Evolution in general, and of that of Darwin, Goethe, and Lamarck in particular. The translation revised by Professor E. Ray Lankester. Illustrated with Lithographic Plates. In 2 vols., 12mo Cloth,	5 00
The Evolution of Man. A Popular Exposition of the Principal Points of Human Ontogeny and Phylogeny. 2 vols., 12mo Cloth,	5 00
Freedom in Science and Teachings. From the German. With a Prefatory Note by T. H. Huxley, F. R. S. 12mo Cloth,	1 00
WORKS OF PROF. W. E. H. LECKY.
History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols., small 8vo Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra	8 00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols., 12mo Cloth,	3 00
Half Calf, extra,	7 00
The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland: Swift, Flood, Grattan, O'Connell. 12mo Cloth,	1 75
History of England in the Eighteenth Century. 4 vols., small 8vo Cloth,	6 00
Half Calf,	12 00
WORKS OF SIR JOHN LUBBOCK.
Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man Cloth,	00
Prehistoric Times, as Illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. Illustrated. 8vo Cloth,	00
Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera (International Scientific Series). 12mo Cloth,	2 00
WORKS OF PROF. OSCAR SCHMIDT.
The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. With 26 Woodcuts. 12 mo	1 50
WORKS OF PROF. E. L. YOUMANS.
Class Book of Chemistry. New edition. 12 mo	1 50
Hand-Book of Household Science 12 mo	1 75
The Culture Demanded by Modern Life: A series of Addresses and Arguments on the Claims of Scientific Education. Edited with an Introduction on Mental Discipline in Education by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo Cloth,	2 00
A Series of Expositions by Prof. Helmholtz, Dr. Mayer, Dr. Faraday, Prof. Liebig, and Dr. Carpenter. Edited, with an Introduction and Brief Biographical Notices of the Chief Promoters of the New Views, by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo Cloth,	2 00
WORKS OF PROF ANDREW D. WHITE. President of Cornell University.
The Warfare of Science. 12 mo Cloth,	1 00
Paper,	50
HISTORY PRIMERS. Edited by J. R. Green. 18 mo. Flexible cloth.
Greece. By C. A. Fyffe	45
Rome. By M. Creighton	45
Europe. By E. A. Freeman	45
Old Greek Life. By J. P. Mahaffy	45
Geography. By George Grove	45
Roman Antiquities. By S. A. Wilkins	45
France. By C. M. Yonge	45
SCIENCE PRIMERS. 18 mo. Flexible cloth.
Introductory. By T. H. Huxley	45
Chemistry. By H. E. Roscoe	45
Physics. By Balfour Stewart	45
Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie	45
Geology. By Archibald Geikie	45
Physiology. By M. Foster	45
Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer	45
Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker	45
Logic. By W. S. Jevons	45
Inventional Geometry. By W. G. Spencer	45
Pianoforte-Playing. By Frank Taylor	45
Political Economy. By W. S. Jevons	45
Natural Resources of the United States. By J. N. Patton	45

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

[Please Order by Number.]

No.		Cents.
1	Discussion on Prayer. Bennett and others	5
7	The Story of Creation. Bennett	5
8	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10	The Plagues of Egypt. "	5
11	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett	2
12	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	3
14	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers	3
15	Come to Dinner. "	2
16	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. Bennett	2
20	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett	2
21	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22	Discussion with Elder Shelton. Bennett	10
23	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett	3
24	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell	5
25	Discussion with George Snode. Bennett	5
26	Underwood's Prayer	1
27	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. Bennett.	5
28	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran	10
29	Paine Hall Dedication Address. Underwood	5
30	Woman's Rights and Man's Wrongs. Syphers	2
31	Gods and God-Houses	2
32	The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. Bennett	3
33	What has Christianity Done? Preston	3
34	Tribute to Thomas Paine	2
35	Moving the Ark. Bennett	2
36	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil	2
37	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
38	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam	1
40	Bible of Nature versus the Bible of Men. John Syphers	2
41	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett	1
42	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood	3
45	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett	2
46	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	2
47	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter	3
48	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson	5
49	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild	3
50	Jonah and the Big Fish. Bennett	3
51	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1	3
52	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood	2
53	Questions for Bible Worshipers. "	5
54	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett	8
55	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman	1
56	Bible Contradictions	2
57	Jesus not a Perfect Character. Underwood	2
58	Prophecies. Underwood	2
59	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. Under'd	2
60	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. "	5
61	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden	10
62	The Jews and their God	3
63	The Devil's Due-Bills. John Syphers	5
64	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. Bennett	2
65	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown	5
67	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2	8
68	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon	2
69	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	3
70	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon	2
71	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman	2
72	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Bennett	2
73	Foundations. John Syphers	2
74	Daniel in the Lyon's Den. Bennett	10
75	An Hour with the Devil. "	3
76	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett	5
77	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett	5
78	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett	2
79	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman	5
80	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett	2
81	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. Syphers	1
82	Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett	5
83	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey	2
84	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London	10
85	Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. Bennett	2
86	An Enquiry About God's Sons. D. M. Bennett	1
87	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. Underwood	2
88	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. E. D. Slenker	3
89	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson	2
90	Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates	1
91	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood	3
92	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter	1
93	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle	5
94	The New Raven. Will Cooper	10
95	Jesus Christ. Bennett	10
96	Ichabod Crane Papers	2
97	Special Providences. W. S. Bell	2
98	Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
99	Do the Works of Nature Prove a Creator? Sciota	10
100	140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als	5
102	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell	2
103	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett	1
104	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson	10
105	Decadence of Christianity. Cappbro	2
106	Franklin, Washington, and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett	2
107	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown	5
108	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. Preston	2
110	Invocation to the Universe. Bennett	1
111	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett	1
112	Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage	2
113	Come to Jesus. Bennett	2
114	Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston	1
115	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett	2
116	The Sunday Question. Bennett	3
117	Constantine the Great. S. H. Preston	3
118	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. W. S. Bell	5
119	The New Faith. Stoddard	2
120	The New Age. W. S. Bell	10
121	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers	3
122	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett	10
123	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and the Observer.	10
124	Sinful Saints. Bennett	10
125	German Liberalism. Clara Neyman	2
126	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood	10
127	Tyndall on Man's Soul	5
129	Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman	2
130	The Ethics of Religion. Clifford	5
131	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr	3
132	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson	1
133	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood	3
134	Talks with the Evangelists	5
135	Is There a Future Life? Bennett	3
136	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett	3
137	Christian Love. C. L. James	3
138	Science of the Bible. John Jasper	2
139	Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston	3
140	Astro-Theology	2
141	Infidelity. H. W. Beecher	2
142	Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon	10
143	Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins	3
144	The Comstock Laws	10
145	If You Take Away My Religion, What Will You Giv Me Instead? Martin	10
146	Seymour Times Prayer	2
147	Reply to the Index on Comstock Laws	10
148	When Did Paul Liv? Scholasticus	2
149	Age of Shams	3
150	The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman	10
151	What is the Bible? M. W. H.	5
152	A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas	2
153	Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway	3
154	Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce	3
155	Co-operation the Redeemer of Society. S. M. Papin	2
156	Free Speech and Free Press. P. B. Shelley	2
157	Questions from a Western Reader. Bennett	3
158	The Fool's Creed	1
159	Bennett Indignation Meeting at Boston	5
160	Sabbath Observance. W. E. Coleman	3
161	Protestant Persecutions	3
162	Eighth Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett	10
163	Ingersoll's Creed	2

Scientific Series.

1	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D.	5
2	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood	3
3	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood	3
4	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin	5
5	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCann	2
7	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	3
8	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford	2
9	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske	10
10	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures	10
11	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson	10
12	Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D.
13	Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis. By MARTEN HAUG, Ph. D., Late Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at the University of Munich. An account of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and literature. Price, $4.50

Essence of Christianity. By LUDWIG FEUERBACH. Translated from the German by GEORGE ELIOT. Price, $3.75.

Exeter Hall. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Faith and Reason. A Concise Account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity. With elaborate Index, 17 pp. By HALSEY R. STEVENS, Extra cloth, 12mo. 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Festival of Ashtaroth. A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. MIDDLETON. Price, 10 cents.

Figures of Hell; or, the Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to the licensers and manufacturers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A book full of facts and figures in regard to the liquor traffic. Price, $1.

Genesis I-II: An Essay on the Bible Narrative of Creation. By A. R. GROTE, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Golden Mean on Temperance and Religion; or, Common Sense in Eating, Drinking, Thinking, and Living. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Golden Throne. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Author of "Prometheus" "Gottlieb," "Ingersoll and Jesus." A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressive ideas and the poetry of the future. Price, $1.00.

Good Sense, or Natural Ideas opposed to Supernatural. Translated from the French of BARON D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature." Price, $1.00.

Gospel of the Kingdom, According to the Holy Men of Old. By the author of "Samson, a Myth-story of the Sun." Two volumes of poetry. Price, 50 cents.

Government. An Essay by CHARLES MORAN. Price, 20 cents.

Half Hours with Some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers: Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Descartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francis Wright Darusmont, Zeno, Epicurus, Matthew Tindall, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron de Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," COLLINS and WATTS. Price, 75 cents.

Heathens of the Heath (the). By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.25.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD. Price, $1.75

Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. SCHLESINGER, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 75 cents.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a review of the Bible. Also remarks on the morals of the Old and New Testaments, and some of the ancient philosophers. By J. M. DORSEY. Price, 75 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. An exhaustive examination of the proofs of the authenticity of the books of the New Testament, showing conclusively that the canonical gospels were unknown up to A.D. 170. By Judge CHAS. B. WAITE. 450 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $2.25; sheep, $3.50; half morocco, $4.00.

History of the Council of Nice, A.D. 325 with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By DEAN DUDLEY. $1.

Humanity and the Progress of International Law. By EDWARD W. SEARING. 15 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN.

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

FROM ONE WHOM ALL KNOW.

The Kerner Stylographic Pen is the most convenient, handy, and ever-ready pen I have ever used I've tried innumerable fountain pens, gold pens, and all sorts, from the old quill pen to the stylograph and for utility, satisfaction, and general convenience this excels all the rest.

My son Oscar also prefers it for use in the woolen mill to any other he has tried.

It is pen, ink, and pencil all in one and can be carried in the vest pocket so as to be always ready.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Observe the address: GEORGE MACDONALD,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 21 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co.,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland. Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST:
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price. $2.00. 21 Clinton Place, New York

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, cents. Sold at this office.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited, The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place,
New York city.

THE GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, }
W. STEWART ROSS, } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY —OF— RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and
A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.
With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

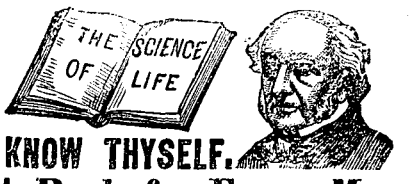
DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove, Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days.

Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Poetry.

"Number One."

Over the Western world echoes are blowing,
And slogans are sounding o'er inland and sea,
Where whiter the cheeks of oppression are growing,
For men that are manacled pant to be free.

Labor returns empty-handed from toiling,
Hunger is stayed with the outermost rind,
And masters enchain sad slaves in their moiling,
Nor heed the loud thunders that crash in the wind.

Palaces tower above the small cottage,
Where riches are fed by the hands of the poor,
Their birthright exchanged for the pitiful pottage,
While Liberty weeps by the half-open door.

The millionaire grinding the face of his fellows,
Their skeleton forms pave the way to his gold,
No pitying cry of tenderness mellows
The petrified heart to avarice sold.

Let him flee from the wrath that shall soon overtake him,
And beware of the fires that are lighted to-day;
Too late be the clarion call to awake him,
He is building a cairn on a desolate way.

The traveler shall cast a stone on the others,
Revealing the deeds of a crimson-stained hand,
As one who trod on the neck of his brothers,
When the specter of Sorrow was haunting the land.

The sleuth-hounds of Justice loudly are baying,
The World and Humanity leap from the dust;
In the "battle for bread" that yet is delaying,
The full cruse shall bide with the tear-laden crust.

The march of the planets with forces that labor,
Infusing the souls of the millions in thrall,
Who come to the contest with unequal saber,
But flaming swords write a decree on the wall.

Clearwater, Neb. MARY B. FINCH.

Interviewing Mrs. Young.

From the Denver Tribune.

Hearing that Brigham Young, Jr., and his family had arrived from Salt Lake and were quartered at the American House, one of the Tribune reporters took a notion yesterday morning that he would run down and interview Mrs. Young. The scheme of interviewing Brigham was an old one—there would be no enterprise in anything of that kind, but the idea of a chat with the wife seemed new and brilliant.

"Can I see Mrs. Brigham Young in the parlor for a few moments?" inquired the reporter at the office counter of the American House.

"Walk up to the parlor and I'll find out," said Mr. Smith.

The parlor was the largest the reporter had ever seen. It was eighty feet one way and seventy the other, and the ceiling was so high that the reporter thought they must hav to use a telescope to determin when it needed whitewashing. He sat down in a chair in one corner. Pretty soon a tall, stout lady entered the room.

"Mrs. Young, I suppose?" asked the reporter.

"Yes, sir," answered the lady.

"I hav called, madam," said the reporter, "to ascertain your views on questions involved by polygamy and other institutions peculiar to Mormonism."

"Ah, sir," said the lady pleasantly, as she took a seat. "I fear I shall be unable to gratify your curiosity. My husband has gone off for a walk; when he returns he will doubtless be glad to advise you upon any topic concerning our faith of which it may be proper to say anything."

"But I wish to obtain your views," explained the reporter. "Mr. Young has frequently been heard through the press, while his wife has never been interviewed. May I hope, madam, that you will accord the Tribune the honor of being the first to convey to the public your——"

"Did you wish to see me?" inquired a small thin lady, who had entered the parlor quite noiselessly.

"Excuse me," said the reporter, "but Mrs. Young was the lady I asked for."

"Well, I am Mrs. Young," said the small, thin lady.

"Yes," said the tall, stout lady, "this is Mrs. Young, and so am I. This is Sophia, Mr. Young's fourth wife, while I am Margaret, his seventh wife—he calls me Birdie."

The reporter was considerably embarrassed. He might hav been happy with either were t'other fair charmer away.

"Be seated, madam," said he; "I hav called to ascertain your views on the questions involved by polygamy and other institutions peculiar to Mormonism."

"Oh, but I've nothing to say," protested the small, thin lady; "Brigham will be in shortly, and maybe he'll talk with you."

"But, madam," urged the reporter, "Mr. Young has frequently been heard from through the press, while his wife—beg pardon, I mean his wives hav never——"

"Who was it wanted to see me in the parlor?" asked a red-haired, freckled-faced lady coming into the room at this juncture.

"Why, this gentleman is a reporter," explained the tall, stout lady, "and he has come to interview us. Mr. Reporter, this is Mrs. Lucy Young, my Brigham's second wife."

Mrs. Lucy Young bowed stiffly and sat down on a hair-cloth sofa.

"I'm not going to be interviewed," she said. "If there's any interviewing to be done, Briggy's got to do it."

"Hello, girls, anybody down here want to see me?"

The inquirer was a curly-headed, red-cheeked young lady, who came bouncing into the room very unceremoniously.

"It's a reporter come to interview us," said the freckle-faced lady.

"A reporter? Why, how funny!" exclaimed the curly-haired, red-cheeked young lady, laughing heartily. She sat down next to the reporter.

"I'm one of the Mrs. Young," said she, "but I mustn't say a word that is liable to be printed. Brig would never forgiv me if I did. I'm his fourteenth wife, you know, and he's awful jealous. Oh, there you are, Emma. Come in, dear. Here's an editor who wants to interview us."

Emma was another wife—the eighth. She was cross-eyed, but otherwise comely to view. She was followed by Rachel, the third wife, who was brown-haired and blue-eyed, and demure looking. They were duly introduced. The reporter felt himself called upon to commence all over again.

"Mrs. Young," said he, addressing the group, "I hav called to ascertain your views on questions involved by polygamy and other institutions, peculiar to the Mormons."

"Wouldn't it be better to call the rest of us before we attempt to be interviewed?" suggested the eighth Mrs. Young.

"Perhaps so," said the reporter. "But—but—but how many are there af you?"

"Oh, we're quite a family," said the fourth Mrs. Young; and going to the parlor door called out, "Maud, Jennie, Clara, Rebecca, Harriet, Mabel, Ruth, Julia, Frances, Mary, Caroline, Esther, come into the parlor, and bring the rest of us with you."

The reporter pinched himself to discover whether he was awake. There was no doubt about it.

Mrs. Young began to stream into the parlor. There was every variety of her. She was tall, short, fat, lean, red-faced, pale-cheeked, plump, scrawny, old, young, sour, pleasant, vivacious, stupid, graceful, and awkward. The parlor got crowded—why don't they hav bigger parlors at the American House, anyway? The idea of expecting a reporter to interview Mrs. Young in a room not more than 6x8! The air was stifling. The reporter felt as if he were going to faint. He began to regret he had ever undertaken the novel task of interviewing Mrs. Young.

"Oh, girls, girls, here comes Briggy!" cried one of the ladies who had been looking out of the window.

"Where?—where?" screamed the rest, rushing pell-mell to the windows—there were seven of them—and craning their necks to get a look at their husband. Such a scrambling and hustling never were seen before. Mrs. Young pushed, crowded, slapped, and scratched one another in their attempts to secure a view of her liege lord.

"See, he threw a kiss at me," exclaimed Mrs. Young.

"He didn't, either! It was for me!" cried Mrs. Young.

And immediately the rest of Mrs. Young indignantly asserted the kiss was meant for her, and then ensued a war of words, in which such endearing epithets as "You saucy jade," "You pert minx," "You mean thing," and "You cross old hen" figured conspicuously. The reporter crept wearily away from the scene. As he tottered through the hotel office Mr. Smith stopped him.

"I hope you succeeded in getting the interview you wanted," said Mr. Smith. "I did the best I could under the circumstances, but the fact is, quite a number of Mrs. Young hav gone out shopping and others were feeling too much under the weather to receive callers."

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life:
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles.
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

CENTENARY OF VOLTAIRE.

VOLTAIRE IN EXILE:

His Life and Works in France and Abroad.

(England, Holland, Belgium, Prussia, Switzerland), and unpublished letters of Voltaire and Mme. Du Chatelet.

BY BENJAMIN GASTINEAU.

Price, Seventy-five cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

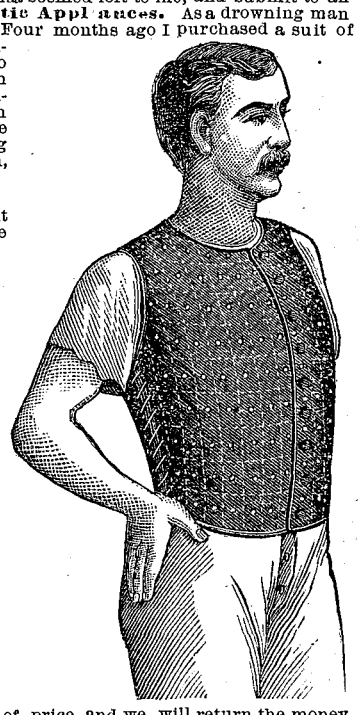
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5 00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselves. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Gems of Thought.

IF Jesus left his bright, happy home in heaven to come down to this gloomy world of ours to make human beings happy, why did he not with one blow kill the devil, the cause of all the evil and trouble the world has ever known? This would hav been a work worthy of a God indeed, and vastly more effectiv than simply dying on the cross. If, however, God wished to hav a devil in the first place, and saw fit to make him, he probably has his reasons for preserving his life.—D. M. Bennett.

WE talk about living in accordance with nature's laws, but we forget that man may improve on nature. By controling our appetites and passions, and living for high aims and noble purposes we create in ourselvs a taste for the pure, the good, and the true, and make these the natural conditions of our better life.—Elmina D. Slenker.

'Tis always Sunday wand'ring down
This way, forgetful of the town.
I see through dim and somber peeps
The dusk-brown lakelet's peopled deeps.
The solemn oaks in garments brown
Seem sandaled monks in leathern gown.
The hidden fence on either hand
With many a brier-bridge is spanned.
The rock-browed hill above the town
Sits mantled in a haze of brown,
And near and far all is so still
I hear the summer on the hill.
—Joaquin Miller's Old Country Road.

OPINIONS determin human welfare and happiness. And you hav no right to trifle with these things any more than a druggist has a right to deal out arsenic over the counter because he is of the opinion that it is something else. You hav no right to spread abroad your opinions until you hav done your utmost to be sure that they are true, because these opinions determin the conduct, character, welfare, happiness of men.—M. J. Savage.

THERE is such a natural principle of attraction in man toward man, that having trod the same tract of land, having breathed in the same climate, barely having been born in the same artificial district or division, becomes the occasion of contracting acquaintances and familiarities many years after; and anything may serve the purpose. Thus relations merely nominal are sought and invented, not by governors, but by the lowest of the people, which are found sufficient to hold mankind together in little fraternities and co-partnerships.—Bishop Butler.

ROME was far better when pagan than when Catholic. It was better to allow gladiators and criminals to fight than to burn honest men. The greatest of the Romans denounced the cruelties of the arena. Seneca condemned the combat even of wild beasts. He was tender enough to say that "we should hav a bond of sympathy with all sentient beings, knowing that only the depraved and base take pleasure in the sight of blood and suffering." Aurelius compelled the gladiators to fight with blunted swords. Roman lawyers declared that all men are by nature free and equal. Under pagan rule at Rome women became as free as men. Zeno, long before the birth of Christ, taught that virtue alone establishes a difference between men.—Ingersoll.

IT is the greatest of delusions to suppose that we came into this world as sheets of white paper, on which the age can write anything it likes, making us good or bad, noble or mean, as the age pleases. The age can stunt, promote, or pervert pre-existing capacities, but it cannot create them. The worthy Robert Owen, who saw in external circumstances the great molders of human character, was obliged to supplement his doctrin by making the man himself one of the circumstances. It is as fatal as it is cowardly to blink facts because they are not to our tastes. How many disorders, ghostly and bodily, are transmitted to us by inheritance? In our courts of law, whenever it is a question whether a crime has been committed under the influence of insanity, the best guidance the judge and jury can hav is derived from the parental antecedents of the accused. If among these insanity has been exhibited in any marked degree, the presumption in the prisoner's favor is enormously enhanced, because the experience of life has taught both judge and jury that insanity is frequently transmitted from parent to child.—Tyndall on Man's Soul.

IT is very possible to speak of God magnificently, or to think of him meanly; to apply to his person high-sounding epithets, and to his government principles which make him odious. The heathens called Jupiter "the greatest and the best," but his history was black with cruelty and lust. We cannot judge of men's real ideas of God by their general languages, for in all ages they hav hoped to soothe the Deity by adulation. We must inquire into their particular views of his purposes, of the principles of his administration, and of his disposition toward his creatures.—Dr. Channing.

IN the world of science, a fact is a legal tender. Assertions and miracles are spurious coins. We hav the right to rejudge even the justice of a God. No one should throw away his reason, the fruit of all experience. It is the only intellectual capital of the soul, the only light, the only guide, and without it the brain becomes the palace of an idiot king, attended by a retinue of thieves and hypocrits.—Ingersoll.

WHATEVER the future may hav in store,
With a will there is ever a way;
And never need burden the soul with more
Than the duties of to-day.

Then up! with a spirit brave and free,
And put thy hand to the plow,
Nor wait for the "good time" yet to be,
But work in the good time now.

WHATSOEVER thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest. . . . The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools. Wisdom is better than weapons of war; but one sinner destroyeth much good.—Eccl. ix, 10, 17, 18.

Odds and Ends.

THE man who asserts that there was a place for everything probably never was called on to locate a boil.

THE new Western weather prophet is proud of his name—Straw. He is sure he can tell which way the wind will blow.

"WHISKY did it, but I'll never touch another drop," said the murderer on the gallows as the sheriff pulled the trap.

"A FLORIDA man has an alligator farm," says an exchange. By and by this item will read, "A farm of alligators has a Florida man."

BEFORE cutting a man's head off in China the authorities considerately make him drunk. This enables a man to get full without having a head on him the next day.

"I WAS so mad at George last night," said a girl of her sweetheart. "Yes," said her ill-natured brother, "I noticed when I looked in the parlor, that you were in arms."

THE ideal newspaper, having nothing but good grammar and nice religious things in it, is not published. The people who want to see such a paper are not willing to stand its losses.

"YOUR sin will surely find you out!" said a pastor sadly, to a drunken member of his flock. "Well," was the thick reply, "hi guess—hic—she won't be very likely—hic—ter find me in."

AT a spiritual circle a man had his hair pulled so hard by a spirit that it gave him the headache. He went home in great anxiety, expecting to find that his wife had died suddenly during the night—the hair-pulling was so natural.

THE New Orleans Presbyterian Synod has decided that marrying a deceased wife's sister is not an infraction of the divine law, but it is nevertheless an attempt to dodge the responsibility of two marriages by having but one mother-in-law.

"How does you little boy come on?" asked Whangdoodle Baxter of a member of his flock. "He am de cutest little cuss you ebber seed. He can swear like a trooper, chews terbacker, ties tin pans to dogs' tails and—" "Does he 'tend school?" "Why, parson, he ain't growed enough to larn nuffin yet."

A MAN walked into the Puck editorial rooms and wanted to know where he could find a market for first-class jokes. "Right here," said the joke editor. "Well, then, how will this do? There was another coronation last month besides that of the czar, and its still going on. I mean Turkey. It is a Koran nation." The crematory services were attended by the Hon. Sackville West and the members of St. George's Society, for the deceased was an Englishman, late of the Punch staff.

AN old lady whose husband had recently died was going on at a great rate, and was sure she would be left dependent upon the world. "Why, my dear sister," said the minister, "you shouldn't do so. It is wrong." "But I am left destitute," she sobbed. "No, you are not. The Lord will provide." "May be he will, may be he will; but if my old man hadn't let his life insurance policy expire, I'd feel more certain about it. He was the carelessest man that ever lived, and in spite of all my talking he let that policy expire only two days before he done the same thing."

"ELOQUENT," said a Chicago lawyer of his partner. "He's able to reason the kick out of a mule. Why, here a while ago business was dull, and he decided that Mrs. Dasher ought to hav a divorce, and he'd go into court and get it for her, and then charge her for it. Somehow she heard what was going on. She galloped down to the court house to stop him, as she didn't want a divorce. She got there just as he was making his plea for her. And mind you she was mad at him, but, by Jove, sir, she listened to him five minutes and became so convinced that she ought to hav a divorce that she walked right up where the jury could see her and shed three pints of tears while he recited her wrongs. And when he won the case she embraced him and said he should conduct all her divorce cases. I call that eloquence."

A TYPE OF BEAUTY.

Here hang my bangs, o'er eyes that dream,
and nose and rose-
bud lips for cream.
And here's my chin, with dim-
ples in.
This is my neck with out
a speck.
Which does these snowy shoulders deck; and here is see, oh, double T—O—N, which girls all wear like me; and here's a heart,
from Cupid's dart, safe shielded by this corset's art.
This is my waist, on which a bustle big is placed. This is my dress; it's cost
I guess, did my poor papa much distress; because he sighed when mama tried it on,
and scolded so I cried; but mama said
I soon would wed, and buy pa's clothes for him, instead. It's trimmed with lace, just in this place, 'neath which two ankles show with grace, in silken hose to catch the beaus, who think they're lovely,
I suppose. These are my feet in slippers neat, and n o w, if we should chance to meet, we'll flirt a little on the street. How sweet!

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit-Life. Paper, 20 cents.

After Death; the Disembodiment of Man, The World of Spirit, Its Location, Extent, Appearance, Inhabitants, Customs, Sex and its uses there. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Price, $2.00.

After Dogmatic Theology, What? Materialism, or, a Spiritual Philosophy and Natural Religion. By GILES B. STEBBINS. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Agassiz and Spiritualism: Involving the Investigation of Harvard College Professors in 1857. By ALLEN PUTNAM, author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Spirit Works," "Natty a Spirit," etc. This sterling work combines in itself the characteristics of memoir, essay, and review. The matter considered is of vital interest to the cause of Spiritualism, and readers cannot fail of being pleased with the treatment which Mr. PUTMAN accords to it. Price, 25 cents.

Angel of Horeb. By M. B. CRAVEN. A Critical Review of Biblical Inspiration and Divinity. Paper, 10 cents.

Angel Voices from the Spirit-World. Essays taken indiscriminately from a large amount written under angel influence. By JAMES LAWRENCE, Dial and Transcribing Medium, and Reputed Author. Cloth, pp. 400; $1.00.

An Hour With the Angels; or, A Dream of the Spirit Life. By A. BRIGHAM. Price, 50 cents.

Answers to Charges in General Belief. By Mr. and Mrs A. E. NEWTON. Price, 15 cents.

Armageddon; or, the Overthrow of Romanism and Monarchy. By S. D. BALDWIN. Price, $1.50.

Baptism of Fire. An Autobiographical Sketch. By LUCIFER. Price, 30 cents.

Battle-Ground of the Spiritual Reformation. By S. B. BRITTAN, M.D. The latest and best defense of Spiritualism—at once a text-book and a vindication. An armory from which Spiritualists will draw weapons for years. Price, $2.

Better Views of Living; or, Life According to the Doctrin, "Whatever Is Is Right. By Dr. A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.

Beyond the Breakers. A Story of the Present Day. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. Finely illustrated. This story of village life in the West is, in its narrow and interior meaning, a profoundly spiritual story, through and by whose numberless incidents, scenes, characters, and narrations is illustrated the great truth of spirit-life and communion. Cloth, $1.50.

Beyond the Veil. Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. RANDOLPH, through the mediumship of Mrs. E. H. M'Dougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. Cloth, with steel-plate portrait of P. B. Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Biblical Chronology. By M. B. CRAVEN. Contrasting the Chronological Computations of the Hebrew and Septuagint Versions from Adam to Christ; Critical Essay on the Geographical Location of the Garden of Eden. Paper, 10 cents.

Bible in the Balance. A Text Book for Investigators. The Bible weighed in the balance with history, chronology, science, literature, and itself. With illustrations. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Cloth, $1.50

Bible Marvel-Workers, And the Power which helped or made them perform mighty works and utter inspired words; together with some personal traits and characteristics of prophets, apostles, and Jesus, or New Readings of "The Miracles." By ALLEN PUTNAM. Price, $1.25.

Book on Mediums; or, Guide for Mediums and Invocators. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $1.50.

Buddhism and Christianity Face to Face. By J. M. PEEBLES. A Discussion between a Buddhist priest and an English clergyman. Paper, 25 cents.

Chapters from the Bible of the Ages. Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS. Price, $1.50

Christianity Before the Time of Christ. By M. B. CRAVEN. With Quotations from the Ancient Sages and Fathers, showing the Historic Origin of Christian Worship. Paper, 25 cents.

Christ and the People. By A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.25.

Christ, the Corner-stone of Spiritualism. By J. M. PEEBLES. 10 cents.

Civil and Religious Persecutions in the State of New York. By THOMAS R. HAZARD. Paper, 10 cents.

Claims of Spiritualism. By a Medical Man. Price, 25 cents.

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Clock Struck One, and Christian Spiritualist. Revised and corrected. Being a Synopsis of the Investigations of Spirit Intercourse by an Episcopal Bishop, three Ministers, five Doctors and others, at Memphis, Tenn., in 1855. Also, the opinion of many eminent divines, living and dead, on the subject. Communications received from a number of persons recently. By the Rev. SAMUEL WATSON; of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Cloth, $1.00.

Clock Struck Three; Being a Review of "Clock Struck One," and reply to it: and Part Second, showing the Harmony between Christianity, Science, and Spiritualism. By Rev. SAMUEL WATSON. Cloth, $1.50.

Criticism of the Apostle Paul in Defense of Woman's Rights. By M. B. CRAVEN. Price, 25 cents.

Curious Life of P. B. Randolph. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Paper, 60 cents.

Danger Signals; An address on the Uses and Abuses of Modern Spiritualism. By MARY F. DAVIS. Paper, 15 cents.

Death in the Light of Harmonial Philosophy. By MARY F. DAVIS. A whole volume of Philosophical truth is condensed into this little pamphlet. Paper, 15 cents; cloth, 30 cents; cloth, gilt, 50 cents.

Debatable Land Between this World and the Next. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. The main object of this book is to afford conclusiv proof, aside from historical evidence, of immortality. Cloth, $2

Diakkaism; or, Clairvoyant Travels in Hades. By A. GARDNER, of London, Eng. Price, 10 cents.

Dialogues and Recitations, Adapted to the children's progressive lyceums, and other forms of useful and liberal instruction. By Mrs. LOUISA SHEPARD. Paper, 50 cents.

Dissertation on the Evidences of Divine Inspiration. Price, 25 cents.

Defense of Modern Spiritualism. By A. R. WALLACE, F.R.S., with American Preface by EPES SARGENT. Paper, 10 cts.

Discussion. Between Mr. E. V. WILSON, Spiritualist, and Elder T. M. HARRIS, Christian. Subject discussed—Resolved, That the Bible, King James's version, sustains the teachings, the phases, and the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. Price, 10 cents.

Divine Law of Cure. By W. F. EVANS. This treatis is the result of the author's six years of careful research, study, and experience, and makes its appearance at a time when the necessity of the age seems to demand a work of this nature. Cloth, $1.50.

Empire of the Mother over the Character and Destiny of the Race. By HENRY C. WRIGHT. Price, 75 cents.

Experiences of Judge J. W. Edmonds in Spirit-Life. Paper, 30 cents.

Experiences of Samuel Bowles, Late Editor Springfield Republican, in Spirit-Life, or Life as he now sees it. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING. Paper, 20 cents.

Fabulous Tendency of Ancient Authors. By M. B. CRAVEN. 10 cents.

Faiths, Facts, and Frauds of Religious History. By EMMA HARDINGE BRITTEN. Price, 75 cents.

Flashes of Light from the Spirit Land. Through the Mediumship of Mrs. J. H. CONANT. Compiled and arranged by ALLAN PUTNAM. Price, $1.50

Ghost Land; or, Researches into the Mysteries of Occult Spiritism. Illustrated in a series of autobiographical papers, with extracts from records of magical seances, etc. Translated by Mrs. EMMA H. BRITTEN. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50.

Gospel of Nature. By SHERMAN and LYON, authors of "The Hollow Globe." Price, $2.00.

Heaven and Hell; or, The Divine Justice Vindicated in the Plurality of Existences. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $2.00.

Higher Aspects of Spiritualism. By M. A. (OXON), author of "Psychography" and "Spirit-Identity." English edition. Blue cloth, in form with "Spirit-Identity" and "Psychography." Price, $1.25.

Hollow Globe; or, The World's Agitator and Reconciler. A Treatis on the Physical Conformation of the Earth. Presented through the organism of M. L. SHERMAN, M.D., and written by WM. F. LYON. Cloth, $2.00.

How to Magnetize; or, Magnetism and Clairvoyance. Paper, 25 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 28. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, July 14, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

TWELVE per cent of the suicides in England, and twenty-five per cent of those in Germany, are due to intemperance.

THE Pilgrim's church chime of bells, in St. Louis, has been silenced in the nighttime, by order of the courts, the judge expressing the opinion that "the striking of the church clock at night is a useless noise and nuisance."

A CRANK went into the Sunday-school at Unity church, Des Moines, on Sunday morning, with his arm ornamented with a live garter snake twined about it, and seated himself in the Bible class. The people were much put out at the introduction of the primitiv foe of mankind.

STEVE HOLCOMB, for many years a notorious Western gambler, has settled down as pastor of a mission church in Louisville. He draws from his own experience for warning illustrations to use in his sermons. Mr. Holcomb is not the first man who has devoted the best part of his life to the "devil" and given "God" the leavings.

THE new Spiritualistic wonder in Washington is a concert company of famous deceased vocalists, together with some celebrities not heretofore known as singers; the Empress Josephine, for instance, who entertain audiences twice a week. But there are drawbacks to the amusement. Nobody not a firm believer is admitted, and the artists, being compelled to sing through the throat of a medium, do not succeed as well as they did when alive.

THE new French law on religious and civil funerals provides that the last wishes of every individual as to ceremonies shall be fully respected. If the intention is disputed, the decision rests with the courts. The last will or other written testimony is only admissible evidence, and the bench must decide within twenty-four hours. Any minister of religion who disobeys the order of a court is liable to a year's imprisonment for the first offense, and to five for the second.

THERE is a very considerable effort at the present time to reconstruct the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. It is largely based on the assumption that matters that hav gone out of mind hav gone out of memory, and that what has been forgotten may be forgiven. The friends of Mr. Beecher, says the Philadelphia Record, are not wise in thus stirring up the embers of a shameful contention. The only mercy for Mr. Beecher in this world is the charity of silence. He might possibly speak for himself, but no other can speak for him.

THE Century believes that these suggestions are the very essence of metaphysical wit, and suggests their consideration to the Concord summer philosophers: Art is the joyful externalizing of inwardness. Beauty is the joyful internalization of outwardness. Poetry is the hampered soul leaping at verity. Truth is the so-ness of the as it were. Right is the awful yes-ness of the over-soul meditating on the how-ness of the thing. Society is the heterogeneous buying peace with homogeneity. A thing is simply an is-ness. Matter is is-ness possessed of somewhat-ness. Mind-is am-ness. Philosophy is the mind trying to find out its own little game.

THE Salvation Army in Paterson, N. J., has fallen into financial trouble. The warriors of the branch operating against Satan in that city were very happy because they thought they had wealthy friends. Some of these friends furnished money to buy and equip Salvation Barracks. But instead of giving the money, they only loaned it. The loan is now overdue, and the Salvationists are unable to meet it. The wealthy friends are not so friendly as they were, and hav instituted a suit against the Army for the amount of the loan. They hav attached the property on which the money was expended. It is a sad blow to salvation in Paterson.

PROF. HUXLEY, in an address at the International Fisheries Exhibition, pointed out that an acre of good fishing ground will yield more food in a week than an acre of the best land will yield in a year. Still more striking was his picture of the moving "mountain of cod," 120 to 130 feet in hight, which for two months in every year moves westward and southward past the Norwegian coast. Every square mile of this colossal column of fish contains 120,000,000, consuming every week, when on short rations, no fewer than 840,000,000 of herrings. The whole catch of the Norwegian fisheries never exceeds in a year more than half a square mile of this "cod mountain" and one week's supply of the herrings needed to keep that area of cod from starving.

THE Rev. Mr. Kramer is pastor of the "Church of the Blessed Hope," in Brooklyn. He is preaching a course of sermons to prove that the wicked are annihilated at death, just like dogs or horses; and that it is only for the believers in Christ that there is any hope of immortality. Some of his hearers beset him with written questions, asking, for instance, what will become of the Jews, who do not believe in Christ. Some want to know the destiny of infants who die before knowing enough to hav an understanding of what it is to believe in Christ. Others ask about those who hav been led astray by wicked companions, and are, to all human appearances, going to the bad. If Mr. Kramer answers these questions successfully he will do better than any of his brethren hav ever done.

NORTH CAROLINA does not seem to be a particularly arable field for Mormon missionaries. A North Carolina farmer is a man of but few extremely clear and positiv ideas, and it does not meet his views that his wife should be baptized into the church of the Latter Day Saints, or sealed to a Mormon tramp. A dispatch from Charlotte informs us that "the leading paper of the state" strongly recommends him to use a shotgun for the expression of his resentment, a recommendation which seems superfluous. Mark Twain has a story of the missionary who was boiled and eaten by savages, who explained "to friends of his that went down there to fetch away his things" that they "had tried missionaries every way but biled, and never could get any good of them." As a deterrent to evangelical labors, however, the imminence of a North Carolinian with a shotgun promises to be more effectiv than the remote chance of a Fiji with a soup-kettle.

A MAN who can sit in his pew in church when the collection plate is being passed, with his eyes riveted on the ceiling and seeming to be engaged in silent prayer, while his fingers are in his pockets squeezing a nickel till the finger nails are bloodshot, has mistaken his calling. Such a man should rope in suckers to play poker. The most successful poker player we ever knew was a truly good man who acted as usher in a church. He could disguise his feelings so you couldn't tell whether he had a "sequence" or a pair of deuces. He would draw to a pair of queens and get two more, and then he would throw his hand in disgust, but finally, as he thought it over, he would say that he guessed he would simply chip so he wouldn't lose his blind, and somebody would bet $10 to raise him out, and he would see and raise and come back with a roll and scare the man out of his boots. He was very successful, but finally they brought charges against him for heresy, and he went West with his savings, and now owns a bonanza farm in Dakota.—Burlington Hawkeye.

THE editor of the Sewing Machine Journal takes this religio-economic view of how progress may be effected in Mexico: "The Mexican government is showing its wisdom as well as increasing its own stability by doing all in its power to push ahead the work of interior development. Rebellion and revolution can be best prevented by giving all the people plenty of profitable employment, and this is what is being done by the present movement in Mexico. One railroad through that country has done more to civilize, enlighten, and increase the prosperity of the people than all the theological instruction they hav received from the time of Cortez to the present day; and the agents of our merchants and manufacturers are more potent missionaries than those sent out by our many powerful evangelizing societies. Yankee plows preach a more effectiv gospel than that which has prevailed for nearly four centuries; and the low sweet music of a Yankee sewing machine will put more genuin religious joy into the heart of a Mexican maiden than all the convent hymns that hav been sung in the last four hundred years."

THE practice of Dr. Bratenburg, of Bay City, Mich., is deemed irregular, and he is under arrest. He assured the mother of a sick child that she had been bewitched before its birth, and that the spell, descending to the little one, could not be removed for less than seven dollars. After getting the money he wrote on a sheet of paper, folded it triangularly, inclosed it in a bag, and hung it to the child's neck. Death ensued in consequence of medical neglect. The manuscript was found to be as follows: "William John Warner will regain his health in the name of the Lord, God Father, God Son, and God Holy Ghost. Amen. † † ‡ I. N. † N. I. † Beelzebub and all the bad spirits, I forbid you my bedstead, in the name of God, my house, and also my yard; I forbid you, in the name of the Holy Timothy, my blood and flesh, my body and soul, I forbid you as many times as we hav nailholes in my house, as many times as drops in the water, as many times as leaves on the trees, as many times as stars in the heavens, until the last day of judgment arrives, and Mary, the mother of God, gives birth to her second son. In the name of God Father, God Son, and God Holy Ghost. Amen. Thou arch fiend, thou hast taken hold of our William John. Go hence, I beseech you, for the sake of the five wounds of Jesus Christ, get out this very hour."

SOME of the nice children on Commonwealth avenue recently proposed to surprise their parents with a dramatic performance, with the distinct understanding that no adult was to witness a rehearsal or to ask about the nature of the play, written by a young miss of ten years, who was to assume the role of heroin, assisted by a lad of the same age. On the night of the performance, the parents of the children assembled in the front drawing-room of one of the large residences and waited for the drawing aside of the portieres with commendable patience. The first scene represented the wedding of the hero and heroin and the departure of the former for the wilds of the West, where he was to reap his fortune in raising cattle and mining. This went off finely, and the portieres were closed with a loud burst of applause. A lapse of ten years was supposed to hav passed between the first and second acts, and when the act commenced the young husband had returned, and his wife, not looking a day older, greeted her spouse in a formal manner and even asked him to remain and dine with her, which he consented to do. While seated at the table eating ice-cream, the husband told how he had toiled for wealth and acquired millions, all for the sake of the dear wife he had left behind. This had such an effect on the matron that she finished the ice-cream, sighed to think there was no more on the table, and then addressed her husband, speaking earnestly and firmly: "You hav done well," she said, "but while you hav been at work I hav not been idle. You shall see what I hav accomplished." She touched a bell and a white-capped bonne entered the room, leading a toddling infant a year old and followed by nine others of various ages, one for each year of married life. The actors to this day do not understand why the play was interrupted by shouts of laughter and applause from the fathers and mothers who were present. At any rate, they say the play was a success, but the parents think is a little Frenchy in construction and plot.—Boston Globe.

News of the Week.

FORTY-THREE persons died of yellow fever in Havana last week.

CHOLERA still rages in Egypt. It is hoped that the epidemic may be confined to that country.

THE Rev. Lewis Bundick, of Brooklyn, is under bail for the seduction of a young woman of his flock.

THE striking of some unpaid Vermont miners last week necessitated the calling out of the militia.

THE House of Commons on the 6th rejected a motion in favor of woman suffrage by a vote of 130 to 114.

PURCELL, the defaulting archbishop, of Ohio, is dead. His debts remain unpaid, and the matter is still in the courts.

ONE hundred and fifty persons were drowned at the launching of a steamer on the river Clyde, Scotland, last week.

ARCHBISHOP LYNCH, of Toronto, has issued a pastoral demanding payment of Peter's pence in the see under his control.

THE duke of Marborough is dead. He was distinguished chiefly as a religious zealot, a wife beater, and a tyrannical landlord.

THE glorious Fourth was observed after the usual noisy manner throughout the country. It was one of the hottest Fourth's ever celebrated.

THE Rev. Father Kenny, a Catholic priest, is sued for $2,000, which it is alleged he appropriated to his own use, though it was given him to hold in trust for another purpose.

A CORPS of cadets from the Military Institute of Virginia, on the 4th, presented Mayor Edson, of New York, with a flag captured by the rebels from a northern regiment in 1863.

TEN thousand iron workers in London put out their fires and struck for higher pay on the 5th. Since that time the workmen hav become violent and hav damaged the buildings and machinery to a considerable extent.

NEW YORK was afflicted with uncomfortably hot weather last week. The deaths in the city on some days numbered over two hundred, mainly among children under five years of age. A cooler wave struck the city on Sunday.

EDITOR ELAM, of the Richmond, Va., Whig, who was shot in the thigh in a duel with Editor Bierne, of the State, is recovering from his wound. Neither of the parties has been arrested, although dueling is a felony under the laws of Virginia.

THE committee on emigration in New York are sending back to Ireland the pauper emigrants whom the British government has "assisted" to these shores. The House of Commons has voted not to send any more of this class to the United States.

A ROMANTIC couple of Cleveland, O., were married last week in a balloon 150 feet from the earth. After the ceremony, the justice was landed, and the balloon sailed away, reaching an altitude of a mile and a half, and then settling to the ground in safety.

THE editor of a Texas funny paper last week created considerable excitement in New York, and got a good deal of free advertising, by allowing the report to spread that he had challenged and fought a duel with a sculptor of this city. The affair now turns out to be a hoax.

A CURIOUS lawsuit has grown out of the Tewksbury Massachusetts almshouse investigation. A tanned human skin was introduced as evidence by Gov. Butler, which was the property of a boot and shoe firm. The governor has expressed a determination to bury the skin when he is through with it, and the leather merchants want it back again. They value it at about $3,000. Hence the suit.

Communications.

Reply to Mr. Wakeman.

LOGOS AND COSMOS.

Thaddeus B. Wakeman has seen fit to intervene in the discussion between Mr. Putnam and myself on the nature of science. He is welcome, if he will permit me to tell him some hard truths. First, then, his paper is hardly up to the demand. The main points in the discussion, as to which his authority, or past utterances, hav been invoked, he has, perhaps wisely, ignored or avoided; and has fallen back upon a restatement of fundamental truisms, from his point of view, with which those of us who know Mr. Wakeman are very familiar—but which, nevertheless, need to be revised, and will receive my attention in due time.

Incidentally, in replying to Mr. Putnam, I showed that Mr. Wakeman, in his recent definition of all abstract science, mathematics included, as mere "poetry," had cut off the limb of science upon which he himself stands; or as to any connection he has with science. In his present paper in this same discussion, where this has been shown, he diplomatically ignores this little demonstration. Again, he was called on to define metaphysics; he ignores and evades that demand also. On the whole, then, his paper, such as it is, is mal à propos, and, for him, rather common-place. I shall hav to assume that he abides by his recent fantastic definition and extension of the term poetry, which Mr. Putnam has unfortunately adopted, and that he accords with Mr. Putnam's definition of metaphysics; as by these assumptions only, when the deponent sayeth not, can we keep up the picturesqueness of the tournament. I shall therefore lump my antagonists, Putnam and Wakeman, somewhat in one, and deal with them in solidarity.

Still they are very different. Mr. Putnam reminds us of a young and dashing cavalry officer, rushing, and leading his squad on to the most dangerous positions, reckless of consequences, and with break-neck audacity, as likely perhaps to be wrong as right; but whether wrong or right, commanding our genuin admiration for his splendid military bearing and dash. One givs orders instinctivly to capture him alive at all hazards, and to save him for the future service of the truth, instead of blowing up the ground he is standing upon, and sending him and his to everlasting smash as one might, perhaps, readily do.

Mr. Wakeman, on the other hand, reminds us of a cautious old elephant who fancies that he has caught a slight sound of cracking in the bridge, and who quietly turns away and refuses to trust his ponderous, Jumbo-like body on any such premises. Here, also, we unconsciously yield a certain meed of admiration to the shrewd, instinctiv sagacity of the huge "heavy-weight" in withdrawing from an experience in which his mere stolid ponderosity might prove a serious disadvantage. Mr. Wakeman is a judicious temporizer and opportunist. Both he and Jumbo feel it due to their acknowledged greatness to be careful of themselvs, when they sniff danger in the surroundings. "Discretion is the better part of valor."

But with all my admiration for my two distinguished opponents, and with all my proverbial long-suffering and patience, I cannot afford to let them off scot-free. They hav done, not me chiefly, but the truth, a bad service by their false estimate of the true relationship of "Positivism" and Universology; and it is incumbent on me to put them right, even at some risk of their getting hurt.

First, then, as to what Mr. Wakeman does say—keeping over, along with a word additional for Mr. Putnam, what he (Mr. Wakeman) fails to say here and now, but has said on other occasions and for which I hold him mainly responsible when Mr. Putnam repeats his errors:

Mr. Wakeman now says: "There are three fundamental solutions of the world, and answers may be given from each solution to these questions. The question for this age is, Which must be accepted as true? The theologian says the ultimate test of knowledge is the revealed will of God, the creator of the world, who knew all about it when he made it. The metaphysicians say that the logos ('The Word') which was with God, and was God, and remaineth ever the true logic of the universe, is the test. The scientist says the agreement of our subjectiv ideas with the external, or objectiv, order of the world around us, is the test of truth and the substance and foundation of what we are to regard as knowledge."

To this he adds: "Mr. Andrews is the chiefest living incarnation of the logos or logic of the universe."

Mr. Wakeman knows, or should know, that this statement is no fair or full representation of my position, and the verbal compliment at the end will not deter me in the least from unearthing its fallacy. First, then, nobody as yet in this discussion represents what Mr. Wakeman calls the theological solution. Just as little is anybody representing the logos, the logic of the universe, as the sole scientific test; but what I am representing is, precisely, "the agreement of our subjectiv ideas with the external, or objectiv, order of the world around us, as the test of truth and the substance and foundation of what we are to regard as knowledge." But in order that we may arrive at a knowledge of this "agreement of our subjectiv ideas with the external, or objectiv, order of the world around us," I insist on the study and discovery of the whole rational system of "our subjectiv ideas," as well as upon the study of "the objectiv order of universe;" the study and discovery of the Logos as well as the study and discovery of the Cosmos; in order that we may hav before us in distinctness of detail the two things which are to be compared, or the two terms of the problem to be solved—whereas, my opponents insist upon throwing out one of them, while they still talk of the comparison and "agreement" of the two.

Mr. Wakeman knows, or should know, therefore, if I am, as he says, "the chiefest living incarnation of the logos or logic of the universe," that that is only a third part of me; that I am a broad, scientophilosophic investigator of the Cosmos, in the same sense precisely as he is; and that, then, I am, beyond and above all, an Integralist, who compares, finds the agreement between, and begrips in dynamic unity, from the broadest generalizations to the minutest particulars (as to method), the Logos and the Cosmos, in the supreme harmony of this rare and higher philosophy—which is essentially and distinctivly new in the world.

Mr. Wakeman knows, or should know, to the contrary of his method of classifying me, that he, Mr. Putnam, and myself are, all of us, scientists and Positivists, in the broad, inclusiv sense of these terms, and under his own definitions; that the differences between us three all lie within the scientific and positiv domain; and that any effort to crowd me into the category of a mere speculativ thinker is unfair and unauthorized by the facts. I venture to affirm that I hav done a hundred times more in the actual comparison, and in establishing the "agreement" in a strict sense, of "our subjectiv ideas with the external or objectiv order of the world around us," i. e., in actual scientific experiment and objectiv test, than Mr. Wakeman has ever attempted or accomplished. This has been, in fact, the whole labor of my life, and is the exact point of difference between me and the authors of "the 500,000 volumes" written on metaphysical or philosophical subjects, with which writers or class of thinkers Mr. Wakeman always, either blunderingly or disingenuously, strives to confound me. It is true, nevertheless, that both he and myself are compelled to take the great mass of the objectiv facts which we classify from the more physical labors of the direct investigators in that sphere.

I stand, then, precisely on the ground defined by Mr. Wakeman, and he will in the end find himself unable to crowd me off from it. I simply stand there with more persistency and incisivness than he does. I accept and proclaim, along with him, the ultimate scientific and practical test of knowledge to be as given in his own words, and I am obliged to him for the clearness and precision of that definition.

What, then, again, is the crucial difference between Mr. Wakeman and me at this point? or, between ordinary Positivism and the Universological school? It is just here: I ask the close attention of the reader to it, as this is the core of the whole matter. Wakeman and Putnam and that school, laying down the definition, are infinitly less faithful to it than the Universologists, who are, in fact, the first to hav discovered that there is a precise agreement between the two spheres, throughout an infinity of detail, and with an immensity of exact system heretofore entirely undreamed of. Analogy, not superficial, poetic analogy, but exact scientific analogy—a new and radical discovery in science—is the guide to a comprehension of that agreement; and that analogy is the field of Universology.

My opponents define metaphysics to be the same as Idealism, and this the same as poetry, or the mind-made factor of mental conceptions, and this again as the subjectiv half of our knowledge. They then proceed to say that metaphysics, idealism, etc., must be "ruled out of science;" reducing all knowledge to "objectiv" or "material sensation;" at least Mr. Putnam does so. I do not know that any one else has pushed the absurdity quite so far. Now let us compare these two statements.

1. "The scientist says the agreement of our subjectiv ideas with the external or objectiv order of the world around us is the test of truth and the substance and foundation of what we are to regard as knowledge" (Wakeman).

2. The subjectiv half of this coupling of elements must be ruled completely out of the realm of truth, of knowledge, and of science, as it is merely man-made stuff, poetry, unreliable folderol, having in it no truth, being no part of knowledge (Wakeman plus Putnam).

That is to say, (1) That two things are to be compared and held in relation with each other, in order to get at truth, the substance and foundation of knowledge. (2) That one of these two things is to be wholly rejected or discarded from the inquiry, and that all truth and knowledge are to be sought for, because they are solely contained, in the other and single remaining thing.

Now the first part of the difference between that sort of Positivism and Universology is that the Universologists, having in good faith planted themselvs upon the first one of these two propositions, which is peculiarly their own fundamental doctrin, refuse to stultify themselvs by adopting the second and contradictory one (except under the modification that the two kinds of knowledge are entirely opposit).

But the second and major part of the difference in question is that Universology, by rigorously adhering to the first of these two propositions, has made an immense and astounding series of discoveries confirming and illustrating the proposition, and exhibiting the analogy or "agreement" of the two spheres of knowledge, which discoveries it is struggling to get the opportunity to teach on the large and popular scale; which the grandeur of the new facts so revealed, and of the new views, demands. This opportunity, with an obstinate resistance worthy of the the most conservativ times and places, the ordinary Positivists, headed by Mr. Wakeman, hav seemed determined should not be given. For twelve years, especially in the Liberal Club, and somewhat elsewhere, Mr. Wakeman has been my devil in this behalf, i. e., my adversary. His own really great ability, his personal magnetism, his own services to science in the field of classification, and other circumstances hav placed him rightly at the head of the rising, popular, and influential school of Positivists, so called, and, to an extent, rightly so called. His influence and sway over the minds of the younger and less prominent members of that powerful and activ school of thinkers hav been deservedly great, if not supreme. He has done much to educate them, and has naturally and properly commanded a large share of their confidence and devotion. All of this is good so far; but, of course, if he blunders, then the force of that influence is proportionately disastrous; and in this particular matter, in the presence of this new, great, and overshadowing series of discoveries, directly on his own premises, he has blundered egregiously. The last thing that men tolerate is an improvement on their own patents. The last men to appreciate steam navigation were the captains of the sailing vessels. A new Positivism that was more positiv than "Positivism" itself was something that there was no place for in Mr. Wakeman's scheme of the universe. He denied the possibility of a universal science. He denied that "universe" meant the universe, and tried to make "world" the more comprehensiv term. He dubbed the whole thing at once by the, with him, opprobrious term, "Metaphysics," and now, of late, "poetry" (cutting off his own branch of the scientific tree, inadvertently), and has resorted to every means to discredit the new and immense pretension. He knew all about me, a priori; he labeled me, and stuck a pin through me, as a species of bug with which he was entirely familiar, and fastened me upon the wall, to his own satisfaction and that of his large and truly noble troop of followers; a little too credulous, merely, on this occasion, of their leader's infallibility.

I was drifted among these Positivists, as being the nearest of kith and kin of any class of thinkers and workers in the world, and was peremptorily rejected by them. I might quote scripture: "He came to his own and his own received him not." Universology should hav been taken up at once as a new and measureless expansion of Positivism. That it was not so was due mainly to the influence of Mr. Wakeman. I came to that parish, which was rightly my parish, with the credentials of a schoolmaster in my pocket, with something new to teach; but there was an insurrection among the big boys to keep the teacher out of the school-house; and Mr. Wakeman was the biggest of the big boys, who planted himself in the doorway to keep the schoolmaster out.

But the times of that darkness are passing away. Better thoughts are coming, even to the mind of Mr. Wakeman. Universology is rapidly getting itself comprehended and accepted, in a small way first, in preparation for a rapid comprehension and acceptance in the world at large. I allude to the "late unpleasantness" only to make clear the line of difference between ordinary Positivism and the Neo-Positivism of Universology.

The slightest reflection will show, if the problem be to adjust the relationship between a physical and a metaphysical world, that the party which proposes to or actually does reject all study of the metaphysical or mental world, must be wrong; and that the party which studies that world most thoroughly—not, as its opponents would slanderously affirm, to remain there and never get out—but for the very purpose of making that comparison, while at the same time studying the objectiv world, with equal exhaustivness, and then which actually makes the comparison, must be right.

Mr. Wakeman, with a true instinct of going wrong, which has consistently haunted him all along, on this subject has quoted approvingly from Mr. Putnam's last article just those parts in which, as I hav shown in my reply to him, Mr. Putnam is fatally in error, and has omitted all mention of those splendid statements of Mr. Putnam's, in which he is so eminently in the right, and by which he so fully redeems himself. What Mr. Wakeman calls "this admirable statement of the question by Mr. Putnam," so far as it involves my doctrins or views, is what I expressly repudiate; and a man should hav the privilege of stating his own position.

Mr. Wakeman then adds: "Mr. Putnam is therefore correct in basing modern science and philosophy upon our knowledge of this objectiv order of the world around us. The test of truth is the agreement of our ideas with that order; that is, the agreement of thoughts with things, facts, and processes around and within us. The agreement of ideas with ideas may make analogy or poetry, but not science or verified truth."

With all this I accord heartily; but two points must be added which are all-important. The first is that the discussion between Mr. Putnam and myself strikes deeper, and inquires how we obtain or arrive at our knowledge of this objectiv order. I say, by the dynamic unity of sense-impression and rational inference. He says so too at times, and that "there is no priority;" and I simply try to hold him consistently to that statement. But further, I say that our knowledge of this objectiv order, as well as of the subjectiv order, is, therefore, of two kinds, and that the kind not derived through the senses is the especially scientific element. Sensation as a factor of knowledge is of a still more limited range than as I hav heretofore spoken of it. It is not true, as averred by Mr. Wakeman, that "we know of the external world only as the senses reveal it to us." In the very next sentence he says, "The eye brings more than it sees." What is this more of knowledge which the physical sight not brings, but of which it is the occasion? This more is rational inference. We hav, therefore, two kinds of knowledge, one Observational, by the mere use of the senses, the other Inferential, by the use of the reason—Observational knowledge and Inferential knowledge. Now I am saying that mere observational knowledge is naturismal, and that inferential knowledge is scientismal. Still further, then, I hav now to say that mere observation, or sense-impression, givs no knowledge of any world permanent in time. Our senses testify to us purely and simply of that which is impressing the senses at the present instant. We hav no knowledge whatsoever—not the slightest—of any fact of yesterday, or of any fact of to-morrow, through the senses, merely. "If the whole race of man should pass away with a comet's stroke or other fatality," asks Mr. Wakeman, "can we avoid the conclusion that the world (the not I) would still exist?" So be it; but the "conclusion!" we do not "conclude" with our eyes and ears—not in any way with our senses. Conclusion is a culmination of a mental process, and is a term of logic, or the science of reasoning, and not a sensuous expression at all. Your external world, then, depends as much for its existence—to us—on the logos as the logos on it; and, as having any continuance in time, wholly so. We know absolutely nothing of this great material world as having existed yesterday, a thousand or ten million years ago—through the senses alone. We sense the immediate instantaneous impression. We then remember, and then reason. The compound resultant of all these mental processes in a combined process is, then, what we believe; and if we hav eliminated all possible sources of doubt, it becomes and remains what we know.

The other comment here is on the portion of Mr. Wakeman's statement now under consideration in which he says, "The agreement of ideas with ideas may make analogies or poetry, but not verified truth." Well, but what shall we call the agreement of ideas in detail, not with other mere ideas, but with objectiv facts in detail, as, for instance, arithmetical count (ideal) with the series of real objects counted. Are not the two series analogous or repetitory, in all their items or steps? It is this sort of analogy which Universology deals with, and in respect to which it reveals a new field of science. It is this kind of analogy of which Mr. Wakeman takes no heed, going off on superficial or false analogies or confounding the two kinds with each other. It is this true and fundamental analogy, directly within the scope of Mr. Wakeman's own definition of science, and of what he says the scientist givs as his solution of the universe, which the Universologists ask Mr. Wakeman to begin to comprehend and believe in. It is this true scientific verity of analogy which renders a science of mathematics—the discovery and demonstration of congruity between an ideal series and a real series of objects—possible. It is this same kind of analogy pushed further which reveals the new and wonderful fact of the absolute unity of scientific law throughout the universe.

The axiomatic elements of mathematics, based on the pure reason, are the most solid, secure, and inflexible, the most truly positiv portion of human knowledge; while the deliverances to our consciousness of the outer mere facts of existence, unconnected and at random, through the senses, are the fluctuating, evanescent, contradictory, and uncertain portion of knowledge—the least positiv portion—a reliance on which, to the exclusion of reason, Comte himself, the founder of this pseudo-Positivism, has, even if it were by mere blunder, or with no full apprehension of the fact, still truly said, is allied with idiocy. It is the most fatal inversion of the true philosophic idea. Comte is also grandly right when he talks of the science of mathematics as Abstract Cosmology; and those of his followers are wholly wrong who suppose that great science to be purely subjectiv.

True, rational knowledge is knowledge with an if, as Mr. Putnam has said. Good that it is so. The salvation of the human intellect is in that fact. Primitiv, first-blush, intuitiv, supposed knowledge, accepted without an if, or a doubt, without skepticism or re-investigation, is dogmatism and irrationality, and the most dangerous of errors; which has cost the world thousands of years to begin to recover from, by inaugurating the Supremacy of Skepticism, Reason, and that Higher Knowledge which survives the intervention and test of the If, and all the ifs and buts which can be urged against it.

Knowledge, claimed to be such, without the if, before and apart from any if, not tested by being brought face to face with every possible if and but, is mere seeming, and this mere seeming is the unscientific (the naturismal) element in Science, while reason, with its exhaustion of all the possible ifs and buts, is the Scientific (technically the Scientismal) element.

How then about the "poetry" idea which Mr. Wakeman has begotten and forgotten, but with which he has unfortunately inoculated Mr. Putnam? This is part of the same thing. The if is sub-position (a putting under), and sub-position is sup-position. The human mind, dealing with its first crude sense-impressions, puts under them, infers (brings in) and supposes (sub-poses, or puts under) something within, back of, or beneath them, as their ground or support, or for less serious purposes.

These sup-positions are of two directly opposit kinds. First, they are playful or imaginativ, resorted to wantonly, or for the mere pleasure of indulging in them—and this is Poetry. When the mind imagins the connection of objects, as a man's head and trunk united with the body of a horse, as in the centaur, a relationship in nowise justified by anything in nature, and merely as a kitten plays with its own tail—that is Poetry; for it may rightly be said to be something made by the mind (poiein, to make); it is the supposition of what might be; but it is not supposed even to refer to what is. It ceases to be poetry the instant it is believed in as fact, or as comporting with the truth of the external world.

The second sort of sup-positions, under-puttings, under-pinnings, or rational groundings, of our common, first-blush seemings of knowledge are, on the other hand, serious and severe—the most earnest workings which the human mind ever has undertaken, or ever can, undertake; the very most opposit pole of mental process from poetry or mere fancy. It is here that lie, as the bottom nuggets of truth, and in the same "pocket," the axioms of mathematics, the syllogistic convincingness of logic, and the ultra analytical analogies of Universology. To swoop these opposit extremes of mentation in under the one designation of "poetry" is the wildest departure from rational thinking.

In fine, however, despite all differences, the way is fairly opened for the reconciliation and co-operation of the Positivists and the Neo-Positivists, through the door of the remaining statement which I shall take the space to quote from Mr. Wakeman. "It must," he says, "be frankly admitted that the subjectiv interpretation [the predominance of the logos] is, after all, the only interpretation of that order [the external and objectiv world] possible to man." While Mr. Wakeman, doubtless, comes far short, as yet, of understanding the full force of this concession as I do, there is in it ample ground for beginning the joint occupation of the new fields of scientific research, which the statement logically implies.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

A Good Poem.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I send herewith a "Truth Seeker's Dilemma." If worthy a place in your paper, please publish it. It was not written expressly for publication, but the author livs near me, and I will bear the responsibility,

J. E. BECKLEY.

Nunda, June 30, 1883.

A TRUTH SEEKER'S DILEMMA.

Thou great unbounded infinit, thou great unbounded whole,
Thy body is the universe, thy spirit is its soul.

If thou dost fill immensity, if thou art all in all,
If thou wast here before I was, then I'm not here at all.

How could I liv outside of thee if thou fillest earth and air?
There surely is no place for me outside of everywhere.

If thou art God, and thou dost fill immensity of space,
Then I am God, think as you will, or else I hav no place.

And if I am not part of God, and if I am not here,
I surely could commit no sin, for then I'd be somewhere.

So I must be a part of God, no matter if it's small,
And if I am not part of God, there is no God at all. S. A.

"A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD;" 4 volumes, cloth, $6.50; leather, $9.50; morocco, gilt edges, $10.50

"Death Ends All."

So says our learned, worthy, and much-esteemed Elmina. But why make this bold assertion? Does our dear sister perfectly understand all powers and possibilities of the universe? Is there no appeal from this important, infallible diction? Does this assertion prove immortality to be impossible? Is this question no longer an open one? Is Truth to be confronted, confuted, and silenced by a simple assertion? Many of the most learned and progressiv minds and profound thinkers hav quite a different opinion.

Though death will end this transient life of pain,
Who can be sure man may not liv again?
Would it be wisdom in mankind to pause,
Not understanding all Dame Nature's laws?
If nature givs life, mind, and reason here,
Why not suffice in ultramundane sphere?

If you deny the existence of unfleshed spirits, how can you account for the facts (in all ages and all countries) of innumerable allegorical dreams, presentiments, warnings, double-dreaming trance, wraiths, apparitions, troubled spirits, haunted houses, spectral lights, and apparitions attached to certain families, as recorded in all history? Can all these be accounted for by spectral illusion? Is not one case of a departed spirit absolutely communicating information more reliable authority than a thousand assertions to the contrary?

I once asked a Materialist how he could account for the fulfilment of dreams, if there were no spirit beings to giv man warning of impending danger. The following was his reply: "I had finished painting a clock-face on three sides of a church steeple, and the same evening I made a scaffolding, so as to finish work on the following day. During the night I dreamt that when I stepped on the staging it gave way, and I fell on the rocks below. The dream made so strong an impression that in the morning I examined the staging before venturing upon it, and, to my great surprise, I found that the large spike at the corner I would hav stepped on was broken off."

Thus the dream saved the Materialist painter's life. The following is a letter from St. Augustine to his friend Evadius (Epistola, 159, Antwerp edition):

"I will relate to you a circumstance which will furnish you matter for reflection. Our brother Sennadius, well known to us all as an eminent physician, and whom we especially love, who is now at Carthage, after having distinguished himself at Rome, and with whose piety and activ benevolence you are well acquainted, could yet, nevertheless, as he has lately narrated to us, by no means bring himself to believe in a life after death. One night there appeared to him in a dream a radiant youth of noble aspect, who bade him follow him; and as Sennadius obeyed, they came to a city where, on the right side, he heard a chorus of the most heavenly voices. As he desired to know whence this divine harmony proceeded, the youth told him that what he heard were the songs of the blessed; whereupon he awoke and thought no more of his dream than people usually do. On another night, however, behold! the youth appears to him again, and asks him if he knows him; and Sennadius related to him all the particulars of his former dream, which he well remembered. 'Then,' said the youth, 'was it while sleeping or waking that you saw these things?' 'I was sleeping,' answered Sennadius. 'You are right,' returned the youth; 'it was in your sleep that you saw these things; and know, O Sennadius, that what you see now is also in your sleep. But if this be so, tell me where then is your body?' 'In my bed-chamber,' answered Sennadius. 'But know you not,' continued the stranger, 'that your eyes, which form a part of your body, are closed and inactiv?' 'I know it,' answered he. 'Then,' said the youth, 'with what eyes see you these things?' And Sennadius could not answer him; and, as he hesitated, the youth spoke again, and explained to him the motiv of his questions. 'As the eyes of your body,' said he, 'which lies now on your bed and sleeps are inactiv and useless, and yet you hav eyes wherewith you see me and these things which I hav shown unto you, so, after death, when these bodily organs fail you, you will hav a vital power whereby you will liv, and a sensitiv faculty whereby you will perceive.' 'And thus,' said this excellent man, 'was I convinced, and all doubts removed.'"

In dreams and in the Spiritual philosophy there are deep and holy wells of truth to be discovered in these neglected by-paths of nature by those who seek them, from which they may draw the purest consolations for the present, the most ennobling hopes for the future, and valuable aid in penetrating through the latter into the spiritual parts of the scriptures.

Truth is what all mankind desire to know
To find the truth, alas! where shall we go?

Not to Elmina, assuredly, so far as proof be given of non-immortality of non-identity.

I confess it makes me sorrowful when I hear Elmina denying her birthright, immortality, and I can not but grieve to think how closely her clay must be wrapped about her, and how the external and sensuous life must hav prevailed over the internal, when no gleam from within breaks through to show her that immortality is "truth." But she "does knock many of the old Jew-book superstions in the head," and there she "does good work." "We shall say Amen to the following lines:"

The laws of nature never yet did fail.
Great is this truth, and will at last prevail.
The laws of nature let us now obey—
While hastening to a sure immortal day.

E. N. KINGSLEY.

A PITTSBURGH minister on Sunday referred to daily papers as "sewer pipes," whereupon they all felt that in that capacity they were obliged to publish his sermon, and did so.—Boston Post

Why People Do Not Go to Church.

From the North American Review.

It is a generally admitted fact that in these days only a small proportion, even of intelligent and eminently respectable people, are regular attendants upon religious services on Sunday. It is believed, and frequently deplored, that the proportion is diminishing year by year. The increasing aversion of people who cannot be called bad or depraved to church attendance is generally ascribed to the spread of unbelief; but this does not wholly account for it.

The world has, indeed, been moving very rapidly during the last generation, and theology, which used to be in the van of human thought, and in some measure to lead in human progress, has fallen to the rear, and is in imminent danger of being left altogether. The results of scientific and philosophic inquiry hav widely diffused an intelligent common sense, which will not accept teachings that were once potent over the human mind. People do not like to be fed on the dry leaves of an antiquated theology in which the sap of life has ceased to flow. Dogmas which used to keep the superstitious mind in subjection, and rule the lives of men through their hopes and fears, hav lost their power, because enlightened thought declares that there can be no such terrific chances in another life as the world used to believe.

It is useless to fight against the tendencies of the age, or to deplore them as evil, for they are in the line of human progress. Men are better and not worse than in the olden time, and yet they believe less in the supernatural and the unprovable. The majority of intelligent and well-meaning people, whose purposes are good, whose aspirations are high, whose conduct is upright, do not and cannot believe what the churches teach, and they are weary of its reiteration. In fact, the keener their apprehension, the clearer their mental vision, the stronger their powers of thought, and the broader their intellectual culture, the less willing or able are they to stoop to the yoke of belief which the church imposes. It is not the daring Atheist or the reckless evil-doer that is now chiefly found in the ranks of non-attendants at church, but the sober citizen and the father of a family, who is loyal to his convictions and faithful to his duty.

Why does he not go? Why should he go? It is for the church to attract, and it repels. It proscribes thought and free inquiry. It cramps the brains of its ministers until it is only the intellectual lightweights that seek its service. The mediocrities of the seminaries go to the pulpit. They offer nothing for the mental or moral digestion and nutrition of healthy men. They minister chiefly to the superstitious, the narrow and the morbid, and the masculin sex is disappearing from among their followers.

There is no doubt that people are repelled from the pews because the pulpit is behind the age. The notion can no longer be kept up that "unbelievers" are bad. It has to be admitted that they are, as a rule, intelligent, earnest, and altogether honest. They still cherish the hope, at least, of a future life, and they certainly hav no "enmity toward God." They want to lead decent and well-ordered lives, and bring their children up with good principles and high ideals. They recognize the needs of their higher nature, and hav no objection to its being called a spiritual nature. They recognize the value of appeals to the purer feelings and the loftier sentiments. They know that through the eye and ear the soul may be reached and benefited. They would be glad on their weekly day of rest to subject themselvs to elevating influences, and bring their families within them. Having this want, and recognizing this need, they still keep away from the "sanctuary," partly because it so inadequately provides for them. They do not find there satisfaction for the soul, and modern society, dominated by an antiquated ecclesiasticism, is failing to provide for the spiritual wants of man. It is, therefore, failing to arrest the working of those forces in human nature that tend to moral degeneracy. Science is today doing more for morals than the church.

But, as we stated at the outset, unbelief is but one cause of non-attendance at church. There are many who would put up with a good deal of decayed theology, and try for themselvs and their children to obtain benefit and satisfaction from church-going for the sake of the sustenance of the better nature and the stimulus to the higher impulses, inadequate though though they be, were they not actually repelled from the church-door by the demands made upon them if they enter. A common excuse for not going to church is the same as a common excuse for not getting married. Men of modest means and a fair share of pride and self-respect "cannot afford it." They would willingly pay in the form of pew-rent a reasonable compensation for such benefit as they could get; but, having obtained their seat and paid for it, they find themselvs subjected to constant solicitation for a hundred purposes that hav no connection with their reasons for wishing to go to church. Perhaps the church which they wish to attend, through a policy which they had no part in making, and which they would never hav approved, is involved in debt, and they are asked to help it out of foolish bankruptcy. They are asked to subscribe for foreign missions, though doubting the benefit to distant savages of the five dollars' worth of teaching which it costs a hundred dollars to giv them. They are called upon to contribute to various charitable enterprises and entertainments—not called upon simply, but persistently urged, when they hav their own personal notions about charitable aid, in accordance with which they do in private what they can afford or feel disposed to do. They find that in what claims to be the temple of the meek and lowly savior, who gave his special blessing to the poor, and was himself more slenderly provided for than the foxes and the birds of the air, they cannot feel at home unless they are comparativly rich. The church today is a beggar, not humble and meek in its demands, but greedy, persistent, almost impudent. Our seeker for sustenance and inspiration for his better nature finds himself in a congregation of daughters of the horse-leech, ever crying, "Giv, giv!" and he flees in weariness and disgust from their importunities.

And yet it is not his pocket alone that is sensitiv. His self-respect and pride are hurt. He thought, perchance, that among the professed followers of the meek and lowly one, there might be a sort of equality of position, as among joint heirs to a common inheritance compared with which earthly resources are said to be insignificant. But he finds that the continual calls for contribution and for aid in the entertainments and charitable side-shows of the church serve the purpose of gauging a man's worldly means, and he is relegated to his place in the social grade of the church according to his ability to pay for it. Perhaps his means are modest, and the private demands upon them all they will bear. In that case, he is nobody in the society of the church. He is made to feel that he and his family are measured and estimated according to the scale of worldly treasures, and he becomes discontented and unhappy. He concludes that if the modern Christian church is the guardian of the gateway to heaven, it is easier for a whole caravan of camels to thread the postern of a needle's eye than for a poor man to make his way through the formidable barrier. He givs up his search in that direction for elevating and encouraging influences in life's trials, and, with the conclusions of science and philosophy, makes a more comfortable, if not a better, sanctuary for himself and his in his own home. Churches, at least in large cities, are for the rich, and serve rather a social than a genuin religious purpose; chapels and mission schools are for the poor, who are thereby made to feel their inferiority; but for the great class of reading, thinking, and activ men of the age there is no provision made for spiritual salvation.

A NON-CHURCH-GOER.

The Discussion About Science.

I confess to an intense interest in this discussion. I hav read all you hav published with close attention. The subject is of the first importance. The contributors, Mr. Putnam, Mr. Wakeman, and Mr. Andrews, are exceptionally able and cultured. The disciplined thinker will follow the arguments with great pleasure and profit, and the untrained mind, if willing, may benefit by the ripe thought, the sharp discriminations, the precise and accurate statements, of these trained intellects. While carefully reading the discussion itself, I hav read the comments contained in the two editorials, "The Discussion About Science" and "Are We Learning What Science Is?" I am moved to offer a thought or two on the last of these editorials. It is chiefly devoted to a criticism of Mr. Andrews and the science of Universology. You say of Mr. Andrews's latest contribution, "This article, we expect, will call forth the popular objection to the writing of this eminently learned man." You accuse him of obscuring his meaning by too many words, "words, too, with which no one but Mr. Andrews himself is familiar." You quote an unfavorable comment on Mr. Andrews's style from John Storer Cobb, evidently attracted by its wit rather than its truthfulness. You say you "hav often questioned why a man with so much knowledge as Mr. Andrews is everywhere admitted to possess, and, having so much information to impart of value to the world, should, through a seeming lack of insight, or wisdom, or something or other, expose himself" to this sort of criticism. I feel obliged to admit that "this article" has had quite the opposit effect upon me, and, in my judgment, will go far toward removing "the popular objection to the writings of this eminently learned man."

I am quite surprised at your expressions upon this particular article. Mr. Andrews, at its commencement, specifically said he would "abandon the attempt" at close "philosophical disquisition" and "see what can be done by a more popular rough handling of the subject." But when a special effort on his part to satisfy popular requirements evokes an editorial judgment that he "lacks insight, or wisdom, or something or other," or "has intended" to "envelop his meaning in obscenity," he will not be encouraged to continue the popular method of communicating his "information." It is believed by qualified judges that Mr. Andrews knows more about language and how to use it than any other living man. Charles Sumner (about a year before his death), in introducing Mr. Andrews to Gov. Boutwell and a party of friends at Washington, said: "This is Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews. Thirty years ago, in Boston, Mr. Andrews knew more about language than any of us, and we were his pupils."

After reading the editorial criticism of Mr. Andrews's use of words, and "words, too, with which no one but Mr. Andrews himself is familiar," I carefully reread the entire seven columns, of between five and six thousand words, and could find but two which are not in common use, and one of these was coined to describe a new kind of scientific "blockhead" which has just been developed, and the other was a necessary technicality, for a new idea, the meaning of which is patent upon its face.

There is a spirit of deference to the ability, and respect for the wisdom, of Mr. Andrews to be found in the editorial, if one looks for it carefully, but the "Cobb" quotation at the commencement, the "Petty cream and sour milk" in the middle, and the metaphysical holes in the sand bank at the end, suggest that wit and humor dominate the writer's character at the expense of his nobler qualities.

Cobb was a child in thought when he met Mr. Andrews; "he thought as a child, he understood as a child, he spoke as a child," but he afterward, to quote his own words, "sedulously cultivated an acquaintance with him and the work to which he has devoted his life," and eventually he "became a man;" and when he had "put away childish things," we find him saying, "Mathematics is a department which I hav for many years been engaged in studying and teaching, and of which I may therefore, perhaps, be considered best able to giv an opinion as to methods of investigation; and of even this most fundamental, longest known, and best settled department of science, I find this new scientific discovery of Andrews adequate to recast the philosophy in a profound and unerring manner."

FRANKLIN BURLINGAME.

An Outing.

'Tis Sun's Day, and we hav had such a fulness of the glad, sweet, pleasant out-of-doors all through its fleeting hours that a strong desire comes over me to share its joyousness with all the world and the rest of mankind. In the cool, breezy, moist morning Mr. Slenker and I took a long, long walk up the river, enjoying every step of the way as we threaded the shady path among the great willows, buttonwoods, walnuts, cedars, oaks, etc., that spread their sheltering arms above us, while all around our feet were lovely grasses, blooming flowers, clinging vines, and tangled shrubbery, growing in that wild, unstudied gracefulness that Nature in her untrammeled freedom best loves and affects. Sweet songs of the birds from the tree-tops and coverts on every side filled the summer air with melody, and all nature seemed to thrill and pulsate with joy and happiness.

As we rambled on, culling now a handful of flowers and then a bunch of blooming grasses, and anon the plump dewberry and clustering raspberry, our hearts were full of that sweet content that is never felt save in the glad, free out-of-doors, far from the busy haunts of men, alone with Nature in her gentle and loving moods. When I hear the pious ones croon over the old platitude, that the Infidel cannot enjoy and appreciate the wonders and beauties of Nature, I long for the power to send into their ignorant sensations just one hour of that higher, purer appreciativness of the glories, the sweetnesses, and the harmonies of dear old Nature, that are felt only by those who are educated upon the plane of truth and actual science.

The poor Esquimaux in his hovel can no more imagin the luxuries of the home of a cultivated, intelligent, wealthy citizen of our enlightened, comfort-appreciating land, than can these creed-bound, superstitious, blinded God-believers appreciate or understand the higher and purer joys of the freed and cultivated mind of the Infidel and Atheist.

Not one of the thousands who on this Sabbath morning wended their way churchward, at the call of the silver-toned bells, felt in their hearts so sweet and holy a thrill of real, glad gratefulness that life held so much of joy, so much of beauty, so much of happiness, as did we two, alone in the silent fastnesses of the wood-embowered river, rushing through its rock-bound walls, and rippling in broken cascades over its stony shallows.

In the afternoon several boat-loads of us—young and old, fathers, mothers, and children, and young men and their sweethearts—took a pleasant ride far up the river, along its shady side, now and then brushed by the overarching limbs of the old trees as they bent lovingly above us. Glad, merry voices and sweet, rippling laughter filled the air with melody as the boats darted here and there or floated lazily on the stream. We landed at a big mulberry-tree—the largest one I ever saw. The boys climbed into its great branches, and soon the ground was literally covered with the rich, ripe, luscious, purple fruit, and we all feasted to satiety. Then we once more embarked, to land again at a great spring on the river bank which from innumerable mouths gurgled its crystal streams through the soft sand, making it to boil like a great giant's caldron—

> "Up from its sacred depths below,
> Clear as crystal and pure as snow,
> Like a jewel the darker waters among,
> Cometh the spring with a gush of song."

Back once again into the boats, and then homeward bound; one more red-letter day woven into life's calendar.

May you all, dear friends, hav many such, and may each year bring more and more of them to our world, is the wish and hope of yours happily, ELMINA.

The Way the Christians Poison the Schools.

From the Lowell, Mich., Journal.

Two years ago the Lowell school board discovered that it was not only unjust, but illegal, to hav sectarian exercises in the schools, and resolved that the same, if held at all, be outside of regular hours. At the beginning of the present term, for the same reason, the board readopted the same resolution. Recently, the board rescinded said resolution, giving the teachers permission to hold divine worship and impart sectarian ideas "at their option." Many protested against this strange action, claiming that it was a violation of law and the principle of equal rights, as guaranteed by the government. At once Christian theology was made a prominent feature of the schools. A petition signed by nearly seventy, very many of whom were the best citizens of Lowell, asking equal rights according to law, was handed in to the board, and the same was coolly "laid on the table." Said "humble petitioners" now feel very much as the negro did under the slave code—no rights that the board feel bound to respect. Stunned and confounded, they search for an explanation, and find it in the "report of the proceedings of the W. C. T. U. State convention," just held at Adrian. We quote:

"In Lowell, Bible reading in the schools had been prohibited and the Union took the matter in hand and the result was the Bible has been reinstated in the school."

Quite likely the Lowell school board did not think, when they were disregarding the wishes, the rights, the protests of the people, and the laws of the government, that the women of "the Union" would go over to Adrian and boast so publicly of the conquest, that under their seductiv wiles the Lowell school board represented "the Union" and not the people. As some deny that Bible reading, etc., is sectarian, I would ask attention to Webster's definition of sectarian and sect.

"Sectarian.—Pertaining to sect."

"Sect.—A body or number of persons united in tenets, chiefly in philosophy or religion, but constituting a distinct party by holding sentiments different from those of other men. Most sects hav their origin in a particular person, who taught and propagated some particular notions in philosophy or religion, and who is considered to hav been its founder."

According to the above, the Bible is a sectarian book, and all exercises founded on the same are sectarian.

The Common School law says: "Sec. 7. The duty (of the board) to prescribe text books is imperativ. Nor is the teacher at liberty to introduce any new text book without the action of the board."

SEC. 121. "No school district shall apply any of the money's received by it from the primary school fund, or from any or all other sources, for the support and maintenance of any school of a sectarian character, whether the same be under control of any religious society, or made sectarian by the school district board."

SEC. 4. "School District Libraries." "It shall be the duty of the state board of education to make a list of books which are unsectarian in character and suitable for District or Township Libraries."

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

ART. III. SEC. 39. The legislature shall pass no laws to prevent any person from worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience, or to compel any person to attend, erect, or support any place of religious worship, or to pay tithes, taxes, or other rates for the support of any minister or teacher of religion.

SEC. 40. No money shall be appropriated or drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious sect, or society, theological or religious seminary, nor shall property belonging to the state be appropriated for any such purpose.

SEC. 41. The legislature shall not diminish or enlarge the civil or political rights, privileges, and capacities of any person on account of his opinion or concerning matters of religion.

SEC. 24. The legislature may authorize the employment of a chaplain for the state prison, but no money shall be appropriated for the payment of any religious services in either house of the legislature.

ART. XIII. SEC. 4. The legislature shall provide for a system of Primary schools.

SEC. 11. The legislature shall encourage the promotion of intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement.

Those seventy "humble petitioners" conclude there is sufficient law to exclude all sectarian books and ceremonies from the schools; and as an appeal is about to be made to the government to hav the laws enforced, the above statement is made that the public may hav a clear understanding of the matter. All men of note, whether in the church or not, concede that a public school is no place for sectarian books or worship. So long as our school board remains in the hands of "the Union" there will be no hope but an appeal to the law; and if the entire government has not been taken in hand by "the Union" we confidently expect that justice will be done.

E. A. CHAPMAN.

Notes from the Lecture Field.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Since I wrote you I hav spent three weeks in British Columbia, and hav invariably had good audiences at both Victoria and Nanaimo, where we were warmly received by Bros. Watkins, Brunton, and Dr. Smith, to whom especial thanks are due for a helping hand at Nanaimo.

At Victoria, your friends, James Fell, S. Duck, and Capt. Walker, true friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER and its cause, made my stay pleasant and my work light. Many thanks to these kind friends.

Next Sunday is my ninth and last lecture in Seattle for this time. The Liberal League here is a large and live one. Many thanks to them all, and Father Crane especially, for many kindnesses during our stay here. From here we go to Tacoma, and thence to Portland, where we speak on the 1st and 15th of July, and the interval at Eagle Creek, where we are to giv the oration on the 4th, to be followed by a short course of lectures, after which we turn our face toward eastern Oregon and Washington Territory, and for the benefit of the Liberals at Spokane, Cheney, Colfax, Dayton, Walla Walla, Pendleton, Baker City, Prairie City, and other points, let me say I am right side up and on the way to them, and to hav things ready for a good time this fall. The cause of mental freedom is looming up in this sunset land. Long may it wave over ignorance and superstition!

In conclusion, permit me to express my great sorrow at the sad news of Brother C. C. Luther's death, and my sympathy for his bereaved family in their sorrow. Brother Luther was my warm friend, whom I had learned to love for his many sterling traits of character which marked him in an eminent degree; a true Liberal, honest, earnest, and a true friend to the cause of truth and to his fellow-man. We hav met him at our home, and at his home near Modesto, and hav always found him the same genial, generous, true man, and if there is a bright home beyond for any one, Brother Luther will be there.

Yours for truth, DR J. L. YORK.

A Jovial Document.

Christianity flourishes in Spain. A correspondent in that country sends the London Freethinker the following translation of an excommunication directed against the editor, publishers, and readers of a Freethought paper in Seville, by the synod of that district: "In the name of the omnipotent God, of the father, of the son, of the holy canons, of the holy Virgin Mary, mother of God, and of all the celestial virtues; of the angels and archangels, of the thrones and the denominations, seraphim and cherubim, of the holy patriarchs and prophets, of all the apostles and evangelists, of the holy innocents, who only were declared worthy of singing the new psalm in the presence of the eternal, of the holy martyrs and holy confessors, of the holy virgins, and also of all the saints and elected of the Lord. We excommunicate and anathematize this heretic (or this impious), and we sequestrate him of the holy church of God, so that, condemned to the eternal penalty, he may fall into the abyss like Dathan and Abiram, and like all those who dared to say unto the Lord, 'Get away from us, for we don't want to know your way.' And as the fire is extinguished in water, so may his soul be extinguished in the eternity of the centuries, unless he should reform and admit his fault. Amen. Cursed be he of God the father, creator of men; cursed be he of God the son, who suffered for men; cursed be he of the Holy Ghost, who descended upon him in the baptism; cursed may he be by the holy cross on which Jesus suffered, triumphant for our salvation; may he be cursed by the mother of God, most holy Mary, always virgin; cursed may he be by Saint Michael, guardian of the sacred souls; cursed may he be also by all the angels and archangels, the princes and potentates, with all the militia of the celestial army; may he be cursed by the numerous patriarchs and prophets; cursed may he be by Saint John the precursor, who spilt the water of baptism over Jesus; may the malediction of Saint Peter, Saint Paul, Saint Andrew, and all the apostles, and of the rest of the disciples of Jesus Christ, and of the four evangelists, whose preaching converted the whole world, fall upon him; cursed may he be by the wonderful multitude of martyrs and professors who pleased God by their good works; cursed may he be by the chorus of sacred virgins who depreciated the riches of this world for their love to Jesus Christ; cursed may he be by all the saints who, from the beginning of the world until the end of the centuries, hav pleased and will please God. In conclusion, cursed may he be by the earth and all the holy things it contains; cursed be he wherever he may go, whether he be at his house, in the field, in the road, in a path, in the bush, in the water, or in the church; cursed be he living, dying, eating, drinking, quenching hunger, or quenching the thirst; when he may fast, when he may induce sleep, when he may sleep, when he may walk, when he may be standing, when he may sit down, when he may lie down, when he may work, when he may rest, mingendo, cacando et flebotomando. Cursed be all the strength of his body; cursed be he inside, outside, his hair, his brains; cursed be he in the head, in the temples, in the forehead, in the ears, in the eyebrows, in the eyes, in the cheeks, in the jaws, in the nose, in the incisors, in the molars, in the lips, in the throat, in the shoulders, in the arms, in the hands, in the fingers, in the chest, in the heart, in all the internal parts of the body, in the kidneys, in the groin, in the femur (sic original), in genitalibus, in the thighs, in the knees, in the legs, in the feet, in all the articulations, and in the nails; cursed be he in the juncture of all the parts of his members; may not a point of the body, from the top of the head to the soles of the feet remain sane; cursed may he be by Jesus Christ, son of live God, with all the power of his majesty, and may there rise against him heaven, with all the virtues which it contains, so as to deliver him to the eternal punishment, if he does not repent and confess his fault. Amen. May it happen to him! may it happen to him! Amen."

The Sunday Nuisance in Wisconsin.

Sabbatarian bigotry comes to the front again. This time it is in Bloomington, Wis. The Record of that place givs this account:

"Much excitement was caused in town Wednesday morning by the arrest of six members of our baseball club, who were taken to Lancaster by Deputy-Sheriff Richards, charged with violation of the Sabbath, by playing ball on that day half a mile northeast of the village. That these members did play ball last Sabbath they do not deny. Nor do a dozen other members of the club, not arrested, deny that they also played ball on that as well as on other Sabbaths. Why they were not also arrested on complaint of these self-constituted conservators of law and order is as unanswerable a conundrum as is the reason for arresting the six. Under our statutes anyone is liable to a fine for such violation of the Sabbath; so is any man who opens his store, warehouse, office, market, or other place of business. Still, two-thirds of these establishments are open in this village every Sunday, and no prosecution has ever followed. And this is the rule in almost every town in the Northwest. The six men arrested will average at least as well morally as many who make greater pretensions to being bright and shining lights for others to pattern after, for where there are no pretensions to superlativ godliness there can be no hypocrisy. Personally we favor a due observance of the Sabbath, but when it is known to all that the leading cities of America countenance beer gardens, street parades, dancing, bands of music, etc., on that day, it has the appearance of 'straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel,' to arrest men whose lives are otherwise above reproach solely for the reason that they will not conform to a moral standard that others lay down for them. We are not living in Puritanical Massachusetts, nor in a section where men will be taken by the ear and led into any orthodox organization or code of morals against their own wills. In matters of morality Bloomington, while it is no paradise, will compare favorably with other towns. For this reason among others the Record considers these arrests as uncalled for and contemptible as the spirit which dictated them is officious. They are also sure to result in more ill-feeling and factional strife than could hav been precipi'ated in any other way. The six men who were submitted to this indignity are not vagrants or convicts or jail-birds, and neither they nor their friends are pleased at seeing them placed on a level with that class."

What They Think of Him.

From the Philadelphia Press.

Joseph Cook calls himself "the product of twenty-five years of education, including foreign travel." An examination of the work, which is bound in calf, with rough edges, shows that twenty-five years of education, including foreign travel, hav made a highly unsuccessful attempt to perform the work of a century in just one-quarter of the time.

From Texas Siftings.

Rev. Joseph Cook is giving wings to his opinion of the press, which is anything but favorable. As a wind instrument, he has all the advantage on his side. Making due allowance, however, for Joe's expansiv jaw, there will be sufficient of the press left when he gets through chewing, to enlighten and liberalize the American people. The press is not only able to take care of itself, but it can administer a spanking to Joseph, from time to time, as he seems to need it.

AT a prayer-meeting the other night, the burden of the remarks was about those who had died recently. There was some smiling when the deacon in charge, then said: "We will close by singing 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"—The Psalmist.

"WHEREVER I find a great deal of gratitude in a poor man, I take it for granted there would be as much generosity if he were a rich man."—Pope.

Communications.

From Corinth to Ephesus, Jerusalem, and Antioch.

We return to the narrativ of Acts. The writer having told us that Paul preached in Corinth a year and a half, and having related the trial before the proconsul Gallio, says:

"And when Paul had been there many days he bid adieu to the brethren and departed by sea to go to Syria (xviii, 18).

The "many days" probably refer to the time after the trial, not to the year and a half spent at Corinth.

"And with him went Priscilla and Aquila, when he had shaved his head at Chenchrea, because he vowed a vow."

Did Paul, who regarded all Jewish rites abrogated by the messiah, take the vow of the Nazarite? Did he, in thanksgiving for some deliverance (perhaps from the Jewish riot), let his hair grow, abstain from wine, and, at the termination of the vow, hav his long hair cut off? The law required the shaving to be done at Jerusalem, but if a special dispensation allowed it to be done elsewhere, was Paul the kind of Jew to obtain it?

But there is another difficulty which may not hav occurred to other critics. Tradition says that Paul was bald, and he was now about 55 years old, according to the accepted chronology, but, as we think, about 70. We, therefore, discredit the head shaving of the bald-pated apostle.

"And they came to Ephesus, and Paul entered the snyagog and discoursed with the Jews. And they requested him to tarry with him; but he could not be persuaded. For he said: I must certainly keep the approaching feast at Jerusalem. But if it please God I will come again to you" (19–21).

The above italicized words are not found in any codices prior to the sixth century. They are omitted in the Vulgate and in the revised New Testament. They are therefore an acknowledged interpolation.

"And Aquila and Priscilla he left at Ephesus, and he himself proceeded by sea and came to Cesarea" (22).

Here again is another interpolation; the italicized words are in the Syriac, but in no other version that we hav seen. The oldest Peshito codex is of the sixth century. It is true that Aquila and Priscilla remained at Ephesus, but what business had a Syriac scribe to interpolate it?

But this is not all. Cesarea was begun to be built about 22 B.C., and was finished in ten years. Before Herod built it the place was called Strato's Tower. The town was not large, but it was a landing-place on the route by sea to Jerusalem. Paul doubtless passed through Strato's Tower more than once, and it is possible that when he went to Rome the name had been changed to Cesarea, but we hardly think that could hav been its name when he went from Corinth to Jerusalem, as related by the writer by Acts.

"And he went up [to Jerusalem] and saluted the members of the church, and went on to Antioch" (22).

This fourth visit to Jerusalem, according to Acts, was very short, and is presumed to hav been at Pentecost. The interpolation in verse 21 is based on that presumption. "There is too much reason to fear," says Canon Farrar, "that his reception was cold." Is there not too much reason to fear, say we, that the alleged visit is a fiction? The epistle to the Galatians is conceded to hav been written several years after this time, and in it Paul mentions only two visits to Jerusalem.

"And when he had been there [at Antioch] some days he departed and traveled from place to place in the regions of Phrygia and Galatia, establishing all the disciples" (23).

Paul has now begun his third missionary journey, according to Acts, and here we leave him while we consider the affairs at Ephesus and Corinth under the ministration of Aquila, Priscilla, and Apollos.

APOLLOS AT EPHESUS AND CORINTH.

Our apostle is now visiting for the third time the mountain regions of Galatia and Phrygia.

"And a certain man named Apollos, a Jew, a nativ of Alexandria, who was trained to eloquence, and well taught in the scriptures, came to Ephesus. He had been instructed in the ways of the Lord, and was fervent in spirit, and he discoursed and taught fully respecting Jesus, while yet he knew nothing except the baptism of John (xviii, 24–25).

Some pious scribe of the middle ages, seeing the inconsistency of a man preaching fully about Jesus, of whose life, death, and resurrection he had not yet heard, substituted "the Lord" for "Jesus;" and the forgery was repeated in king James's version; but the revised New Testament restores Jesus to the text.

But what a striking proof is afforded in this passage of the obscurity of Paul's Jesus! He had been dead twenty-five years or more and Paul had been preaching him twenty years or more (twice twenty, we suppose), and yet the learned Jew of Alexandria hadn't yet heard that the messiah had come. All that Apollos knew about the messiah was what he had learned from the scriptures and from the disciples of John the Baptist.

"And he began to speak boldly in the synagog. And when Aquila and Priscilla heard him, they took him to their house and fully (Gr., "more perfectly") showed him the way of the Lord (Vulg., "our Lord;" Gr., "God").

What a coming down for the Alexandrian orator! He goes to the house of a tent maker to be taught by him and his wife that Jesus had actually lived and died—Jesus, whose gospel Paul declared not long afterward had been "preached in all creation under heaven" (Col. i, 23). Paul himself had just before been preaching Jesus and the resurrection in that same synagog, but Apollos didn't know that such a person had lived until the fugitiv tent maker of Pontus told him!

"And when he was disposed to go to Achaia, the brethren anticipated him, and wrote to the disciples to receive him. And by going, through grace, he greatly assisted all them that believed. For he reasoned powerfully against the Jews, before the congregation; and showed from the scriptures, respecting Jesus, that he is the messiah (27–28).

Just as would be expected! The learned Jew proved the messiah from scripture. Heretofore he had probably preached an ideal messiah, or the kind of messiah that John the Baptist and his disciples foretold; but now, having been informed that a Jesus had been put to death and had risen from the dead, Apollos adduces proof from the scriptures that that person was the messiah heralded by John. All the external evidence he has is what the tent maker and his wife told him that Paul told them; and Paul never claimed to hav seen that messiah until several years after his death, resurrection, and ascension!

Twelve years ago the editor of the Index characterized the doubts sometimes expressed concerning the historical existence of the gospel Jesus as "skepticism without argument;" and said that the disbelief in the fact of the life and death of Jesus had "nothing to show for itself except an uncritical suspicion." The evidence of the gospels was of little weight in the editor's estimation, but that of Paul and Tacitus was enough. Mr. Abbot was not then aware that the passage in the "Annals" of Tacitus concerning Christ had been proved spurious by Robert Taylor. And it has since been demonstrated by an astute English author that the whole of the "Annals" was forged in the fifteen century; while the testimony of Paul is completely set aside by our discovery that he died about the time Pontius Pilate was born. With this new light on the real messiah who died before the Roman government conquered Judea, how significant is the statement of the writer of Acts, that twenty-five years or more after the death of Paul's Jesus, the learned Apollos of Alexandria had not yet heard of such a person.

After a diligent search of many years we hav found no historical proof of a Christ crucfied under Pontius Pilate, but much evidence of a Jesus stoned and hanged a hundred years before. And now, with entire confidence in our case, we thank the founder of the Free Religious Association for the frank admission in 1871 that Jesus was undoubtedly an obscure person, and, "had it not been for Paul, he might never hav been heard of."

Reply to F. N. Albright.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 23, 1883, Mr. Albright propounds the questions, "Is mind-matter mind, or is mind matter?" in criticising my doctrins of mind and matter.

He remarks, "Just how mind-matter originated does not appear." Can he tell me how any conscious thinking principle called mind originates unless, as I suggest, as it certainly cannot come, as he surmises, from unconscious and unthinking matter, for here comes the irresolvable questions, Why should, and how does such matter think or become conscious? Neither can he surmise how any matter originated. Suffice it to know that matter and mind exist in the universe, and that the conscious is so infinitly different and superior to the unconscious, that they cannot be supposed to be convertible. The two we know exist in interdependent relations of co-operation for mental manifestations, and, which is the prime co-operator? The coherent acts of nature and art define intelligence to be the only cause, for a purpose, with their adaptable establishments.

As mind exists it must be something, and therefore is the function of some matter or element. Mr. Albright considers that "mind-matter, or the functions of mind, to originate in and are inseparable from organisms, and so dying with them; and that apart from organisms there is no mind in the universe." As animal organisms are not self-complete or self-sustained because they are sustained wholly by solar light, heat, oxygen, food, liquids, etc., which are all foreign to their organisms; and as organisms are not complete or vivified without mind in co-operation—even when in the fetal uneducated state—so such mind, on scientific principles, is far more rational to conclude to be a foreign conscious subtil-material, or element, than as the product or conversion of gross, unconscious matter of organisms, and as parts of the conscious primordial principle of the universe (as in my doctrin) alone accounts for the intelligent works of nature and art, by dynamical will-force acts as the only coherent powers or potential forces in the universe.

Mr. Albright names, in first paragraph, fourteenth line, that I claim that mind originates matter, which is a gross error, as my writings claim that conscious and unconscious matter are the two primordial principles of the universe, being co-eval and eternal, so neither by my doctrin can originate either.

In my claim that mind acts dynamically, friend Albright superficially rejoins, "I fail to see in dynamic force any intelligence." He surely cannot think from my papers that I claim that dynamic force is intelligent. But what I do claim is that mind originates dynamic force as its expression, and so originally and potentially compels dynamic action by which unconscious matter always has been and is forced into coherent, i. e., intelligent, ways for a purpose, by its impelling mind, as are our unconscious bodies by our minds, acting dynamically, forced into intelligent ways.

He says, "If mind is a material entity, then it must be subject to all the laws of matter, change, etc., and cannot maintain its identity." While, as I claim that mind is the first primordial principle, giving all laws, changes, etc., to unconscious matter, it thence can not follow or be deduced from such premises, that such originating force is subject to like changes. Its volition producing changes to unconscious matter only, as our minds in art works with unconscious matter, cause change in such materials, but their minds suffer no such changes.

Again he says, "While if mind-matter is not mind, then it does not solve the mind problem." This is a curious mode of reasoning—"If mind is not mind, then," etc. In claiming the existence of mind-matter, I necessarily claim that mind-matter has all the functions of mind, and so does, by such doctrin, rationally and adequately solve the mind problem. Then he goes on to name that "mind is left outside of and independent of matter, and is consequently nothing," which reads as if he was using words only, with no critical reasoning in such sophistry, to thwart my doctrin of mind and matter, as my doctrin of conscious and unconscious matter is that they are interdependently in necessary association for all time as cause and effects.

Then Mr. Albright writes about ghosts irrelevantly, as certainly having no reference to my doctrins, as they deal with intelligent and unintelligent matter only; and so I discard all nothings, including such attempts at criticism. Again, he asks, "What has mind to do with the origin of gravitation, perception, growth, etc.?" If potential force originates universally from mind and will-force, as in my doctrin of the only adequate cause of the doings of know-nothing matter, then mind has to do, primarily and effectivly, with all phenomena. And his associate question, "What has mind to do with perception?" I reply that as perception is exclusivly an attribute of mind, as its cognition or comprehension of impressions transmitted by the sense-nerves, it fully shows that the mind has all to do with the origin of perception. The body is the mere vehicle for the mind's manifestations, as well as its mechanical tool for desired work, so long as it is kept in habitable condition for the mind's use; and its origin belongs to the intelligently engendered potential laws of the universe, as one of its evolutional products—fitting bodies to associate with foreign mind-matter, as their lungs are fitted to associate with oxygen, and their bodies are fitted to utilize solar light, heat, food, liquids, etc., all being equally foreign to their organisms and essential to their completeness for vivification and sustentation.

Mr. Albright writes of "mind as a material organism." Marvelous! The body only is the organism, not the mind. Again he says, "If mind is material, why strive to keep up a distinction between mind and matter, soul and body?" Is there no difference in natural materials, or elements? none between oxygen, hydrogen, carbon, etc.? none between conscious and unconscious elements? no characteristics peculiar to any? And if there is, why not between the elements of mind and body, or soul and body—which seem so infinitly different, and the former so infinitly superior?

Again he writes, "Why not say plainly that a living body is a living soul? and that all mind-entities without our organisms are all phantoms, myths?" Why such bald dogma? Is his whole body his mind? or which part? Bodies admit of so much depletion, paralysis, and dismemberment, without impairing their minds, that it might more properly and scientifically be concluded that mind is a distinct and peculiar element, or entity, in itself, which is capable of a separate existence when the whole organism is rendered untenantable to mind, which alone gave it vitality, and such foreign attachment alone accounts for the origin of finite minds.

Mr. Albright says, "There is but one sense, that of feeling, on which we ring the changes into the other four senses, including the attributes of mind; and wherever there is a nerve that feels, there is a corresponding thought or consciousness, and there appears to be no thought or consciousness anywhere else; and such sensation is the all in all, the ego, the 'I.'"

Then, according to this dogma, the feeling nerves of sense are the mind, though the mind is known to be activ when such sense-nerves are dormant in sleep, or more or less useless in paralysis, and when partly severed from the body; yet the mind, in thought, memory, invention, and judgment, is all as clear as ever. It is very easy to say that "we hav only one sense, and that is feeling; and that nerve-sense originates mind and produces perception, thought, invention, judgment, and will-force." Is sensation, then, a body-material or a mind-material effect? I consider it to be the latter, as it is certain that perception, thought, fancy, invention, judgment, and will-force hav never been in the sense-nerves, and so are not the product of the sense-nerves, though the latter conveys much material for the mind's use, but does not originate the mind any more than does the horse who brings the coals to warm us originate our senses. These facts of mind prove it to be a foreign entity, capable of life when separated from our present bodies, and so it is not dependent upon them for its origin or perpetuation, though our minds use sense-nerves, as media, for necessary cognition of our environments. Therefore, Mr. Albright, I conclude that your reasoning and deductions hav reversed the order of nature and our mental characteristics by "putting the cart before the horse," in giving to the body the precedence and characteristics of mind.

Mr. Albright also says that "conscious life is not a primordial element of nature, nor an entity, but is a condition or mode of action, and, like a flame, must be supported or go out." Action is certainly necessary when the mind desires to manifest itself upon anything; but the prior thought, without action, must also exist; therefore action does not constitute the mind, but mind causes action, and all motions of unconscious matter are primordially the effects of mind actions, in giving impetus to know-nothing materials, for all phenomenal effects, for a purpose; as our reasoning minds, in action, giv impetus to the same know-nothing materials for art works. Mind is thus so distinct from and superior to unthinking matter that it is rightly scientifically considered to be an exclusiv element in itself, and so is rightly designated as the first primordial principle of the universe, and so consistently and adequately to control all unconscious matter and giv direction to its know-nothing acts, for a purpose. Mr. Albright resorts to that most mystical of all anomalies, the "conversion of unconscious matter, as a mode of its action, into thinking, loving, calculating, and inventing intelligence," to account for the existence and origin of finite minds—being only a wild surmise and a destructiv, annihilating dogma, which cannot convince or please any right-minded intelligence, in thus belittling finite minds. His doctrin, "that there is no mind outside of organisms," is very gratuitous and wholly unaccounts for Nature's wondrous works, without a primordial mind co-operation and direction of its associate unconscious materials, for all phenomena; which would thus make unconscious, know-nothing matter superior, in its acts, to such minds as we know to exist in their acts.

There is not a particle of evidence in support of such mind-degrading assumptions, and certainly if minds are superficially considered by anyone to be the product of the gross materials of our organisms, they are more reasonably and scientifically conceivable as parts of the cosmic subtil mind-material, or primordial element, which consistently and adequately is here claimed to control the universe of unthinking matter into all its phenomena, mechanisms, and adaptations for an intelligent purpose, which no other doctrin embraces or explains, and is amply confirmed by the acts of our minds in all art works with unconscious matter for our intelligent purposes.

In conclusion, it is to be regretted that our friend Albright should not be imbued with and inculcate an approbriate, all bright, scientific, consistent, and adequate conception of an intelligently devised nature, and our cosmic mind-origin, as conserved participants amid all beautiful nature, through all time, than to be hampered with his now gloomy forecastings of mental annihilation. But we will hope for better thoughts and abiding conclusions with him, as he says "we do not think to-day with the thoughts of yesterday, which come and go like the light of the sun," which makes it evident that his present doctrins are all diurnally ephemeral, and so admits that he has no abiding faith in his own views, and thus really knows nothing of the truth of his conclusions, or "thoughts of to-day, which come and go like sunlight," but which for to-day unfortunately, needlessly, and unscientifically degrade our minds by such doctrins below that of unconscious matter in their potentiality and conservation.

Why advocate annihilation of mind when you can not possibly know that such is true? Why thus unnecessarily try to deprive man of that cherished hope of perpetuation? Is there any good purpose gained in the bald and drear pessimistic nightmare assumption that our lives end here? Though all the fabled gods of old religions are truly myths, which I fully accord, that does not deprive nature's unconscious matter of its guiding intelligent first cause, its primordial principle to direct such matter into phenomenal laws of action. Neither can any one giv any consistent reason why our minds are not parts of that intelligent primordial principle or mind-element which thus animates all organisms, and so are necessarily conserved and made intelligent limited co-creators here, which last we know to be the fact in all art works, and with such exalted facts of our mental usefulness, our assimilated position to such intelligent primordial principle renders our immortality an inductiv necessity, which together givs to life its appropriate cheerful contentment and abiding conviction of perpetuity for all minds as being parts of nature's intelligent primordial principle.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Locust Valley, N. Y., June 30, 1883.

Is It Mr. Nichols?

From the New Northwest of Portland Oregon.

A blight has recently fallen upon several families in Yamhill county, and one or two in Lafayette, through the preaching of a certain "Christadelphian," who induces his followers, chiefly women, to forsake all earthly ties, and "separating themselvs from the world," become a "peculiar people," ready to induce and endure all sorts of martyrdom in this life that they may be of the favored few who are to enjoy the "first resurrection" and so inherit "eternal life." Every clear-headed person can see through the veneering of this man's preaching. It is Mormonism, pure and simple, and will end by the avenging bullet of some outraged son or husband, unless the sanctimonious wolf in sheep's clothing can elude them till he gets hold of property enough to line his pockets in the name of the "church," and then, of course, he can get away with the swag, women and all. He is already coaxing his followers to go with him to the "holy land," which to the initiated means Utah, or some other place where the dupes of an unnatural religion may get their eyes open after it is too late to help themselvs. At present they are stark crazy through the influence of his magnetism, and can no more be reasoned with than so many March hares.

IT IS MR. NICHOLS.

AND HE PROBABLY WILL NOT DEBATE WITH DR. YORK OR ANY ONE ELSE FOR A WHILE.

From the Yamhill Reporter.

Last Sunday, the 10th inst., about 11 o'clock A.M., news was brought to town that Rev. L. T. Nichols, Christadelphian preacher, was shot and fatally wounded, while preaching to his congregation. Dr. Calbreath was called out and found the man wounded by a pistol ball. The shot had taken effect about two inches to the left of the spine and just above the hip joint; the ball glancing passed around among the muscles of the left side and lodged within about two inches of the navel. Had it passed through the cavity, it would probably hav been fatal; as it is, the injury is but slight. Of course the shooting caused some excitement, and the "Soul Sleepers" (Christadelphians) and their creed was pretty thoroughly canvassed. I picked up so much of their history as you get here:

About five or six years ago this man Nichols arrived here in this county from Salt Lake. He professed to come with a revelation and a mission. By this revelation he was commanded to establish a new church, with a set of tenets, new in some respects, but smacking strongly of Mormonism in their general features. The principles of his doctrin required that all members should be independent of the outside world; that they must abandon all ornament, either personal or otherwise; that education, except enough to read the Bible, was worldly and must be shunned; that members should indulge in the holy kiss; that all property owned by members belonged to the Lord, and that he was the agent of the Lord; that food must be of the simplest kind—no tea, no coffee, no sugar, no leaven in the bread, and no seasoning of any kind; that all house ornaments and musical instruments must be thrown aside; that they must not giv testimony, vote, or take any part in the government of the state, but to be governed by him as the Lord's deputy; that a parent having a child not belonging to his church should be disowned and discarded; that they should hold themselvs entirely aloof from others and look on them as mere worldlings, whose society would be comtaminating; that the only thing that could keep a believing wife tied to a non-believing husband, or vice versa, is the force of the law—a force that must be set aside as soon as possible.

With these tenets he went amongst the people and succeeded in getting a number, mostly ignorant, soft-headed women, under his centrol. A few men joined him, but the greater part dropped the business when they saw the drift of his teachings.

For a while things went along smoothly, but in time the man became bolder and demanded more sacrifices; for instance, that children should be turned over to him, especially the girls, for religious training.

Soon a discontented muttering was heard; there was altogether too much meddling in family matters. Husbands and sons began to see that Brother Nichols was more potent at the family fireside than they were; food was cooked according to Nichols, wives and children were dressed by the same authority, and all family intercourses were conducted according to the letter of his law.

It was observed that in practicing the holy kiss, Brother Nichols was chaste enough with the old and ugly sisters, but the young, good looking ones always received a vigorous hug, and a lingering on the kiss that looked altogether too carnal, and in some cases, where the sister was buxom, smacked decidedly of the lascivious. Of course all this could hav but one result. Husbands objected to having everything about them a la Nichols; even in kissing their wives they must conform to his rule. Husbands objected and wives persisted; family troubles followed where peace had reigned and ought to reign. There were separations because of it, and men were compelled to threaten Nichols's life if he came about their houses because of it. But the fellow persisted. He invaded the family privacy and advised the wife against her home interests, against everything that is considered lawful and sacred, and they believed in him.

One point always appeared plain in this man's labor, and that was, that he never bothered himself much about any only such as had property, or a good prospect of getting it. Among his victims, for we can call his adherents nothing else, is a lady of this town—Mrs. Martin, wife of the late Frank Martin. Mrs. Martin had considerable property in her own right, and her husband dying willed all his to her, but stipulated that the minor heirs should be properly educated. Soon after Mr. Martin's death, Nichols, who had an eye to business, managed to get the complete control of Mrs. Martin, and the result was soon apparent. She took her children from school, forbade their associating with the older members of the family and was about to send her daughter, about 11 or 12 years old, to be instructed by Nichols, and declared that her property belonged to the Lord, which was readily understood to be equivalent to saying that it belonged to Nichols. About the same time rumor had it that all Christadelphians were ordered to turn their property into cash, and gather together in one community. Mrs. Martin's children and her mother, Mrs. Burnett, of McMinnville, all used their best efforts to change the lady's mind, but to no purpose. She remained fixed. Then her oldest son, William, returned and he and James stood guard over their mother's home and fairly drove Nichols and his dupes off by force and threats.

Last Sunday Mrs. Martin went to the church, a grove about one mile south of this place, and the boys followed to take her home. When Nichols saw them he valiantly took to his heels. Notwithstanding he had taught his people that he could not be hurt, he took himself off lively and, as his friends say, while he was running, James Martin pursued him on horseback and shot him in the back. He had taught his dupes that he could not be hurt. That was a part of his revelation. Now they know that he lied to them.

Shooting a human being is deplorable in most cases, but the regret in this case is that the ball didn't take a more fatal course. We are told that there is no law to protect a household from such scoundrels as this fellow; that under the name of religion any man can force himself on the privacy of a family, regardless of all decency, and do such mischief as he pleases. If this is so, then every man must be a law unto himself and the revolver the arbiter, and any man who attempts to destroy family relations must know that he takes his life in his hand when he does so. The better way would be, when such as Nichols appears in a community, to giv him notice to leave or be strung up to the first tree. Had Nichols been treated thus, several families now separated might be still living happily together. Allowing such men to ply their vocation is not religious liberty; it is but giving license to swindlers and libertins, and the sooner people and governments take that view of it the better. Away with them, to prison or the gallows!

While everybody regrets the necessity of using the pistol, yet the Martin boys hav the sympathy of nearly all the country, except it may be a few perverse cranks, who always manage to be on the opposit side of every question. But the general expression is sorrow that the ball did not take a more fatal course, whoever fired it, which the Martin boys deny doing.

NAT.

Lafayette, Or.

THE sun should not set upon our anger, neither should he rise upon our confidence. We should freely forgiv but forget rarely. I will not be revenged, and this I owe to my enemy; but I will remember, and this I owe to myself.—Colton.

CHICAGO has 500 churches and 5,242 liquor saloons. The proportionately large number of churches may be considered quite remarkable, unless it is accounted for by the saloon keepers being regular attendants on divine service.—Lowell Citizen.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 14, 1883.

The Cowardly Dodgers.

In his sermon on "Dodging as a Fine Art," last Sunday, the Rev. A. J. Canfield, of Brooklyn, said:

"The third chapter of Genesis contains the history of the first attempt to evade responsibility. Adam blamed the woman, who, in turn, dodged behind the serpent. Many Christians are consummate dodgers. First they try to shift the responsibility of their evil deeds upon Adam, and are glad to put the whole burden upon the shoulders of Christ. Intellectual dodging is a marked feature of the times. You are ignorant as to who writes the editorials in your daily paper—it may be a college graduate, a literary hack, or, perhaps, your next-door neighbor. The writer evades the consequences of his acts. Politicians are the most expert dodgers. When the Lord walks in his garden he sees no politicians — they are concealed behind the trees. Then there is pulpit dodging. Preachers do not teach what they think, but try to subscribe to a creed. The American system of supporting the clergy by voluntary contributions is largely responsible for this. The preacher is not a free man. Fifty years ago a preacher's word had authority. No matter what his creed, his utterances always commanded respect by virtue of his cloth. The lack of courage to speak the truth on the part of its professors is more harmful to religion than Infidelity, Wall street, or monopoly. Financial dodging is common. Men cultivate their eyesight so that they can see the butcher and baker a long way off, and thus enable them to dodge around the corner. Fashionable women resort to social dodging when they arrange the window-blinds to convey the idea that they hav gone into the country, or send the white lie to a caller, 'Not at home.' No amount of dodging can save the human race from the legitimate consequences of sin. You can't dodge God Almighty, conscience, or consequences."

This arraignment of the dodgers is good and just, but the reverend gentleman did not bear hard enough on one dodge, and that is the vicarious atonement dodge. Of all the unjust and immoral teachings of Christianity, that is the worst. The idea that a man who died eighteen hundred and fifty years ago can be responsible for a sin committed today is absurd on its face. Yet this dodge is the corner-stone of the gigantic system of religious fraud known as Christianity. If the belief in this is shaken, the whole fabric falls. Adam's sin is the keystone of the arch, as on that sin the church builds the vicarious atonement. The church is the great cowardly dodger of the age, and every time the Rev. Mr. Canfield begs his pious dupes to lean on Christ he is asking them to dodge the consequences of their acts. Every genuin Christian is a cowardly dodger. Every minister is an agent for the great fraudulent scheme of shirking responsibility.

The idea is a pagan notion, and is only fit for barbaric peoples. In primitiv times it was thought that the gods demanded a sacrifice to appease their wrath for some sin committed, or to induce them to withhold some calamity. The early races, who lived mostly on vegetables and grain, offered fruits and flowers to the gods. When they began to eat meats and drink wines they offered the same to their deities. To the good gods they gave white animals; to the bad, black. Each god was supposed to be better pleased with a peculiar kind of animal. To Mars, they sacrificed a bull; to Venus, a dove; to Minerva, a heifer. In the course of time it was imagined that the gods demanded something more sacred than plants or animals, and this led to the immolation of human beings upon the barbaric altars of superstition. At first slaves were the victims, then children, even their most beloved "first-born." Soon the idea grew that the gods would accept the life of one person as atonement for the sins of others. This idea prevailed in Greece and Rome, but there it mainly took the form of heroic self-sacrifice for the public good. In Egypt human sacrifices were general. This idea of atonement grew until it culminated in Christian theology. At first offering plants, then butchering animals, then murdering human beings, men finally became so superstitious that they sacrificed their god himself. If Christ is God, as the Christians hold, this is the crowning infamy. With the adoption of the brutal Jewish Jehovah the Christians adopted the sacrificial idea. They assert that divine justice requires blood. It would seem to be righteous retribution that if God demands a life, the life offered should be his own. But what barbarism, what cruelity, what injustice there is in this notion! We wonder if the Rev. Mr. Canfield ever thought that he is perpetuating an old pagan belief that should be discarded with the mythical deities that once peopled the sky? Christ, the "Lamb of God," takes the place of the sheep slaughtered by the Jews. Christianity is but one superstition substituted for an older superstition, and this dogma of redemption from sin through the slaying of an innocent "lamb," must fall with the other fallacies of the church. It is, of course, consoling to the Christian to believe that he will not suffer for his sin, and he may regard the legend as very sacred, but, after all, he can only be a "cowardly dodger" who accepts heaven on these terms.

The Christian superstition differs from the earlier myths, inasmuch as the church claims that all sin came into the world through one man's mistake. If it turns out that this one man never lived, and consequently never made the mistake, then the sacrifice of Christ was a useless waste of life, and on what ground can the church justify the teaching of this immoral doctrin? The garden of Eden story has been so thoroughly demolished that very few tell it now as a matter of fact. It has degenerated into a legend. Yet upon this depends the life of the church, for Eden and Calvary are inseparably connected. Without the fall there is no redeemer; without the live man to sin there is no dead god to expiate the offense. If Adam was not the first man, then the fall and the atonement are equally absurd, and without them what will the church do? Yet the fall of Adam could not hav brought sin upon mankind if hosts of men and women lived and died ages before he is said to hav existed. Nor could all men hav sinned through Adam, if it be true that it is not to one center, but to many centers of origin, that we "trace back the various races of mankind. The theologian who finds no evidence of death prior to the offense shared by Adam and Eve is laughed to scorn by the geologist, who points to the innumerable petrifactions on the earth's bosom, which with a million tongues declare more potently than loudest speech that organic life in myriads of myriads was destroyed incalculable ages before man's era on our world." The human race was thousands of years old before Eden was planted, and consequently the biblical account of the creation is false. The Latin saying, "False in one, false in all," applies pertinently to the Bible. Without the fall there is no atonement, without the atonement Christianity is an empty dream. The cowardly dodgers will after all hav to depend upon themselvs.

It is these facts, which are now so widely spreading, that hav made the preacher's word of so little authority. Formerly it was believed that the priest held the keys of heaven and hell, and consequently he was a person to be feared. Upon him depended, the credulous thought, an eternity of bliss or misery for them. Their own fears invested him with a supernatural power. He was above criticism. He was holy. His wrath was to be dreaded above all things, and his smile was courted as the favor of God. All this has changed within fifty years. He has been found to be only a man after all, and from the percentage of candidates for state prison furnished from the ministerial ranks, the people are justified in considering him a rather bad man. At least, he averages bad. He has been found, also, to know no more about the future than other people. The keys hav been wrenched from his hand, and they will never be given back.

Christianity is directly responsible for the other sins mentioned by Mr. Canfield. Church people make a belief in their creed a condition of recognition in society. Of course, there are thousands and thousands who cannot believe them, yet they must profess to or be ostracized. The church thus puts a direct premium upon hypocrisy. If she paid her preachers to tell the truth and giv the people honest thought, instead of supporting a creed, there would be fewer preachers who concealed their real sentiments, and there would be fewer fashionable sins for the Rev. Mr. Canfield to complain of. These sins are mostly the result of the immoral doctrin of vicarious atonement. Lapses from virtue are very easy when the consequences can be put upon the shoulders of another. God himself, according to the Bible, provided this scheme for dodging. By it conscience is appeased and consequences evaded, and Mr. Canfield's vehement declaration to the contrary is contradicted by all Christian tradition, creeds, and biblical authority. To mend the world, he needs first to change his religion.

The Charitable Works of Infidels.

ROCKLAND, ONT., June 27, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Will you kindly giv a list in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, of the charitable works of Infidels; such as colleges, asylums, schools, orphans homes, etc., founded; and such other philanthropic work as redounds to their credit?

I would like as complete a list, with dates, names of persons and places, as it is possible to obtain.

GEO. G. MERKLE.

Among the first institutions endowed by unbelievers should be mentioned those which owe their origin and existence to the generosity of Stephen Girard, who stands almost at the head of the world's public benefactors. Girard was born in France, in 1750, and died in America 1831. He gave to the Pennsylvania Hospital, $30,000; to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, $20,000; to the Orphan Asylum, $20,000; to the Lancaster, Pa., Public Sshool, $10,000; to the Society of Distressed Sea Captains, $10,000; to the Freemasons, $20,000; to the city of Philadelphia, $500,000; to the State of Pennsylvania, for her canals, $300,000. During the war of 1812, he was, as Parton says, "the sheet anchor of the government," subscribing at one time $5,000,000, when the credit of the country was below par, and on another occasion $3,000,000. His greatest gift was one of $6,000,000 for the founding and maintenance of Girard College, in Philadelphia. How the terms upon which this magnificent endowment was made hav been broken is familiar to all. He stipulated that no priest or minister of the gospel should ever enter that institution. To the shame of the management, the teaching of theology has been made part of the educational work of Girard College. As Girard's home was broken up by a Christian priest, so the college he founded has been prostituted to the inculcation of the Christian superstition.

The schools and dwellings built by Robert Dale Owen, the English philanthropist, are among the institutions which redound to the credit of Infidels. Owen was founder of the political system called Socialism. He was born in 1771 in a humble sphere of life, and was architect of his own fortunes. He became wealthy as a manufacturer. At one time, as co-partner in a firm near Glasgow, Scotland, he presided with great benevolence over four thousand operativs. He built school-houses and homes for them, and exercised a general patriarchal care over their fortunes. After devoting his life, both in England and in this country, to attempts at bettering the condition of the working classes, he died in his nativ land at the age of 87 years. Mr. Owen declared his invincible hostility to every existing and pre-existent form of religious faith, and stigmatized every species of theology as a hindrance to human progress. His life was one of unstained purity, and his character escaped the malice of even his enemies.

The Lick Observatory, on Mt. Hamilton, Cal., must always be mentioned when the charitable works of Freethinkers are spoken of. When completed, this will be one of the finest observatories in the world. James Lick (1796–1876) gave $20,000 toward building the Paine Memorial Hall in Boston, and ceded his immense property to seven trustees for the benefit of California. His minor bequests were numerous.

The Familisterre, at Guise, in France, a co-operativ community founded and presided over by M. Godin, is pre-eminently a Liberal institution. Mr. Bennett visited it when on his tour through Europe, and speaks of the enterprise in commendatory terms.

Here in New York we hav another instance of the Liberality of an unbeliever in Christianity—Cooper Union. This institution was endowed by Peter Cooper at an outlay of more than $2,000,000. Mr. Cooper is claimed by the church to hav been a Christian, but his views on religion were enough like those of Thomas Paine to identify both men as of the same faith.

The Smithsonian Institute, a literary, scientific, and philosophical institution at Washington, D. C., founded in 1846, is claimed to hav been the work of an Infidel—James Smithson, of England, who died at Geneva in 1829, leaving over half a million of dollars to be applied "to the increase and effusion of knowledge among men."

An Infidel charitable work now under way is the orphan asylum at Liberal, Mo. It is being built by popular subscription among the Infidels. One Infidel, A. Minski, gave one thousand dollars in cash toward its erection, and G. H. Walser as much more in lands. It has been under way only a short time, and work on it is being pushed as fast as funds are received.

Among generous donations to further good works may be mentioned the gift of Jonathan Nichols to the town of Wakefield, Mass., of one thousand dollars to aid the temperance cause by presenting to such young men of the town as hav not drank liquor nor smoked or chewed tobacco up to their twenty-first year with ten dollars; and after one hundred years the town may, if it sees fit, use the interest on this money to purchase school-books for orphan children, or for lectures or additions to the public library.

We think the above a very good showing, considering that it is but a short time since the last Infidel was imprisoned in this country, and that in England two are now in prison for heresy. As we hav said before, let the Freethinkers stay out of prison, giv them the same liberty the Christians enjoy, and in a few years they will do more humanitarian work than a century of Christianity. It was a good many hundred years after Christ before the church had a benevolent work to its credit, and even now the church has not insane asylums enough to hold the lunatics the Christian religion has made, nor orphan asylums enough to accommodate the hordes of orphans created by religious wars. Her institutions of learning hav not given to the world as much knowledge as the Inquisition destroyed. On the other hand, the Infidels hav always been in the vanguard of progress, and hav given to the world such light and information as they could. To four Infidels—Darwin, Tyndall, Huxley, Haeckel—the present generation is more indebted for advancement in science and general knowledge of the world in which we liv than to any forty churchmen who can be named.

II. Esdras.

OGDEN CITY, UTAH, June 15, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," p. 689, line 3, stands "II. Esdras, chapter xiv," but in the Christian (or Jewish) Bible is only one Ezra book, and that contains only ten chapters. How is that? Please giv me an answer how it is. Yours truly, B. C. SANDBERG.

Second Esdras is in the Apocrypha to the Old Testament, and is regarded as canonical by the Catholic church, being in their edition of the Bible. The Protestants reject the Apocrypha, but for a long time printed it between the Old and New Testaments in their King James version. It is in the Bible we peruse. Later editions, however, omit it. It is very unfortunate that God did not hand his word down in such a manner that there could be no dispute over it, but such is not the case. Church councils hav often voted on the canon, and many of the books hav been voted in and voted out several times. The ridiculousness of subjecting the Bible to this treatment appears never to hav struck the churchmen who were manufacturing the inspired book. II. Esdras is as authentic as the rest of the work.

The Monument Fund.

Since the acknowledgment of June 30th, the following sums hav been received:

Previously acknowledged	$967 42	Peter Metzger,	2 00
Harrison Halbert	5 00	J. B. McCalmont,	1 00
Ed. Fehre,	1 00	Jerome Dutton,	1 00
Wm. T. Costigan,	5 00	Joshua Benest,	1 00
Levi Chute,	2 15	Chas. E. Clark,	5 00
A. G. Phillips,	5 00	J. R. Barry,	1 00
A. F. Benedict,	1 00	Sam'l Powell,	1 00
Dr. A. B. Seward,	1 00	S. D. Moore,	1 00
Franklin Price,	1 00	E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.,	5 00
Mrs. J. Benoit,	1 00	Chas. M. Dewey,	2 00
A. G. Church,	1 00	John Wilson,	1 00
A. S. Croxton,	1 00	F. W. Sickler,	1 00
		Total,	$1,013 57

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Learning that the committee in charge of the Bennett Monument Fund is now ready to report progress and go activly to work, I hasten to add my mite, which you will find herewith inclosed. I suppose I am only one of a hundred who hav long been intending to send in their contributions, and I think it is time now for us to act upon our good intentions, lest the opportunity be lost, and lest the committee feel compelled to be more economical than we want they should be in their plans and contracts. I trust the remaining ninety and nine who hav no better excuse than I—mere negligence—will see the necessity of responding now, if ever. E. B. FOOTE, JR.

New York, July 6, 1883.

Notes.

C. W. STOWE, of McPherson, Kansas, has begun the publication of a local Liberal journal called the Thinker. It is sprightly and spicy, and will do good. May it long continue to think and cause others to.

"RECENT events," says the Examiner, "hav taught evangelical Christians to look anywhere except to the church for the defense of truth." It is gratifying to see that evangelical Christians are growing in knowledge. It is better than grace,

WE hav received a long letter confirming the newspaper accounts we publish elsewhere concerning the Rev. Mr. Nichols, but as the writer forgot to sign his name we cannot use it. Besides, we hav, by the aid of our Oregon friends, so thoroughly shown this man up that further space devoted to him would be wasted. If there are any more belligerent Christians who think they can wipe out Col. Ingersoll and all the other Infidels with a breath, let them come on. We pledge them satisfaction.

THE Advocate believes that the following bit of negro minstrelsy is "sublime enough for seraphs singing at the throne of God:"

"O love! O love! 'tis love dat moved de mighty God;
O love! O love! 'tis love dat died for me.
O love! O love! 'tis love dat drives my chariot wheels;
O love! O love! and death must yield to love.
'Tis love dat died for me!
'Tis love dat sot me free?"

Is heaven an Ethiopian camp-meeting? Giv us a little of hell occasionally for a change.

CLERGYMEN of the church of England hold something of a sinecure. For instance, the vicar of Chart-Sutton let out the graveyard as a sheep pasture, then refused to allow a parishioner to beautify his family lot unless he would first pay a fee of about $8, and when the fee had been paid and nine shrubs set out, he demanded their removal on the ground that they were injurious to the sheep! Not long afterward the vicar caused the shrubs to be removed. The archbishop of Canterbury was appealed to, but refused to interfere, as the churchyard was the vicar's freehold, and he had acted within his legal rights. The sum realized by the vicar for his sheep pasture was about $3.75 for the season.

MR. F. N. ALBRIGHT writes us, by way of correction, that in his article printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 23d, forty-fifth line, the word "won't" should hav been would. In justice to the printer, it is but fair to say that when a writer who makes his n's and u's alike, undertakes to write the word "would" and leaves the d imperfectly formed and crosses the l, he is liable to be misunderstood, even by so intelligent a person as the average compositor. In Mr. Townsend's reply this week we hav for obvious reasons omitted the writer's criticism on this part of Mr. Albright's article. Mr. T. Winter, of Cincinnati, whose circumgyratory handwriting has done much to encourage profanity in this office, wishes us to say that the word "uncultivated" in his "Friendly" letter last week should hav been unadulterated—"unadulterated truth," not "uncultivated truth," being what he boldly proclaims.

THE Jews at Nyreghhaza, in Hungary, who are accused of killing a girl to mix her blood with the feast of the Passover, are being treated with frightful inhumanity by the Christian authorities. One of them declared that he had been forced to drink large quantities of water, had been stripped, struck, and dragged by the hair. Another had been beaten and compelled to gaze at the sun. These barbarities were inflicted to extort a confession from the Jews; but as the Jews were innocent, the custom of mixing blood with the feast of the Passover having been abandoned, if it ever existed, of course no confession has been obtained. The people of the country where the trial is going on are taught by the priests that it is right to testify falsely against a Jew, the interests of Christianity requiring their conviction. Innocent or guilty, a Jew or heretic in a Christian court has less hope for justice than if he had fallen among thieves.

DENVER, Colorado, has an Inter-Ocean that is bound to beat its Chicago namesake in lying about the Freethinkers. In a ecent issue we find this:

"The New York 'Freethinkers,' about to assemble at Rochester, issue a challenge to any church to send a minister there to argue with them on the subject of Atheism. As these Freethinkers are the people who gained notoriety by distributing literature in favor of child-murder, they ought to hav issued their challenge, not to the church, but to the Society for the Suppression of Vice. There is nothing like being accurate in these matters."

The man who wrote that paragraph is either an unpardonably ignorant numbskull, or a consummate knave. In either case he is unfit to hold his position. Where and who was the Freethinker who advocated such doctrins? The Inter-Ocean must furnish names and places and dates, and thus substantiate its charges, or apologize for basely slandering a very large body of honorable men and women. As there is nothing like being accurate in these matters, the editor will do this or stand convicted as a wilful falsifier. Again he says:

"When the Freethinkers of America attracted most notice as an organized body, the president of the association was a publisher of pamphlets and books that were afterward suppressed by the law. These publications advocated a system which looked toward the removal of the marriage relation. When Bennett's books were suppressed by the New York courts, Robert G. Ingersoll denounced the law as an interference with freedom of thought. Ingersoll claims to hold wedlock in high esteem. Then why does he, in the company of these men, advocate the removal of the marriage relation?"

The organization of the Freethinkers is the National Liberal League. As presidents it has had Francis E. Abbot, Elizur Wright, T. B. Wakeman. None of these men ever published a pamphlet on any such subject. They never had a book suppressed by law. None of them advocates the removal of he marriage relation; and the fool who makes such charges against them and Col. Ingersoll ought to be sued for criminal libel and forced to expiate his offense in a jail.

WE hav received from our friend, E. A. Stevens, of the Radical Review, a copy of Prof. Richards's statuet of Thomas Paine. It is a fac simile of the design intended for the monument of Paine to be erected in Lincoln Park, Chicago, when sufficient funds are obtained. It represents Paine sitting at his table, with his head resting upon his left hand, in a thoughtful mood. On the table is a manuscript and in his right hand a pen, as though he were writing and had stopped for a moment to think. The whole is an exceedingly neat piece of workmanship. It is claimed by the sculptor, Mr. Richards, that the likeness is the only correct one extant, being modeled from a death mask, which with his other effects was sent to France, where Mr. Richards discovered it some years ago and secured it for this purpose. The price of the statuet is $14. Orders for it should be addressed to E. A. Stevens, 73 Randolph street, Chicago, Ill.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. H. S. LAKE, who has just closed her engagement with the Liberals of Salem and Alliance, Ohio, is to speak in Jefferson county, northern New York, the last of July. She then goes to Michigan for the state convention in August. Western Leagues, societies, or individuals wishing her services will write to her permanent address, Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has decided to revisit this country and Canada for three or four months, arriving in September. He wishes to immediately begin lecturing, and friends desiring his services can address him in care of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We know that he will do a great deal of good in the field, and trust that he may be kept busy. We shall cordially welcome him back to renew an acquaintance that was very pleasant.

THE Freethinkers of Northern and central New York will hold a three day's meeting at Carthage. N. Y., on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, July 27th, 28th, and 29th. The speakers will be ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham, Mrs. H. S. Lake, H. L. Green, and others. Prof. W. F. Peck will furnish the vocal and instrumental music. This is the first meeting of the kind ever held in the vicinity, and it is very important that there be a general attendance of the Liberals of the northern part of the state.

JOHN E. REMSBURG begins a four nights' debate with Rev. W. F. B. Treat, of Bloomington, at Carbon, Ind., August 7th. The following propositions will be discussed: "1. Resolved, That the teachings of the Bible do, when faithfully followed, make men better and happier than they would be without them." Treat affirms; Remsburg denies. "2. Resolved, That the teachings of Infidelity do, when followed, make men better and happier than they would be without them." Remsburg affirms; Treat denies.

E. C. WALKER writes: "The Grand Rally at Valley Falls, August 30th and 31st, and September 1st and 2d, promises to be the most largely attended and enthusiastic Liberal convention ever assembled in Kansas. The place of meeting is the Fair Grounds of Jefferson county, situated in a lovely natural grove, on the banks of the Delaware river. No more desirable place could hav been selected, even in this most delightful part of the state. Visitors will be conveyed from the Union depot to the grounds free of charge; while it is probable that the trains of the Kansas Central will also stop at the grounds. Among the speakers already engaged are Mrs. H. S. Lake, Chairman Finance Committee, N. L. L.; W. F. Peck, of Chicago; Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel and Judge Krekel, of Kansas city; J. E. Remsburg, of Atchison; C. W. Stewart, of Indiana; Prof. D. C. Seymour, of Kansas, and Judge Hagaman, editor of the Kansas Blade. Ex-Governor Chas. Robinson will also be with us. All of these ladies and gentlemen are well known to the Liberal public and need no indorsement of ours to secure for them a hearing wherever they may speak. Of course Prof. W. F. Peck will lead in the musical department, ably sustained by fine talent; and we can assure our readers who hav not heard Prof. Peck that they cannot afford to fail to attend the Valley Falls Camp-Meeting, on this account alone. The facilities for camping are excellent, and we hav no doubt that hundreds will avail themselvs of this opportunity to pass a few pleasant days beside the murmuring streams in the forest glades. Arrangements will be made with the hotels and private families to accommodate the friends at the lowest possible rates. We hope and intend to organize a state League. Such an organization is much needed here in Kansas, and we are pleased to say that we hav received much encouragement on this point since we first proposed a rehabilatation of the state League. We are greatly gratified at the earnest help and ready co-operation which we are receiving from the Liberals of Valley Falls and vicinity. They all seem desirous of making the proposed meeting a complete success. At a later date we shall inform the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER concerning reduced rates on the railroads and at the hotels, and giv them other items of interest in connection with the meeting."

Communications.

Duty of the Hour.

The time has come when something more is necessary than the work of the Iconoclast. It is not enough to demolish the old idols, and expose the iniquity, inconsistencies, and absurdities of the Christian religion. The world is outgrowing the silly fables and monstrous doctrins begotten of the age of darkness, superstition, and ignorance, and is yearning for something more consistent, more reliable—something purer, higher, holier.

Our duty and our labor of to-day is to faithfully liv out and cultivate the needed back-bone, to modestly but fearlessly avow our convictions, reform our individual bad habits, rectify wrongs, and rid ourselvs of the mistakes of the past with all possible dispatch; earnestly cultivating under all circumstances a spirit of tolerance, gentleness, and fraternity toward all; and while holding aloft the banner of Freethought, so conduct, in every relation of life, that we can insure respectful consideration for the views and principles we advocate. Above all, by a spirit of genuin self-sacrifice and labor, giv evidence of the sincerity of our desire to increase the knowledge, prosperity, and happiness of all around us.

The lamented Bennett said: "We hav reason to rejoice that the progress the world has made is great as it is, considering the impediments and difficulties it has had to encounter, and the great mass of ignorance, superstition, and wrong it has had to contend with. Light is breaking in—the myths of olden times are all one after another giving way, and in due time, if we steadily pursue our course, and keep our face toward the goal of truth, the full effulgence of the genial sun of reason, science, and devotion to humanity will ultimately illume our pathway."

To attain this desideratum, we must steadily pursue our course, be not alone progressiv but aggressiv. The advance of Liberalism would be wonderfully accelerated if all truth seekers were like the lamented Bennett, more zealous for the progress of truth, universal mental liberty, and the best good of humanity, than of any pet hobby or ism. We all should realize, as did that great model truth seeker, the necessity and duty to make real, earnest, self-sacrificing effort to shed abroad the light of truth for the benefit of others.

The time of submission to the dictates of church prelates, of slavish obedience to the whims and decrees of Mother Church and Mrs. Grundy, is past. The time for resistance, for commencing in earnest the aggressiv war for our rights and mental liberty, has arrived. We must awake, arise, and report for duty. The circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER and other Liberal papers should be doubled ere the year closes. The tracts and leaflets giving scientific facts and advocating the principles of Liberalism should be scattered like autumn leaves. Pamphlets and books, all the best Freethought literature, should be available for the use of Liberals, and to loan to interested friends and neighbors. Those of moral worth and available talent, capable of becoming able exponents of Liberal principles, should be sought out, induced to enter the lecture field, and be liberally sustained.

Every honest heart rejoices when others are made free. If we would share the glory of the victory, let us bear part of the burden of the warfare.

We need more energetic, systematic action, both individual and collectiv.

The New York State Freethinkers' Convention is to be held at Corinthian Academy of Music, Rochester, commencing Wednesday, August 29th, and continuing five days, ending Sept. 2d.

There will be convened the most able and devoted exponents of Liberalism. Matters of momentous interest to rationalistic progress and humanity will come before the convention. The earnest, hearty, practical, actual co-operation of every honest-hearted truth seeker and Liberal of the state of New York and vicinity is required.

The convention will counsel, devise, and seek to perfect plans for more efficient individual labor, and the united, triumphant, onward march of the whole army of Freethought and Reform. The assembly will be one memorable in the cause of Liberalism, and will giv a mighty impetus to the car of rationalistic progression. Remember this convention is for the individual benefit and encouragement of each and every one who favors liberty of conscience and would defend their birthright from the crushing power, the usurpations and intolerance, of fanaticism, bigotry, and superstition.

In union is strength; numbers giv confidence. It is a duty we owe to each other and the cause to be present. An opportunity is here afforded to test our devotion to the principles we profess. What though attendance at the convention will occasion some inconvenience, some loss, some outlay, expense not easily tc be afforded. Nothing worth having is attained without effort. Think of the heroic sacrifices made by the pioneers of Liberalism, but for whose self-denial the holding of such a convention had been an impossibility; every advocate of Freethought so assembling would hav been liable to the dungeon, the torture, and the stake.

Think, too, of the vast amount of time, money, and energy so freely expended by Christians in perpetuating darkness, bigotry, and superstition. Shall Liberals begrudge a tithing for the cause of science, truth, and freedom? Surely none but chronic hobby-riders, confirmed one-idea cranks, and those incongruent monstrosities, stingy Liberals, will remain away.

Ample time is afforded. Let us make our arrangements to attend now, and use every effort to induce our most fair-minded and intelligent friends and neighbors to accompany us. Our most indefatigable and efficient secretary, Green, has secured reduced rates of railway fare and board. The simple announcement that he has the matter in charge is most sufficient evidence that everything possible will be done to insure the greatest possible amount of instruction, comfort, and enjoyment. His arduous duties are materially lightened by the proffered assistance and liberal contributions of the best business men of the city.

Come up to the help of humanity against the mighty! Let the prophecy of our noble Bennett hav free course, run and be glorified. Come that you may be better enabled to keep pace with the rationalistic progress of the age, "steadily pursue our course, and keep our face toward the goal of truth, so that the full effulgence of the sun of reason, science, and devotion to humanity shall illumin our pathway." And let all the people say, Amen.

Rochester, N. Y. CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

On with Thorough Reform.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I cheer you in your readiness to be the first in publishing new views; and second Mrs. Slenker's measure for woman suffrage. But I urge that universal suffrage for all should be exercised in voting direct for law and not for candidates, who seek offices as easy means for a living, with the power of increasing their salaries, while they do nothing to aid others to liv easy as themselvs. As they are trained by the shape of surrounding institutions in ignorance of the true principles of rights, as well as those clamoring for the erroneous practice of suffrage, all should stop and ascertain the truth before voting for it.

Any partial advance of a principle may be practiced, but the thorough measure of reform should be kept in view to promote its more rapid progress toward the thorough establishment of the true system of society. But while we only operate upon ignorant office seekers, it will require longer ages to reach the reconstructed moral worldom.

I suggest that a short cut should be taken to reach the goal of civilization and happiness, by instructing all in a neighborhood to make an agreement to survey out their lands into townships six miles square, and subdivide them into forty-acre tracts—each one to an heir. And then agree among themselvs to hold them in separate, equal, and entailed ownership, with the privilege of only exchanging them for each other.

Then let all mark their boundaries by graded roads, with clumped forest trees next to them, fruit trees next, and then all the central portions should be cultivated in vegetables. With every forty-acre tract thus planted throughout, any region would giv vistas that would collect the wind and turn a wind and electric mill, with a barn combined, and grind out all fruits and cereals, pump up water for culinary purposes and irrigation, and develop the electric light to all the houses around; and thus make a rural city of the whole earth of mingled houses and farms.

Any owner of a piece of wooded land near New York city might clear out the central portion and soon make a model farm on this plan, and thus start a specimen farm for a reconstructed world.

Or any one, having the land cleared of all vegetation, could rear specimens of all kinds of forest and fruit trees and shrubs, as the soil would suit, and exhibit a still more complete model farmstead.

This laying off the whole country into states, townships, and farmsteads, would enable all to vote in person directly for the law, instead of candidates; so as to abolish office-holding governments and their officers, and establish the true system of the moral world, as Copernicus, Bruno, Galileo, Kepler, and Newton did the planetary worlds.

LEWIS MASQUERIER.

No Trust for a Departed Soul.

Mrs. Margaret Gilman, a few days before her death, in August last, at the age of 85 years, gave $2,300 belonging to her to Henry McArdie, with the direction and upon the condition that after her death and the death of her husband, who was then over 90 years of age, he should use the money, in the first place, to pay the funeral expenses and erect a suitable monument to their memories, and in the second place, to hav masses said by a Roman Catholic priest for the repose of their souls.

James Gilman survived his wife about two months, and both died intestate. Michael Gilman, as next of kin to James Gilman, took out letters of administration on his estate, and brought suit in the Superior Court against McArdie to hav the trust declared null and void and to compel the payment of the money. Judge Freedman decided on Monday, the 2d, that the trust is void. After saying that it would be held void in the English courts as a superstitious use or on general principles of public policy, he continues:

"In the United States, where there is no established state religion, where all religious opinions are free and the right to exercise them is secured to the people by constitutional guarantees, there is no such statute and no such policy, and the doctrin of superstitious uses enforced by the courts of England is against the spirit of our institutions. It is a fundamental principle of our law that a man may do with his own as he pleases, provided he does not violate the law or devote his property to an immoral purpose. It remains to be seen whether the trust is invalid for any reason known to law or equity as administered in this country.

"It clearly cannot be upheld as a trust for a charitable use. A charity must be a gift for the promotion of science or learning or useful knowledge or for the relief of the sick, lame, or infirm, or for the relief or redemption of prisoners or captivs, or for the building or repairing of bridges. In short, a charity is a gift for a general public use, extending to the poor as well as to the rich, which is free from any personal, private, or selfish taint. The disposition made by Mrs. Gilman of her money cannot be brought within this definition.

"Nor can it be said that such disposition created a trust for a pious use. Such a trust consists of a gift for the dissemination of moral or religious teaching, or for the promotion of public worship or morality.

"The difficulty with the defendant's case is that the trust sought to be created by Mrs. Gilman is no trust at all known to law or equity, because there is no beneficiary or cestui que trust in existence or capable of coming into existence under the trust. In general, any person who is capable in law of taking an interest in property may, to the extent of his legal capacity, and no further, become entitled to the benefits of the trust. In this case the beneficiaries are both dead and beyond the reach of human law. Their souls are intended as the beneficiaries and the money is to be expended for masses for the repose of their souls. But the soul of one who has departed this life is incapable of taking an interest in the property left behind, and is in no sense subject to the jurisdiction of any legal tribunal. A court of equity protects the rights of the living. It cannot extend its jurisdiction to beings which cannot be apprehended within the boundaries of the realm."

In conclusion the judge says:

"The plaintiff is entitled to judgment declaring the invalidity of the trust, and adjudging the defendant liable to account for all monies still in his hands. As to all payments made by the defendant in good faith he is entitled to claim protection. Upon the question of costs, counsel may be heard at the time of the settlement of the findings."

A Close Alliance Recommended.

From the Banner of Light.

Nothing in this world is to be held stable and secure where the rule is that of ceaseless change. So we are not to think our noble Constitution wholly safe from the invasions of those who fancy they were born to improve it by lessening its scope and fettering its free operation. The Universe, of San Francisco, reminds us that the Catholic church openly assails our common school system and has its hands on every state treasury; while the Protestant church, true to its origin, seeks to enforce sectarian Sunday laws and kindred sumptuary legislation. It labors to place the Bible in the public schools; and not content with this, it openly attempts to so amend the Constitution of the United States as to recognize a sectarian God and acknowledge Jesus Christ as "the ruler of nations." The National Reform Association was organized expressly to carry out this scheme of bigotry, and it proved powerful enough to lack but two votes of carrying it through the United States Senate. It is well enough known that this God-in-the-Constitution party has activ agencies employed to push this measure through Congress at its earliest opportunity.

Nor do its speakers and writers seem to doubt, if we are to trust the sincerity of their open announcements, that they will ultimately succeed in their efforts. To meet and thwart the work of these determined twin enemies of our free Constitution, the Universe calls for an immediate and close alliance of Spiritualists, Freethinkers, and Jews, who, however much they may differ on some points, are in reality one in opposition to the rule of "infallibility" and a sectarian God. It makes the appeal: "Let us be united. Let us act sensibly, broadly, grandly, as becomes rational men. The glorious result will be 'liberty for man, woman, and child,' and a free republic as enduring as humanity itself." The appeal is one worthy of instant heeding. The enemy is sleepless in his efforts to undermine our chartered freedom. Professing to desire but larger rights on the one hand, and to demand a guarantee for a surer morality, with expressions of a higher reverence on the other, the real purpose is to obtain joint control of the fundamental law on which our civil and religious freedom rests, and use it for the benefit of sects instead of defending it for the spread of the largest possible human liberty.

THE Rev. Joseph Cook wants to reform American journalism, break its neck, and choke its sensational utterances. Example, Joseph, is better than precept. Break thy own neck first, and then perhaps the New York Tribune may follow suit.—Post.

Letters from Friends.

THE SPIR.TUAL CRAZE.

CINCINNATI, O., June 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The wild raving of that Spiritualistic sophist, A. Noe, is something shocking and amazing. Who but a crazed character could indulge in such a string of statements and unnatural impossibilities. The obscene phases peculiar to this system of Spiritualism stamp it with slime, filth, and smut. No lady of decent or modest mind could demoralize herself by reading such indelicate slush. It's unfit for publication, and no genuin moralist would be guilty of such an issue.

I am truly thankful I am not a Spiritualist. I would hav to hide my face in shame. Giv me cold Materialism a thousand times in preference to heated lust.

No more arguments for me with any obscenist, Spiritual or otherwise. I trust Dr. Trevitt will reply. T. WINTER.

KALAMAZOO, June 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of June 23d there appeared quotations from a book by John W. Truesdell, claiming to be the bottom facts concerning the science of Spiritualism. The author, by his base insinuations against the character of the well-known medium, Dr. Henry Slade, places himself in a position to be called a falsifier by those who hav known Dr. Slade for the last twenty-five years to be a truthful, honest man. To differ in opinion on any or all subjects is but human, but to malign the reputation and misrepresent the acts of another for the sake of a few dollars that may be gained by the sale of the book is coming down to the level of the Bible-God, or the other fellow of hoofs and horns. No amount of lies—even told by John W. Truesdell—will convince those acquainted with Dr. Slade that he is a fraud and trickster. L. S. BURDICK.

BURTON, June 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: "Answers to Christian Questions" is a stunner surely, and should be read by all. I tried to persuade a parson to read it, but he declined, stating that he would "never read no such trash." I then told him I wanted him to read it to see how the Rev. Whitehead got Bennett down, and how clearly he proved the "sacred truths." With a startled but satisfied look, he exclaimed, "Let's hav it, then." He read it through, and handed it to me to-day without comment. I asked him if Whitehead did not do his work well. A response was not given, but he passed on as if some urgent business was ahead.

I think this is a good way to get their eyes open. Not one in fifty can otherwise be induced to read the proofs against their pet theory; but, once started in, curiosity leads them on, and thus their eyes are opened. I am going to adopt this strategy to get them in harness. H. B. JONES.

NEW YORK, July 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your editorial a statement that while Mr. Andrews is learned and profound, he is obscure and wordy in statement. I hav listened for years to Mr. Andrews's teaching, and hav always found that when he talked about those things that I was trained into the power of comprehending his language was pre-eminently clear; and in those things (and they were many) which seemed to be clothed in obscurity, it was a matter of undevelopment in myself that lent the obscurity; for when I had gone a little farther and knew more, the comprehension came to me. I am led to think that others would find the same light by pursuing the same course.

Then, too, a certain class of people hav been in the habit of saying that of him while in a blind state, and, becoming prejudiced, continue to utter the old complaint (parrot-like) after they hav really the capacity to understand. MRS. E. A. FREEMAN.

GLEN HALL, June 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My sense of right has upraided me for my neglect in payment for your exceptional paper, and I am willing to make amends by payment of interest on it. Please find inclosed $5, which apply to my subscription as far as it will justly reach. Then shut down on me, as I think that would serve me about right. One rule of right for men, God, or devils alike is all I know or wish to practice, and, even under existing circumstances, is almost more than I can practice to my fullest convictions; and knowing or believing we all are more the creatures of circumstances than "free agents" and forced by those circumstances to do what our sense of right disapproved of—such as least seems to be my fix just now—because I am a farmer, one of the most abject callings in the world, full of hard work and poor pay, by which we are robbed of the pleasures and enjoyments of life; a Liberal, and Greenbacker, which is unpopular and has its attached odium, I am led to believe life is an antagonism of good and evils, right and wrong, and, in short, that I am unfavorably circumstanced and hav my sense of right too often brought in conflict therewith. Please excuse my complaint, as I had not thought to hav thus written, but will send it if there is nothing in it but the $5, which you will please use as directed, and serve me as I deserve. Truly yours in the fullest sense your many subscribers hav expressed themselvs.

ROBT. B. LAMBORN.

VINELAND, May 23, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been waiting to see if some abler pen than mine would not answer what I consider the most illogical arguments that ever appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The grand fallacy of the Spiritualists is the assumption that life is a thing. Whereas, if they would look with clear eyes they would see that life is not a thing, but the action of a thing. Nor is thought a thing, but it is the action of the brain. And I brand the assertion of Mr. Noe as utterly false when he says, speaking of a dead man: "There is the body all intact. There is the brain, but it don't think; there are the limbs, but they don't move." Now, I say that the reverse is the truth; that the body of a dead man is not intact. Was there nothing the matter with D. M. Bennett's body when he died? Mr. Noe talks nonsense or worse. And his assertion that there is life before there is an organization, is also untrue. There is not in all nature an example of life apart from organized matter.

And now I will tell Mr. Noe what it is that animates this gross body. And to make it clear, we will take for illustration an egg. Put an egg in a cool place, and what will become of it? In time it will decay. But place it under the body of a living hen, and in three weeks it will become a living thing. Now, what has done all this? Simply heat. It is heat that animates all living things. We know that living things are produced from eggs, man included. I would ask Mr. Noe, Where is the egg deposited that produces the spirit that he says leaves man at death? How does this gross body produce so refined a thing. Does Mr. Noe say that all animals liv and think without soul, but that man can neither liv nor think without one? P. ROTHWELL.

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 2, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I read with much interest the war of words between the rival philosophers, S. P. Putnam and S. P. Andrews. It is to be hoped that while the Titans are hurling mountains of wisdom at each other, the small fry may be able to pick up a few stones with sermons in them, and after the smoke of the battle has cleared away, be better able to see the distinction between mysticism and knowledge.

Ever since I worked my way out of the jungle of superstition called the church, I hav been endeavoring to get clear ideas of the points of the compass, my correct latitude and longitude, and hav been obliged to be very careful in selecting my instruments and choosing my guides. Dearly bought experience warned me to be suspicious of all would-be professional guides doing business under the seductiv titles of Inspiration, Intuition, Transcendentalism, and Idealism.

I never could quite banish from my mind the Scotch layman's definition of metaphysics—"When the body wha hears dinna ken what the body wha spaks means, and the body wha speaks dinna ken what he means himsel, that's metaphysics." And I am somehow haunted by the fear that the cannie Scot's definition may be applicable to—dare I say it?—Universology. In speaking of the origin of knowledge or genesis of consciousness, Mr. Andrews says: "It is not true that I say that mind is first, or that he says that matter is first, when we both say that both are equally first."

This may be true of the product of the factors—the me and the not-me—knowledge, but is it true of the factors themselvs? Will Mr. Andrews state definitly which was first in point of time, the ego or the non-ego? Did not the outward universe exist before there was a human mind to cognize it?

No doubt, like Mr. Putnam, I am a little inclined to "slide away from subtle ideas," but, like Boz, "what I want is facts."

I am fully aware of the apparent officiousness of obtruding myself upon the attention of the learned disputants, but, as THE TRUTH SEEKER kindly intimates that their articles are published for our benefit, I, for one, desire the subtle idea held still long enough for me to capture it.

Appreciativly yours, HARRY HOOVER.

JEFFERSON CITY, June 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: An article in relation to the notorious "Russell law" of Ohio, in your issue of the 23d inst., causes me to drop a few lines. I am a young man, 27 years old, and since my childhood thoroughly imbued with the ideas and principles of the Republican party, and the "party of great moral ideas" has always received my support, though it has constantly encroached upon the mental and personal liberties of its best adherents (among them notably the German element), and thousands who would prefer, like myself, to join a party where we might enjoy these liberties, cannot go to the Democratic party to find such relief; and why? because, although it is in some things very liberal (notably liquor traffic), yet it is essentially the party of the Romish church, as is evidenced by its press, all of which upon close scrutiny clearly shows its worship of that monster.

There are ominous mutterings from the turbulent Atlantic to the beryl waters of the Pacific portending the overthrow of the Republican party, and if that occurs, the Democratic party, being so long famished, will lend a willing ear to the guiles of the churches throughout to increase its power. This is what we hav to fear, consequently we cannot join the latter, for to do so would be "jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire." The question arises, What are we to do? I am not competent to enlighten my fellow-man on this important subject, but suggestions are sometimes fruitful of much good, We hav a goodly number of men in our ranks who can lead us with honor to themselvs and lasting benefits to mankind. Let them take hold of this vital question. We, as Liberals, must not keep out of politics, a thing we are too prone to do. As churches take unbounded interest therein, as is witnessed by such legislation as the "Russell law" and others ad infinitum. Indeed, therein lies their very existence. Now let us wake up to our necessity; let our greatest and best men, such as Col. Ingersoll and other Liberal potiticians and statesmen, pay attention to this matter and it will be but a short time until we can hav a minority party composed of all shades, Materialists, Spiritualists, etc., which can control legislation in so far as to keep out sect and class legislation of all kinds. Call the party "Liberal" or "Independent," but let us try to assert our rights, for I thing with the rapid increase in our ranks, it cannot be far in the future that it will come to a clash between the two elements, i. e., church and Liberal.

Hoping my feeble effort may bring to the subject able pens who can sway the minds of the people and be productiv of much good,

I am, A PROGRESSIST.

"HARD WORDS"—TO WHOM ARE WE INDEBTED FOR THEIR USE?

HELENA, June 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Looking through the columns of the Christian Union my eyes rested on this heading, "The Hard Words." Glancing over the article, I noted down the following: "The prevalence of the vice of profanity in our country is really alarming. Ladies on public highways and in public conveyances are subject to having their sensibilities shocked by it to an extent that is painful in the extreme. In like manner children and youths are made liable to having their souls scarred by oaths flying around them, which are literally darts of the devil. Damage may often thus be done to the jewels of the homes of our country, compared to which the loss sustained by the parents of Charley Ross will one day be seen to hav been slight. A contagion may thus take effect which had far better hav been small-pox or scarlatina."

Now, it seems to me that a man whose mentality had reached to such a point as to cause him to write such stuff, will soon be in a condition to giv us a tragedy equal to Freeman or Guiteau. Men like this writer never hav one condemnatory word to offer when some rascal absconds with the funds intrusted to his keeping by poor widows and factory girls. Neither are the crimes of the midnight marauder or of Jesse James to be compared (in his estimation) to those of the person who is in the habit of using "cuss-words." The writer seems to think that all that is profane consists of a few words found in the Bible, such as God, Christ, Jesus, hell, damn, devil, etc. They never think of adding to the list: By ginger! Judas priest! by crackey! by Jove! confound it! Sam Patch! by golly! holy Moses! stars alive! condemn it! and a regiment of others equally as useless and profane as the few words that they would hav us believe stagnate their pious blood when they hear them used by, to them, the sinners. However ungentlemenly or useless such words may seem to be, they cannot in any sense be looked upon as being criminal.

But why is it that these fellows are all so badly shocked when they here those few words used by some one outside the pulpit? I cannot understand, unless those few words are their exclusiv patent. Come to giv the subject a more due consideration, I think that is the only hypothesis by which it can be explained. When we take into account the fact that the Christian religion is the only religion in the world that damns mankind, the wonder is that every one don't swear; and when this lunatic talks about "souls scarred," let him bear in mind that it is himself and his religion that brought all that kind of profanity of which he complains into the world. No one ever thought of being damned or sent to hell till his religion taught it to him. And instead of little children learning it in public places, they become as familiar with it as with their alphabet before they leave the nursery. Mothers that are pious tell them before they can scarcely lisp a syllable that if they do so or so God will damn them and take them to hell. They hav not forgotten these lessons, and as soon as they go out to play with other children, and one of their little playmates offends, they do not stop to giv the full explanation of their pious teachings, but abbreviate and say, "God damn you to hell," etc.; and if it is such a crime, you Christians are responsible for it. Now, suppose you fellows giv us a rest on the profanity dodge for a while, and try to use your talent—such as you hav—in making honest men among your numbers. Try to see, if you hav brains enough, that when Deacon Smith swindled poor Jones out of his last cow it was a little worse than cursing, and that when Parson Hughes perjured himself in a scandal case, he should hav been censured a little more than Jim Brown for damning his jackass.

W. P. BROOKS, M.D.

HARVARD, June 27, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Please find $6.50 inclosed, for which send me the four volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." I wish to make a present of them to one of my friends, for I consider them very valuable books. There is more information to be obtained in those four books than any ten books that I ever read before. ABRAM CARMACK.

WARRENTON, June 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3.00 for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I belong to the Presbyterian church, but hav lost all faith in the Christian religion. I hav read the Bible through, but always thought it contained the most vulgarity and impossibilities of any book I ever read. I hav read a few numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that were handed me, and like the paper so well I thought I would subscribe.

Hoping you success, I remain,

A. L. BUTTS, P. M.

GRASS VALLEY, CAL., June 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am more than obliged to you for continuing THE TRUTH SEEKER after my time had expired. I intend to be a paying subscriber as long as liv, which I can hardly expect to be very many years with poor health at the age of 62; but I derive more pleasure from THE TRUTH SEEKER than any other paper, and I take several. The print, too, suits me as well as its bold truths.

I inclose $1.50 for six months and 25 cents for "Answers to Christian Questions," by D. M. Bennett. I shall send $1 for the Monument Fund, but cannot do it to-day.

Yours, with best wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER,

A. S. KELLOGG.

VINELAND, July 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I send $5 for my paper. Who would not hav a wife ten years his junior to help get him out of a scrape, not only, but after writing this letter, advancing the money to pay for a paper overdue most two years, and then read the paper to me when it comes (unless the print is large and clear) with eyes that hav done service for eighty-one years, and full of business to keep them working? First, I am at work starting a steam manufactory of planes. Next, I am trying to start an incinerating furnace here to purify the human body immediately after its separation from the spirit, and I find many men, and almost as many women, who sympathize with me in this movement, and many more women physicians according to their numbers hav unqualifiedly spoken in its favor.

Here I read what I hav written to said wife, Portia. "Well," she says, "you did not tell all you are doing." "What else?" says I. "You did not tell you are getting up a Gage Family Home." So I will add that we hav got such an institution, incorporated under the laws of this state, this past winter, and we hope to be able to start an industrial school under its auspices, where our children and our neighbors' children can be taught from birth until death to cultivate love, harmony, wisdom, and all uses and virtues, and to shun ignorance, superstition, intolerance, and vice, and through our shop work furnish employment for many scholars, and start them with a valuable trade for a livelihood.

JOHN GAGE.

---

223 NORTH 12TH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA, July 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I notice, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 30th, the letter of Mr. J. L. Clemmer, of Boston, asking "Why Liberals cannot form a company for stock-raising, etc." The suggestion is a good one and would pay the investors a large dividend. I hav been all over the state of Texas, and among the stock men, and thoroughly informed myself regarding the business, its risks, and profits. I would propose that the Liberals form a company, incorporate under the laws of the state of New York, with the general headquarters at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, as the most central point; the capital stock to be $50,000 in shares of $10.00 each, the original subscribers to hav their stock at $5.00.

If sufficient capital can be obtained to make a proper start, I am confident that—with judicious management—inside of three years the stock would be at a premium and in five years pay a dividend of at least forty per cent per annum. As a nucleus for such a company I can offer two parties, both stanch Liberals, who own 640 acres of land each, and adjoining, making 1,280 acres personally selected, well watered, and particularly adapted to sheep and goat raising, in the healthiest portion of the state of Texas, where rheumatism and lung complaints are unknown—near post-office, market, etc. They will put in the land and take the stock of such a company in full payment. I can also induce others to invest. I would be pleased to communicate with Mr. Clemmer and all who desire to go into such an enterprise. I should propose that a certain percentage of the profits be set aside to aid in the Liberal cause. Yours, etc. C. H. REED, M.D.

OPEN LETTER TO W. T. MINCHEN.

SEATTLE, W. T., June 23, 283.

DEAR SIR: Dr. J. L. York handed me a letter of inquiry from you, requesting me to answer, which I cheerfully do, as you seem to be on the Liberal platform.

Your first question is for the disadvantages. 1st. The land in the western—our part of the territory—is covered with a vast growth of timber, worth millions, which is being cut off, sawed, and shipped to all parts of the world; but the land has to be cleared for agriculture.

2d. It rains perhaps one-third of the time in winter, causing the grass to keep green the year round.

3d. Schools we hav one, centrally located, which cost $28,000; and four others which cost some $3,000 each. Then we hav the Territorial University here in Seattle, with an average of 100 pupils. We hav just sold four lots in the central part of the city, too near the large house to be used for school purposes, for $30,000, to be applied toward building two other free school houses, one in the northern and one in the southern portion of the city.

4th. Relating to Liberals. We hav a Liberal League with about 100 members, and hav had regular Sunday evening meetings for the last six months.

5th. Thunder and lightning? No; there is scarcely anything of the kind. Once in a great while you may hear a distant growl.

6th. I should put the temperature at from 22 to 72. There are days when the mercury may run up to 90; I understand it has been known to reach 100 in the sun, but never below zero, and the extremes are only for a short time. The nights are always cool. One seldom sees a linen suit in Seattle. I will explain why it is not hot or cold at Seattle: There is a 20-foot tide coming up to our wharf every twenty-four hours. The water when leaving the gulf stream outside the strait of Fuca is always at a temperature of 50 to 52, which in flowing up the sound at a depth of twenty feet does not heat or cool very much; so you see when it is cloudy we are like we were in a spring-house. It cannot freeze; we never see an icicle from rain. What are called the trade winds, coming from the south nearly all winter and from the north during the summer, make the winters warm and the summers cool—too cool to raise Indian corn. Other kinds of grain are produced in abundance; wheat, forty bushels to the acre; barley, forty to sixty; oats, 80 to 100, the berry being as large again as in Iowa. Dr. York's lectures at Seattle hav been well attended, the large hall—34x100—being filled every Sunday evening. The doctor lectured at Tacoma, and had a good audience. Tacoma may be the terminus, but Seattle will do the business, as the Canada branch will terminate here, and we will connect with the Columbia river road in a few months, the roadbed being nearly ready for the rails. The freight and passenger rates are to be the same to each place.

The majority of Seattle's citizens are Americans from all parts of the United States, and the population is about 10,000. An ocean steamer arrives every five days, and brings from 200 to 500 each trip. Tacoma has a population of about 4,000, with a much smaller floating population than Seattle; in short, the passenger list to Seattle equals that to all the ports of the sound, including Victoria, B.C.

And now, as I am a citizen of Seattle, I will let the doctor say which is the better place.

D. M. CRANE.

MR. EDITOR: What Father Crane has said in reply to our friend Minchen, of Iowa, has my fullest indorsement for truth, so far as I am acquainted with this country. As to the relativ locations of Seattle and Tacoma, and their future prospects, I hav determined in favor of Seattle by the purchase of five city lots to-day in that place. I look upon the growth of this city during three years past as marvelous; in fact, the entire Northwest is receiving a great influx of population seeking new homes.

Yours for truth, DR. J. L. YORK.

PATERSON, July 2, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2.50 for continued subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

As to the Liberal League of this place, they are joined to their church idols to such an extent that the League has had to succumb to orthodox intolerance, and there is no hope or chance for its resurrection unless its charter is transferred to the more Liberal element of the city, the Germans, as they are a class that will face the music, and are not given over to a fawning sycophancy to church power.

Paterson can boast of its exclusiv orthodoxy, as there is not a Liberal church organization in the place. It can also boast of its being completely destitute of philanthropic men. It has neither a public library nor park, and there is apparently no disposition on the part of its moneyed class to elevate the condition of the laboring class, but more of a desire to subjugate it, and as this can be more easily accomplished through the superstition and bigotry of the church, they are disposed to giv abundantly of their means to maintain its supremacy.

We hav here a large class that would no more affiliate with the absurd dogmas, creeds, and human contrivances of the so-called Christian church than Huxley, Darwin, Peter Cooper, or the many other great scientific lights and philanthropists of former days. But unfortunately the golden calf, or money god, gets the better of their judgment, and causes them to become destitute of all manly principle by giving all their means to feed and fatten these sectarian monsters of tyranny and oppression. O Paterson, how often would I hav gathered you under the wing of religious liberty, but you would not! The great orb of light is fast departing from you, while others are gathering in its effulgent rays of universal humanitarianism. Go on in your mad career of idolatry and subserviency to church power till you are laid low in the mire of serfdom, and not till then will you be able to realize that it is the great work of Liberalism, and that only, that can giv you a higher and more progressiv order of society.

The excited discussions of the Material and Spiritual divisions of the Liberalists are uncalled for, and very uncharitable on the part of the Materialists.

I inclose the following article on this subject, which if you think worthy of publishing you are at liberty to do so.

SPIRITUAL AND MATERIAL.

Science is making rapid strides, and in nothing has it made greater progress than in what is denominated Spiritualism. Science no longer disputes the reality of mesmeric and phychological force. Materialists assert this spiritual force a fraud, visionary, etc. Hav they ever proved it such? If they hav not, they should no longer pronounce it a fraud. Heretofore the church has been the great obstacle to the development of spirit power, but a glorious future is dawning upon us, and the infamous decrees of the church can no longer sway by putting to death and banishing from society Spiritualists, under the garb of witchcraft, evil spirits, etc. Spiritualism has proved there is a force outside of the physical or material, which may govern or control both the animate and inanimate. This force, the electric or spiritual, exists in both the embodied and disembodied. Is it at all strange, then, that by a concentration of this power, inanimate objects move in opposition to the law of gravitation? When I cease to be possessed of this power I can no longer raise my hand, and the raising of the hand is not the physical, but the spiritual power. The physical is nothing of itself but a mass of matter. Invest it with the spiritual, and it assumes life. Can a life-giving power die? It cannot; but the conditions may be such that it no longer exists in the body of matter. But can not that power act and exist in a more ethereal form? Materialists assert that as the matter becomes divested of life power the life power dies with it. Chemistry proves matter may be extracted from the invisible. While I hav had no visible demonstrations of spirit power disembodied, I cannot determin that others do not hav; every one may not be so constituted as to draw that power to them. The tiny bird soars high in the air, while the door-yard fowl hardly reaches the eaves of the housetop. Let not the Materialist that hardly reaches the housetop envy the Spiritualists for soaring into realms to him unknown.

No argument can prove or establish the theory that a life-giving power dies with the matter which it givs life to, or in which it is embodied. But here will arise the more momentous question, viz., does the life after passing the embodied state continue in a realization of its former existence? Ah! here's the rub, and there is no human solution of this mystery unless it is through the manifestations of departed spirit power, and with Spiritualism a reality, the mystery would be solved.

Those that hav not received spirit manifestations cannot determin its fraudulency or reality. He that asserts it a fraud must prove it. A belief in Occultism is a belief in Spiritualism, for Spiritualism is Occultism in the disembodied state. These evidences of spirit power are not clothed with any infamous absurdities of former ages, but are in accord with a more natural law, and are evidences of the living present. While we may repudiate all sayings of former ages that are in opposition to natural law, and termed miracles, we cannot cast aside and blind our eyes and senses to facts of the present day, which stand as yet uncontroverted. Spiritual philosophy rises to a higher conception of the unknown power. It sets up no personified gods of war, malicious and revengeful, even to the slaying the first-born of nations. They revere not the fabulous stories of ancient times as inspiration, but rely only on inspiration of their own. They depend not upon another as a savior, but are as a savior to themselvs. They cast aside the idolatries of the church, and acknowledge spirit power as their only idol. Persecution for opinion's sake is not favored among them, for their god is not a teacher of persecution.

This god of the Spiritualists is the universal god that all may worship. It is the god of the civilized and the god of the uncivilized. But the god of barbarism is the Christian God, causing men and women to dye their hands in the blood of their neighbor. Oh, horror of horrors! True civilization cries aloud to stop this damnable career of human slaughter, and stands aghast at the civil strife, woe, misery, infanticide, persecution, and inquisition—a monster rising in its most hideous form to subvert the liberties of nations to its despotic sway and domination. With Catholicism it is to help its own and persecute all others; with Protestantism, to help its own, and curse all others. There is no difference, and the Bible is their assumed infallible law to sustain their infamous decrees. You, the blasphemers of the great controling powers of the universe, bring along your inquisitions!

J. J. HAVILAND.

Life's West Windows.

We stand at life's west windows,
And think of the days that are gone;
Remembering the coming sunset,
We, too, must remember the morn.
But the sun will set, the day will close,
And an end will come to all our woes.

As we watch from the western casements,
Reviewing our happy youth,
We mourn for its vanished promis
Of honor, ambition, and truth.
But hopes will fade, and pride decay,
When we think how soon we must pass away.

We stand at life's west windows,
And turn not sadly away,
To watch on our children's faces
The noontide of sparkling day,
But our sun must set, our lips grow dumb;
And to look from our windows our children come.

Bill Arp's Philosophy.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

It don't pay to get mad about anything, much less about politics. Getting mad cheats a man out of his time. He can lose a day or two days, or even a week, thinking about it, and fretting over it, and that interferes with his business and deranges his digestion, and makes his family unhappy. He had better go dead for a while and come to life again.

Getting mad is the poorest way to get even with an enemy I ever tried. It don't pay worth a cent, and always makes a man lose his own self-respect.

Now a man may get mad with himself for being a fool, and it will do him no harm. In fact, it may do good, for it's a sign of repentance.

I knew a young man to go to a church fair and the girls honey-fugled six dollars out of him, and he went home and undressed and tied one arm to the bed-post and whipped himself with the other, and as he cut himself round the legs he would say: "You go to another church fair! You let them girls fool you out of your money again! You pay ten cents for every fool letter they stick at you! You giv half a dollar for a little dab of ice cream—I'll learn you some sense, I will," and as he talked to himself he kept the switch going lively, and would dance up and down just like he was another fellow. Now that is a good idea.

When a man makes a fool of himself and goes ripping around let him tie himself up and giv himself a good whipping, and then take a fresh start in the morning.

If a man gets into a fight with another man he might accidently get whipped, and then everybody would hear of it, but if he whips himself all by himself it will do more good, and nobody would ever know anything about it.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.

200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

SUBSCRIBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE "PHYSIOLOGIST."

Elmina would like copies of the following Nos. of the New York "Physiologist." June and July (double No.) 1878; April and May (double No.) 1879; Nov. 1878; Aug. and Sept. 1879; June 1879; Jan., Feb., March, April, 1881. If friends will send me these Nos. or either of them I will send copies of "Matrimonial Review," copy for copy in exchange, and be greatly obliged also. Or will send, if preferred, "The Alpha," or "Herald of Industry."
Address ELMINA D. SLENKER,
3t28 Snowville, Va.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

TO MY FRIENDS!

No God, no heaven, no hell!
These books sound their death-knell.

"The Darwins," paper 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.—John's Way, 15 cents.—Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents. These three are Infidel romances.—Studying the Bible, 75 cents.—Specimen copies of Alpha and Herald of Health, 10 cents each.—Four tracts 6 cents. Health Hints, 25 cents.—Diana, A new Theory of Sexual Relations. Sexual Satisfaction in Continence. This book should be read by all married people and by all who contemplate marriage.—Godly Women, showing how the Bible degrades and humiliates women, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.—Private Physiology for Girls, worth five dollars to any woman if she needs health, $1.—Photos: card, 15 cents, imperial, 20 cents. — Crimes of Preachers, 25 cents.—Leaves of Grass. a splendid poem, Shaksperian in style, full of good ideas, $2.—Any other Liberal book you may want at publisher's prices.

Please order them of Elmina as she makes no profits on any of her books save those sold by herself. Address, ELMINA D. SLENKER, 6teow18 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence;" "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles.
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life;
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of
A Scene at the Death-bed of
THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,
Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit-Life. Paper, 20 cents.

After Death; the Disembodiment of Man, The World of Spirit, Its Location, Extent, Appearance, Inhabitants, Customs, Sex and its uses there. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Price, $2.00.

After Dogmatic Theology, What? Materialism, or, a Spiritual Philosophy and Natural Religion. By GILES B. STEBBINS. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Agassiz and Spiritualism: Involving the Investigation of Harvard College Professors in 1857. By ALLEN PUTNAM, author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Spirit Works," "Natty a Spirit," etc. This sterling work combines in itself the characteristics of memoir, essay, and review. The matter considered is of vital interest to the cause of Spiritualism, and readers cannot fail of being pleased with the treatment which Mr. PUTMAN accords to it. Price, 25 cents.

Angel of Horeb. By M. B. CRAVEN. A Critical Review of Biblical Inspiration and Divinity. Paper, 10 cents.

Angel Voices from the Spirit-World. Essays taken indiscriminately from a large amount written under angel influence. By JAMES LAWRENCE, Dial and Transcribing Medium, and Reputed Author. Cloth, pp. 400; $1.00.

An Hour With the Angels; or, A Dream of the Spirit Life. By A. BRIGHAM. Price, 50 cents.

Answers to Charges in General Belief. By Mr. and Mrs A. E. NEWTON. Price, 15 cents.

Armageddon; or, the Overthrow of Romanism and Monarchy. By S. D. BALDWIN. Price, $1.50.

Baptism of Fire. An Autobiographical Sketch. By LUCIFER. Price, 30 cents.

Battle-Ground of the Spiritual Reformation. By S. B. BRITTAN, M.D. The latest and best defense of Spiritualism—at once a text-book and a vindication. An armory from which Spiritualists will draw weapons for years. Price, $2.

Better Views of Living; or, Life According to the Doctrin, "Whatever Is Is Right. By Dr. A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.

Beyond the Breakers. A Story of the Present Day. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. Finely illustrated. This story of village life in the West is, in its narrow and interior meaning, a profoundly spiritual story, through and by whose numberless incidents, scenes, characters, and narrations is illustrated the great truth of spirit-life and communion. Cloth, $1.50.

Beyond the Veil. Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. RANDOLPH, through the mediumship of Mrs. E. H. M'Dougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. Cloth, with steel-plate portrait of P. B. Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Biblical Chronology. By M. B. CRAVEN. Contrasting the Chronological Computations of the Hebrew and Septuagint Versions from Adam to Christ; Critical Essay on the Geographical Location of the Garden of Eden. Paper, 10 cents.

Bible in the Balance. A Text Book for Investigators. The Bible weighed in the balance with history, chronology, science, literature, and itself. With illustrations. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Cloth, $1.50

Bible Marvel-Workers, And the Power which helped or made them perform mighty works and utter inspired words; together with some personal traits and characteristics of prophets, apostles, and Jesus, or New Readings of "The Miracles." By ALLEN PUTNAM. Price, $1.25.

Book on Mediums; or, Guide for Mediums and Invocators. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $1.50.

Buddhism and Christianity Face to Face. By J. M. PEEBLES. A Discussion between a Buddhist priest and an English clergyman. Paper, 25 cents.

Chapters from the Bible of the Ages. Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS. Price, $1.50

Christianity Before the Time of Christ. By M. B. CRAVEN. With Quotations from the Ancient Sages and Fathers, showing the Historic Origin of Christian Worship. Paper, 25 cents.

Christ and the People. By A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.25.

Christ, the Corner-stone of Spiritualism. By J. M. PEEBLES. 10 cents.

Civil and Religious Persecutions in the State of New York. By THOMAS R. HAZARD. Paper, 10 cents.

Claims of Spiritualism. By a Medical Man. Price, 25 cents.

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Clock Struck One, and Christian Spiritualist. Revised and corrected. Being a Synopsis of the Investigations of Spirit Intercourse by an Episcopal Bishop, three Ministers, five Doctors and others, at Memphis, Tenn., in 1855. Also, the opinion of many eminent divines, living and dead, on the subject. Communications received from a number of persons recently. By the Rev. SAMUEL WATSON, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Cloth, $1.00.

Clock Struck Three; Being a Review of "Clock Struck One," and reply to it: and Part Second, showing the Harmony between Christianity, Science, and Spiritualism. By Rev. SAMUEL WATSON. Cloth, $1.50.

Criticism of the Apostle Paul in Defense of Woman's Rights. By M. B. CRAVEN. Price, 25 cents.

Curious Life of P. B. Randolph. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Paper, 60 cents.

Danger Signals; An address on the Uses and Abuses of Modern Spiritualism. By MARY F. DAVIS. Paper, 15 cents.

Death in the Light of Harmonial Philosophy. By MARY F. DAVIS. A whole volume of Philosophical truth is condensed into this little pamphlet. Paper, 15 cents; cloth, 30 cents; cloth, gilt, 50 cents.

Debatable Land Between this World and the Next. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. The main object of this book is to afford conclusiv proof, aside from historical evidence, of immortality. Cloth, $2

Diakkaism; or, Clairvoyant Travels in Hades. By A. GARDNER, of London, Eng. Price, 10 cents.

Dialogues and Recitations, Adapted to the children's progressive lyceums, and other forms of useful and liberal instruction. By Mrs. LOUISA SHEPARD. Paper, 50 cents.

Dissertation on the Evidences of Divine Inspiration. Price, 25 cents.

Defense of Modern Spiritualism. By A. R. WALLACE, F.R.S., with American Preface by EPES SARGENT. Paper, 10 cts.

Discussion. Between Mr. E. V. WILSON, Spiritualist, and Elder T. M. HARRIS, Christian. Subject discussed—Resolved, That the Bible, King James's version, sustains the teachings, the phases, and the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. Price, 10 cents.

Divine Law of Cure. By W. F. EVANS. This treatis is the result of the author's six years of careful research, study, and experience, and makes its appearance at a time when the necessity of the age seems to demand a work of this nature. Cloth, $1.50.

Empire of the Mother over the Character and Destiny of the Race. By HENRY C. WRIGHT. Price, 75 cents.

Experiences of Judge J. W. Edmonds in Spirit-Life. Paper, 30 cents.

Experiences of Samuel Bowles, Late Editor Springfield Republican, in Spirit-Life, or Life as he now sees it. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING. Paper, 20 cents.

Fabulous Tendency of Ancient Authors. By M. B. CRAVEN. 10 cents.

Faiths, Facts, and Frauds of Religious History. By EMMA HARDINGE BRITTEN. Price, 75 cents.

Flashes of Light from the Spirit Land. Through the Mediumship of Mrs. J. H. CONANT. Compiled and arranged by ALLAN PUTNAM. Price, $1.50

Ghost Land; or, Researches into the Mysteries of Occult Spiritism. Illustrated in a series of autobiographical papers, with extracts from records of magical seances, etc. Translated by Mrs. EMMA H. BRITTEN. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50.

Gospel of Nature By SHERMAN and LYON, authors of "The Hollow Globe." Price, $2.00.

Heaven and Hell; or, The Divine Justice Vindicated in the Plurality of Existences. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $2.00.

Higher Aspects of Spiritualism. By M. A. (OXON), author of "Psychography" and "Spirit-Identity." English edition. Blue cloth, in form with "Spirit-Identity" and "Psychography." Price, $1.25.

Hollow Globe; or, The World's Agitator and Reconciler. A Treatis on the Physical Conformation of the Earth. Presented through the organism of M. L. SHERMAN, M.D., and written by WM. F. LYON. Cloth, $2.00.

How to Magnetize; or, Magnetism and Clairvoyance. Paper, 25 cents.

Poetry.

Moodyism.—"Revival Meetings in Boston."

BY LAROY SUNDERLAND.

Moody has a sly, barbarian art,
And these are the weapons he flings;
His arrows for wounding humanity's heart
Are gilt by the notes Sankey sings!

With holiest anger this mountebank swells,
Of his "devils" and hellish hot pain!
He dooms the "sinners" to warmest of hells,
And then Sankey adds his refrain.

Mysticism, too, is the only good soil
In which all his isms will grow,
And hence humanity's beauties they spoil,
And the selfhood of man overflow.

And thus by drilling the human mind
With the most barbaric ideas,
All ignorance human is thereby inclined
By its stupid and credulous fears.

Ideas of what no one ever knew
Are drilled and drilled into the soul.
This is what all the revivalists do
To gain over you their control.

They talk to the ridge-pole with eyes that are closed,
They talk to these very ideas,
Till the ignorant crowd are thereby disposed,
When excited by "faith" and their fears.

"The power" is in what you believe in the most,
And human from first to the last;
You will find the same thing in any lamp-post
If you should but rush 'gainst it fast.

A continual dropping at last wears the stone,
Thus the hardest of flint wears away,
And that mind that the preacher is dwelling upon
Is deceived and is thus led astray.

"Exhortations," so often repeated,
And so drilling the maddening throng;
And ignorant people are cheated,
By his groans, and by Sankey's sweet song.

In this way the "people go mad in crowds,"
When numbers are so much deceived.
They soar in their "visions" above even the clouds,
By the errors which they hav believed!

In the "Crusades," two hundreds of years ago,
This madness was reigning supreme!
Popes, bishops, and churches deluded them so,
All were mad to the greatest extreme.

The "revival power," the "god-head," you see,
Is wholly within an idea;
No matter at all what that notion may be,
If it only brings "faith," "hope," or "fear."

And when these emotions are ruling and strong,
They bind to your souls the unknown!
"Saving faith," drives Christianity's wagon along,
And brings out the tear and the groan!

And, hence, should this "power" be more understood—
The multitudes it has made wild!
And they hav combined in the shedding of blood,
Like Freeman in killing his child.

Our humanity's progress is hampered and checked;
All its best aspirations are chilled;
The mind with the fetters of error is decked,
And by parents their children are killed!

Christians imagin the "evidence" they want!
And the best can imagin the most!
With all of them this is a symbol of cant,
"Saving faith in the great holy ghost!"

And then, we are told, our eternal repose
Upon this "faith" always depends;
And this is the tale, as the gospel yarn goes,
That's preached by this man and his friends!

And what our humanity's always ignored,
From the first blush of time to this day,
While all these delusions are ever deplored,
And the good—they hav thrown it away.

Alas! how can people thus become gulled,
And unto such dogmatists cower?
By Sankey's stale psalms into trances be lulled?
In this "faith" we discover the power.

This is the sorriest sight of them all—
Against selfhood so hideous a crime;
That must our humanity's reason appall,
When at last its effulgence shall shine.

Quincy, Mass., July 4, N.E. 108.

The Almighty Dollar.

From the Toronto Globe.

"Brother Smith, what does this mean?"

"What does what mean?"

"Bringing a nigger to this church."

"I took him into my own pew."

"Your own? Is that any reason why you should insult the whole congregation?"

"But he is intelligent and well educated."

"Who cares for all that?"

"But he is a friend of mine."

"What of that? Must you, therefore, insult the whole congregation?"

"But he is a Christian and belongs to the same denomination."

"What do I care for that? Let him go and worship with his fellow-niggers."

"But he is worth $5,000,000."

"Worth what?"

"Five million dollars."

"Worth $5,000,000! Brother Smith, introduce me."

Correspondence Wanted

I desire to correspond with a few earnest Liberal ladies under 30 years of age. Object, to find a true companion. Address, NATHAN L. VOLNEY, Wheeling, W. Va. 2t28

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney, 324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Balanced. The Infidel's Text Book; comparing some of the best teachings and sayings of the Bible with those of Sages and Philosophers who lived previous to the Authors of the Bible; also a Partial Exposition of its Errors. By GEO. C. DARLING. Price, 50 cents.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound in volumes of 525 pages each—Vols. I., II., III., IV., and V. Each volume containing 525 pages—thirty tracts or more. A Library within themselves of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price. Paper, 60 cents per volume; cloth, $1.00. If the whole set are taken—paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents each.

The Truth Seeker in bound volumes. Vol. I., 25 cents; vol. II., 50 cents; vols. III. and IV., $2 each; vols. V., VI., VII., VIII., and IX., $3 each. The whole set by express for $15.

Voltaire in Exile. Translated from the French of M. GASTINEAU by his son EDMOND GASTINEAU. Being Memoirs of the life of the great writer never before published. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil? A Series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

Which: Spiritualism or Christianity? A discussion between MOSES HULL and REV. W. F. PARKER. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

A Few Days in Athens. By FRANCES WRIGHT. Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion. By BENJAMIN OFFEN, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, $1.

A Modern Symposium. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life. By Frederick Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blackford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward. The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Sir James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Frederick Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton. Utterances never surpassed by writers and all important subjects. Noted for their terse originality. Price, $1.25.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur. Par Pigault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By ZEPA. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World? By G. TOULMAN. 20 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Price, $1.25.

A Short History of the Bible. Being a Popular Account of the Formation and Development of the Canon. By BRONSON C. KEELER. This is a splendid work, showing how the Bible was manufactured by the church and ecclesiastics. Limp cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By GILBERT VALE. 20 cts.

Astro-Theological Lectures. Rev. ROBT. TAYLOR. Price, cloth, $2.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper. Price, 15 cents.

Bhagavad-Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. COCKBURN THOMPSON. Price, $1.75.

Bible in India. Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By LOUIS JACOLLIOT. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Price, $1.50.

Bible Inquirer; or, Key to Bible Investigation. Containing one hundred and forty-eight propositions; with references to the most plain and striking self-contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures. Also one hundred and fifty-two references to the most marvelous occurrences. Each quotation has a short description of its contents. By A. JACOBSON. Price, 15 cents.

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in Other Religions: Being a comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity, considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol. Royal 8vo. 567 pages. Cloth, $4.00.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meanng. It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopedia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

Bible of Humanity. By JULES MICHELET. Translated from the French by V. CALFA. 8vo. cloth, $3. This is a large epic in prose. The artist historian sings the evolution of mankind. He throws brilliant glimpses of light on the long course of events and works which he unfolds.

Bible of Rational Mind and Religion. Rational Religion and Morals. By THOMAS J. VADIEN, M.D., of St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3.

Bible of To-Day. By JOHN W. CHADWICK. This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible. Price, $1.50.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. By KERSEY GRAVES. 35 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

FROM ONE WHOM ALL KNOW.

The Kerner Stylographic Pen is the most convenient, handy, and ever-ready pen I have ever use I've tried innumerable fountain pens, gold pens, and all sorts, from the old quill pen to the stylograp and for utility, satisfaction, and general convenience this excels all the rest.

My son Oscar also prefers it for use in the woolen mill to any other he has tried.

It is pen, ink, and pencil all in one and can be carried in the vest pocket so as to be always ready.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Observe the address: GEORGE MACDONALD,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m2 21 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co.,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations.
290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 21 Clinton Place, New York

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, cents. Sold at this office.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place,
New York city.

THE
GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.

ALSO

THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT,
21 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS. } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shews what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

6-15

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days.

Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

IT is not a little curious that, in all the mythologies of the world, the god and the devil hav been closely connected by the ties of consanguinity. In India the creating and destroying principles were united in the same personage. In Egypt the beneficent and destructiv gods were twin-brothers. In Persia, Ormuzd, the King of Light, and Ahriman or Ahrimanes, the Prince of Darkness, both emanated from the Eternal One. In the Grecian and Roman mythologies, Pluto was the son of a god, as were also Vulcan and Pan. In the Christian mythology, the Devil, if not the offspring of God, was of his direct creation, an honorable member of his household, and was for a long time on the most intimate terms with him.—D. M. Bennett.

COULD we but know that our present lives are working together toward some good end, even an end in no way anthropomorphic, it would be of less consequence whether we were individually to endure. To the dog under the knife of the experimenter, the world is a world of pure evil; yet could the poor beast but understand the alleviation of human suffering to which he is contributing, he would be proud to own that this is not quite true; and if he were also a heroic or Christian dog, the thought would perhaps take away from death its sting. The analogy may be a crude one; but the reasonableness of the universe is at least as far above our comprehension as the purposes of a man surpass the understanding of the dog. Believing, however, though as a simple act of trust, that the end will crown the work, we may rise superior to the question which has here concerned us—(the question of human immortality)—and exclaim, in the supreme language of faith, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." —Fiske's Unseen World. (No. 9, Scientific Series of Truth Seeker Tracts).

AS to immortality, nothing is revealed to me, though many analogies encourage hope in a future existence. If there is no other life, we shall never know our loss in our dreamless sleep; and, if there is a future state, if we hav lived well for this life, we shall be best fitted for another. One world at a time is enough; and, when another comes, it will then be time to take an interest in it.—R. C. Adams.

IT is a contradiction in terms and ideas to call any thing a revelation that comes to us at second-hand, either verbally or in writing. Revelation is necessarily limited to the first communication—after this it is only an account of something which that person says was a revelation made to him; and though he may find himself obliged to believe it, it cannot be incumbent on me to believe it in the same manner, for it was not a revelation made to me and I hav only his word for it that it was made to him.—Paine's Age of Reason.

AULD Orthodoxy lang did grapple,
But now she's got an unco' ripple;
Haste, giv her name up i' the chapel,
"Nigh unto death!"
See how she fetches at the thrapple,
An' gasps for breath!

Enthusiasm is past redemption,
Gaen in a galloping consumption,
Not a' the quacks, w' au their gumption,
Will ever mend her:
Her feeble pulse givs strong presumption,
Death soon will end her.
—Burns.

WHEN I proceed to inquire how Mr. Moody knows that all he says about hell is true, I find a reply. In his sermon he says: "There was a time when I did not believe it, but God revealed it to me." He does not tell us how God "revealed" those horrors to him, but I presume he relies upon a few stale tenets which seem to threaten eternal torments, and of which he has made the most, with the help of an hysterical temperament, a morbid imagination, and a tricky style of oratory. Of these tenets I will say nothing, for I cannot stay to dispute the meaning of a Greek adjectiv when the question is the very honor and character. But God is "revealing" himself in the human heart, in the human conscience, in the human intellect, in the common charities, the common justice, and the common humanities of life; and all these revolt against Mr. Moody's barbaric theology, his savage deity, and his brutal hell.—John P. Hopps (No. 84 Truth Seeker Tracts).

NEITHER church nor state has any right to claim to be infallible. They hav no right to determin whether a man shall think this way or that, speak this way or that, except so far as his utterances may touch the practical morality of the world. But because neither church nor state has a right to interfere, that does not giv a man, by any manner of means, the right to utter any thought that he pleases to hold. Because no outside power should interfere with you, does that take away your own conscience, your own sense of responsibility? Does that take away the fact that on right opinions the welfare of the world ultimately turns, and that wrong opinions are and must be disastrous?—Savage's Morals of Evolution.

ACCORDING to Hobbe, the only freedom which an individual, in his ideal state, has a right to claim, is that he calls "freedom of thought," and the freedom of thought exists in our being able to think what we like, so long as we keep it to ourselvs. Surely, such freedom of thought existed even in the days of the Inquisition, and we should never call thought free if it had to be kept a prisoner in solitary and silent confinement. By freedom of thought we mean freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of action, whether individual or associated, and of that freedom the present generation enjoys, there can be no doubt, a good measure, pressed down and shaken together and sometimes running over.—Max Muller.

BUT the God of love and of hell together they cannot be brought;
If there be such a God, may the Great God curse him and bring him to nought! —Tennyson.

REASON is the only faculty by which we hav to judge of anything, even revelation itself.—Bishop Butler.

Odds and Ends.

THE preachers who write and commit to memory their sermons are the only ones who practice what they preach.

THE child who is honest may get to heaven, but on earth it is the little boy who goes into the pantry that takes the cake.

FOUR hundred British scientists will meet at Montreal next year. The question with the Montreal boarding-house keepers is whether the scientists will assemble to investigate the bugs or the bugs to investigate the scientists.

SCHOOL committee man (examining a scholar): "Where is the North Pole?" "I don't know, sir." "Don't know? Are you not ashamed that you don't know where the North Pole is?" "Why, sir, if Sir John Franklin, and Dr. Kane, and Capt. De Long couldn't find it, how should I know where it is?"

"LET that fellow kiss me!" exclaimed she indignantly to her brother, who was teasing her about one of her beaus; "I'd just like to see him try it! I'd giv him a smack that he wouldn't forget as long as he livs." And sure enough she did, for that night her brother overheard the young fellow telling his sister that the "memory of that sweet kiss will linger while life"—and so on.

I MARRIED my wife for her beauty;
She married me for my—wit.
That I got the best of the bargain
I'm candid enough to admit.
Wit often subsides into drivel;
That "beauty soon fades" is all bosh.
My wife is to-day at the washtub,
So I'm certain that beauty will wash.

"YOUNG CALVIN" wants to know if we "believe that angels hav wings, and why we think so." We think they hav, Calvin. We never saw their wings, but we know that whenever a young man becomes perfectly convinced that he has met an angel he spends about all his spare time holding her tight with both arms, as though he feared she would fly the minute he let go of her. And if they had no wings there would be no cause for this widespread, almost universal, fear.

A QUAKER'S epitaph: "I expect to pass through this world but once. If, therefore, there be any kindness I can show, or any good thing I can do to any fellow human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect, for I shall not pass this way again. Let this be my epitaph:
What I spent I had;
What I saved I left behind;
What I gave away I took with me."

ONE of our city preachers, says the Dvansville Argus, uses such big words in his discourse that some of his people are quite ill over the hight and depth and breadth of his sentences. How he gets them out is a wonder. He wears a mustache, too, which makes it more remarkable. The other day he announced that "the ladies will meet for the usual hebdomadal investigation and mutual aid on Wednesday evening." He was absent at the weekly service, and his substitute, who was requested to make the announcement, was not so well posted in big words as the pastor, but he had grit enough to wrestle with the biggest six-footers in the dictionary. So he read in a clear tone, "The ladies will meet for the usual abdominal investigations and mutual aid on Wednesday evening." And then he couldn't think what made the congregation laugh so.

MINE VAMILY.

Dimbled scheeks, mit eyes of plue,
Mout like id vas moist mit dew,
Und leedle teeth shust peekin' droo—
Dot's der baby.

Curley head, und full of glee,
Drousers all oud at der knee—
He vas peen blayin' horse, you see—
Dot's leedle Ottō.

Von hunderd-seexty in der shade,
Der oder day ven she vas veighed—
She beats me soon, I vas avraid—
Dot's mine Gretchen.

Bare-footed head, und pooty stoudt,
Mit grooked legs dot vill bend oud,
Fond of his bier and sauer kraut—
Dot's me himself.

Von schmall young baby, full of fun,
Von leedle, pright-eyed, roguish son,
Von frau to greet ven vork vas done—
Dot's mine vamily.
—Charles Follen Adams.

AT a little village a few miles from Evansville lived a farmer pretty well to do and bearing a good reputation. He is a widower, and has two pretty daughters who are the torments of his life. It is well known that the young ladies will be heiresses, and this fact, added to their natural attractions, draws all the young men from far and wide to the Cross Roads farm. But Mr. Wilson's troubles hav been augmented of late. A revivalist has been down in his neighborhood and stirred up such a religious yeast in the farmer's bosom that he's taking to praying, and they've ended it by making a deacon of him. Now, it was bad enough to hav to keep the village beaus from his daughters, but of late some of our city young men hav taken to driving over there to church. Last Sunday evening old Wilson was especially annoyed by young men who, during the whole time of service, were flirting with his youngest daughter. Their misbehavior was carried to a climax when the regenerated father was praying for the whole world, and that congregation in particular. His religious fervor was interrupted by the glances he cast at the erring couple. Suddenly he felt that he could bear it no longer, and raising his voice to the highest pitch, he prayed: "An' now, O Lord, hev marcy on the dum idiot with the store clothes on as is a-winkin' at our Alice, an' keep him hangin' 'round the church door when sarvice is over till I can git to him an' put a head on him! Amen." The young man picked up his hat and went home.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Hume's Essays. Essays and treatises on various subjects. By DAVID HUME, Esq. With a brief sketch of the author's life and writings, to which are added dialogues concerning natural religion. Price, $1.50.

Idols and Ideals, with an Essays on Christianity. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, the brilliant Rationalistic preacher of London. $1.50.

If, Then, and When. From the doctrins of the Church. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Image Breaker (the). By JOHN E. REMSBURG. Six lectures bound together, 25 cents. Separatly, 5 cents each. 1. The Decline of Faith; 2. Protestant Intolerance; 3. Washington an Unbeliever; 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever; 5. Paine and Wesley; The Christian Sabbath.

Infidel's or Inquirers Text-book, being the substance of thirteen lectures on the Bible. By ROBERT COOPER. $1.

Ingersoll in Canada. A Reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "Bystander," and others. By ALLEN PRINGLE. 15 cents.

Is Life Worth Living. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK. Contents: The New Import of the Question, Morality and the Prize of Life, Sociology as the Fountain of Morality, Goodness as its own Reward, Love as the test of Goodness, Life as its own Reward, The Superstition of Positivism, The Practical Prospect. The Logic of Scientific Negation, Morality, and Natural Theism, The Human Race and Revelation, Universal History and the claims of the Christian Church, Belief and Will. Paper $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated. A new and valuable book. 35 cents.

Kneeland's National Hymns. 35 cts.

Koran (the). A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $1.50

Letters of Junius. Two volumes in one. From the latest London edition. $1.50.

Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservativ Against Religious Prejudices. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by ANTHONY C. MIDDLETON, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Life of Paine. By J. E. REMSBURG. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine, author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," etc., with critical and explanatory observations on his writings. By GILBERT VALE. $1.00.

Love and Transition: A Plea in poetry for the practicalization of known truth. By MARY E. TILLOTSON. $1.00.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Spicy Narrativ. "And they were naked and not ashamed." 50 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By HENRY GEORGE ATKINSON, F. G. S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU. $1.50.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. (Principally on Social Science.) By VAN BEUREN DENSLOW, L.L. D., with an introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. With eight portraits: Comte, Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Fourier, Herbert Spencer, and Ernst Haeckel. 384 pages. $1.50.

Moral Education: Its Laws and Methods. By Prof. J. R. BUCHANAN. A new method to conquer crime, disease, and misery, which churches, colleges, and governments have signally failed to do. $1.50.

Moral Physiology; A Brief and Plain Treatis on the Population Question. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. 60 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of its Elements. By A. SNIDER DE PELLEGRINI. 10 cents.

Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by comparative Mythology. By JOHN FISKE, M.A. LL.B., of Harvard College. $2.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By MORRIS EINSTEIN. $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Paradise Lost; or, The Great Dragon Cast Out. 60 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 29. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, July 21, 1883. | NO. 21 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

HELEN TAYLOR, stepdaughter of John Stuart Mill, is the first woman elected to the presidency of a standing committee on the London School Board.

A WISCONSIN firm believer in a hell of actual fire for sinners has fitted up his cellar with painted flames, wooden demons, and other horrors. Here he takes his children for whipping.

LORD C. CAMPBELL, in the House of Commons, said that Boers were irredeemably bad, although great Bible readers. Lord Campbell probably meant because, but did not like to say so.

THE Belgian chamber has abolished the privilege of exemption from service in the militia hitherto enjoyed by pupils at religious seminaries and institutions for the education of teachers.

THE grandfather of the dead minstrel, Chas. Backus, was in the early days of the country a clergyman of Litchfield. He was sent to jail for libeling Thomas Jefferson, then president of the United States.

THE Sydney, Australia, Liberal says the Anti-Slavery Reporter avers that the missionaries in Madagascar are encouraging slavery in that country. The fact is not so new in the world that the paper in question need make such an atrocious fuss about it.

THERE is a prisoner in the jail at Caldwell, N. Y., who has devoted his spare time to fashioning a model of a church, with the inside all complete—pews, aisles, pulpit, and all. It is true to life, for there are even collection baskets there, and they are empty.

Two medical schools for women are to be established in the province of Ontario, one in Toronto and one in Kingston, and the Toronto Globe says that in this respect the women of the province will be better off than they are in the matter of higher education in general.

JUSTICE NORTH, who sentenced Foote, of the Freethinker, has been removed from the Queen's Bench, or Common Law Court, to the Chancery, or mere legal and equity court. It appears that he has given many absurd sentences, out of all proportion to the offenses. He ought to hav been removed a million miles away from any judicial bench.

THE Rev. J. P. Lichtenberg has been hauled up before U. S. Commissioner Dennison, of Utica, charged with sending obscene matter through the mails. He is pastor of the German Lutheran Zion church of Utica. His trial will take place in Buffalo in September. We commend him to the care of Dr. Buckley, of the Advocate, and to the professional religious press in general.

THE pope has again complained to President Grevy of the attacks made upon the church and religion in France. It is small wonder that the Catholic clergy pine for the good old times when it is shown that previous to the first revolution France paid to them in tithes, feudal first fruits, and extra tithes, eleven millions of pounds annually. And they paid no state contributions themselvs.

THE editor of the Christian Register, writing on the "Doom of the Majority" of mankind, sends all the pagan world and a large portion of the Christian world pouring by millions over the Niagara of perdition. Of the twenty-seven millions who die annually, about twenty millions plunge into the regions of eternal torment to roast, and roast, and keep on roasting, without any "sweet by and by" or "beautiful shore" in the dim vistas of the eternal strand. This theory of human destiny "is very pitiful and of tender mercy," but we suppose we hav no right to think aloud, and must be satisfied blessing our stars that we are not pagans, and that we hav been born in sight of the narrow road. Would it not be human to slaughter all the pagans, and so cut off a posterity with no higher inheritance than eternal fire.—Grip.

HENRY M. SEYBERT, who endowed the chair of Moral and Mental Philosophy in the University of Pennsylvania, willed $1,000 to be expended by the trustees in investigating Spiritualism, in which he was a believer. A committee has been appointed to do the work, which will be in the nature of an attack, since the members are to attempt the exposure of frauds in mediums. Persons professing superhuman attributes will be scientifically examined.

THE brethren will please pray that the Lord will direct the steps of the young ministers that are being half-soled and turned out from the Baptist University at Hamilton, to some other country than this. Some of the gang of hazers think of coming West. Please don't. This country is suffering quite enough from the acts of other loafers here from the East. What the West wants is men, not Eastern college bummers whose foolish parents thought were foreordained for the ministry. —Pomeroy's Democrat.

GOVERNOR BUTLER, of Massachusetts, has appointed an engineer to fill a vacancy on the Massachusetts Railway Commission. This recognition of the dignity and rights of labor has of course delighted the class to whom the new commissioner belongs, and on business principles every shipper and merchant in the commonwealth is bound to support the appointment. In this state our commissioners consist of two lawyers and an ex-tailor, neither of whom can be correctly described as a practical railway man.

IT is a curious fact from which the student in statistics may draw any inference he pleases, that the Jews seem to be strongest in the more Catholic territories. Thus, the population of Saxony is nearly double that of Elsass-Lothringen; yet the Jews of the kingdom number less than 7,000, and those of the dominion some 40,000. In Wurtemburg there are, roughly speaking, two Protestants to one Catholic; in Baden, nearly two Catholics to one Protestant. In the former state there are less than 13,000 Jews, in the latter more than 26,000.

Now that the Brooklyn bridge is completed, we are told that glass is rapidly taking the place of iron and wood in Europe as the best material for the construction of bridges. Blocks of glass are hardened by a special process, leaving nothing to be desired in respect to solidity. The cost is below that of wood or iron, and glass possesses the additional advantage of not being liable to rust and of being impervious to insects. The experiments that hav been made in Great Britain hav given astonishing results, and there is no longer any question as to the practical value of the discovery.

IT is seldom that the outside world gets a glimpse of the real opinions of the great middle classes of England, but it is now asserted by different observers that this mass of people are beginning to assert themselvs in politics. No Parliamentary leader can safely ignore their presence. It is hardly a dozen years since London took to educating her children, and in that time the growth of a general suffrage sentiment is one of the features of history. "Nothing exasperates an Englishman more than the idea of an English republic," says one writer, "but he does expect to get that which is the making of a republic—the ballot for every man of age."

Gen. O. O. Howard, the eminent Christian of the Freedman's Bank swindle, is in charge of a military department in Nebraska. Recently the officials who annually make the tour of inspection arrived at his place and were escorted to head-quarters by the valiant saint in person. Arriving there he was horrified to find all the staff officers and heads of departments at their desks writing letters, reading newspapers, etc. The matter was seemingly ignored for the time, but an order has since been issued directing the headquarters building to be closed on Sunday, and warning the officers and clerks against congregating there for any purpose whatever except in cases of necessity. Mr. Howard does not appear to be essentially different from other well-known Christians. He can burst up a bank with no compunctions of conscience but cannot break the Sabbath nor let his clerks do it. Great is the mystery of godliness!

A STRAWBERRY festival was held last week by the citizens of Bloomington, Wis., to raise money to defray the expense caused the base ball boys of that place, who were arrested by a lot of Sabbatarian bigots for playing the national game on Sunday. The proceeds were sixty dollars, while the fines aggregated only forty dollars. It appears that the game was played at a considerable distance from the town, and the pious sneaks who caused the arrests were compelled to use spy-glasses to identify the players. This conduct has naturally aroused deep indignation, and the action of the church party is criticised by the respectable portion of the community with great harshness.

A BLOW is to be struck by the railroad companies at the transportation of dressed meat, by increasing the freight rates for what is known as Chicago beef. The Board of Railway Agents hav made up their minds to advance the rates of freight from Chicago to the seaboard from sixty-four cents per hundred pounds to seventy-seven cents. Live stock pays but forty cents per hundred, and this increase is at least ninety per cent over the live stock rate. Dealers in dressed beef declare that the advance will be ruinous to their business, and that they will be driven out of the market. If this should prove true, it will leave the business again in the hands of the live stock men, who can manipulate prices to suit themselvs, as they did a year ago, when beef became almost a luxury to persons of moderate means. This will create another obligation on the part of the public toward the corporate monopolies, and those who hav votes should carry these favors in their memories.

THOUGH the system of plurality of wives is not, theoretically, an intrinsic part of Mormonism, yet practically all the discourses, all the efforts of the elders, are devoted to this subject, and it forms one of their chief dogmas. Their authority for polygamy is taken from the examples of the patriarchs and from St. Paul's injunction, "A bishop, then, must be blameless, the husband of one wife," which they interpret as meaning that as St. Paul enjoined bishops to hav "at least" one wife, it is fair to presume that they had several. The Mormons teach that a man's chances for salvation increase with the number of his wives, and per contra, that an unmarried man is to be eternally damned, for has he not disregarded the command, "Increase and multiply?" Making this broad distinction in regard to the future, they carry it out in the present in political affairs—for a man's votes are in proportion to the number of his wives, and further, every married woman casts a vote.

A FAVORABLE illustration of the working of high license is in the town of Mount Vernon, Ill., with a population of 3,000. For several years the town council refused to grant licenses for saloons, preferring to adopt the principle of prohibition. There was not a licensed saloon in the place, but the drug stores and groceries sold spirits by the pint, to be carried off the premises and drunk, and it became a practice at last to sell whisky by the glass, to be drunk behind a partition on the premises. About six months ago the council passed a license ordinance fixing the fee at $800 a year. One saloon was opened, and in two months the proprietor had made enough money to pay for his license and keep up his establishment besides, and there was no greater perceptible amount of drinking in the place than there had been before. Two other persons are preparing to open saloons, making three in the town, and this, it is thought, will be the limit for some time to come. The town treasury will be $2,400 a year better off than under prohibition, and no more liquor drunk under one system than under the other.

News of the Week.

CHOLERA is spreading at a fearful rate in Egypt.

THE Mormons hav sent out 360 missionaries this year.

Two thousand weavers at Ashton-under-Lyne hav struck work.

FIGHTING continues in Zululand. Cetewayo has been defeated lately.

CAIRO, Ill., was somewhat shaken up by an earthquake on the morning of the 14th.

EIGHT thousand nine hundred and sixty-three immigrants were landed at Castle Garden last week.

HOSPITAL chaplaincies are abolished in Paris, and the cardinal archbishop is therefore very indignant.

AT the Fisheries Exhibition in London, the Princess of Wales sold tea, last Wednesday, to the great scandal of good society.

AN outbreak is imminent in Crete, owing to the resistance of the inhabitants to the collection of taxes by the Porte.

MRS. GRACE CORTLAND, the "Witch of Wall Street," cowhided William C. Jones at Milwaukee, Wis., for betraying her daughter.

THE Fenian Navy has left Pamrapo and is probably now at sea, bound either across the ocean or to some British port nearer at hand.

THE explosion of 2,500 pounds of powder at Dupont's powder works on the morning of the 13th, killed two men and slightly injured another.

LORD SHAFTSBURY is the president of a society for colonizing Jews in the island Cyprus, whence, after a while, like Moses, he will lead them to the promised land of Canaan.

ENGLAND and France are at present in a fever of excitement on account of the proposed construction of a second Suez Canal. Their friendly relations are somewhat strained.

THREE thousand Chinese troops hav been ordered from Canton to Yamchan on the Tonquin frontier, who will giv the French the warmest possible reception a la mode militaire.

PARISIANS celebrated their national fete day last Saturday with much pomp. The great statue of the republic in the Place Chateau d'Eau was unveiled in the presence of senators, members of the chambers of deputies, and a vast concourse of people.

GOV. BUTLER has just concluded his argument in the Tewksbury Almshouse case, in which he pours some very hot shot into the management and expresses some very decided opinions on the subject of tanning human hides and furnishing Harvard's dissecting tables with subjects.

A GENERAL strike of the telegraph operators throughout the country is impending. The Brotherhood of Telegraphers, which comprises more than two-thirds of all the operators in this country and the Canadas, presented certain demands to the Western Union, and the operators are very much dissatisfied with the pretended concessions of the company, and are determined to quit work within a few days if their demands are not granted.

THE Italian settlement in the town of Rotterdam, N. Y., is just now in a fever of excitement occasioned by the birth of a child with teeth. This prodigy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Francesco Curticello, weighs fifteen pounds, is perfectly formed, and quite a handsome child. He has an entire upper set of teeth and an extra double tooth on each side of his jaw, and his wisdom teeth are piercing his gums already. His incisors are unusually large. This strange birth has filled the minds of the parents with evil forbodings which were not to be dispelled even by consultation with a clairvoyant, who assured them that the boy would grow up and spend their savings with which they intended soon to go to Italy and set themselvs up in the world

Communications.

The Common-Sense View of It.

To GEORGE SCHUMM, ESQ., EDITOR OF THE CHICAGO Radical Review: I am sorry to see in your paper, which I carefully read every week, and in your neighbor, the Freidenker, of Milwaukee, a persistent opposition to the idea of uniting the forces of the Materialists with those of the Spiritualists in accomplishing the objects of the National Liberal League. To me this divisiv policy seems, not only irrational, but wrong and injurious to the sacred cause of Freethought which we all so dearly love. If a fire broke out in a town, endangering life and property, what would you think of a Catholic if he refused his help to put it out because heretical Protestants stepped forward and offered their services? Or, what estimate would you put on the humanity of Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, and Quakers who could coolly look on and see the flames spreading, and refuse to do anything to quench them because each sectarian was too busy in cherishing love to his own theology, and hatred to that of all the rest? We can do nothing in this world worth the while without organization and co-operation. Even the scholar who livs a recluse among his books, if he hav a message to deliver to his fellow-men, can do nothing without organizing a meeting with his printers and publisher, and co-operating with the post-office.

Now, what is the object of the National League? It is twofold. First, it aims to preserve the secularity of the United States constitution and government, and to bring up the various states of the union, in their constitutions and laws, to the same level. There is a large and powerful organization in this country, made up from the different Protestant sects, who honestly mourn over the godless and Christless character of the national constitution, and are determined to remedy it by inserting into that instrument an orthodox confession of faith, and having Congress enforce its provisions by a suitable law. They tell you so in their program published in their weekly organ, and it is announced at all their conventions. Besides this Protestant movement, there is the steady policy and purpose of the Catholic church, which has always claimed, as the vicegerent of the Almighty, and for a thousand years exercised, the right to dictate laws to the civil government. If anyone sneer at the idea of such schemes being realized in a democratic republic like ours, let me remind him of the fact, illustrated in our own history, that minorities often practically control majorities. We saw, in the centennial year, how in a city of 800,000 people, 500,000 of whom never darkened the doors of a church, a little handful of sabbatarian bigots were powerful enough to shut the doors of the exhibition on Sunday against the mechanics and masses of the people who could not attend on week-days, and who were willing to pay for their tickets, while they opened them stealthily to the "dead-heads," who did not pay. We hav seen three disgraceful pieces of legislation enacted during the expiring hours of different Congresses, when there was neither time nor disposition to discuss their merits or demerits: 1. The demonetization of the silver dollar; 2. The passage of the Comstock postal laws; and 3. The surreptitious act of stamping a religious motto on the national coin, as the entering wedge and argument for putting a theological creed into the Constitution. The sanction of Congress was secured to these measures, and the president signed the bills making them laws, because the men who had them in hand never slumbered nor got drunk, but watched their chances and executed their plans, to the (afterwards) surprise of Congressmen who had no idea or recollection of having voted for them.

To bring about a conformity on the part of the states of the union to the secular principles and policy of the national constitution is the most difficult part of our political program, because it requires the alteration of state constitutions and the repeal of bad laws. In many of our states a man whose testimony is received in the United States courts is not permitted to testify on account of his religious opinions. If you, by your testimony, could save the life, liberty, reputation, or property of an innocent man in these states, such testimony would not be received because you are not orthodox in religion. A drunken, worthless, lying curse, if he only believe in the superstitious fables of hell, the devil, and the Jewish Jehovah who exhibited his back parts to Moses, can be accepted as a credible witness; but you are discriminated against and treated as if you were a liar and a rogue.

Now, in the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the National League aims to do away with this obvious injustice, and to hav enforced that provision of the constitution which ordains (Article 4, section 2) that "The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." We demand that the United States constitution shall really be what (in Article 6, section 2) it professes to be, "the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding."

This secularization of the states, and breaking up the union which practically exists between them and the church, and making them, in their laws and constitutions, conform to the requirements of the national constitution, is the political object the Radicals hav in view in organizing themselvs into leagues. As all laws, whether good or bad, are enacted in the name, and by the authority, of the people, it is of the first importance to enlighten the minds of the people; and this is to be accomplished by the press, by lectures, and by conventions where the principles of the Radicals are discussed. The moment after honest and intelligent men hav investigated the subject they become converts to the cause, and henceforth help in the work of enlightening others.

The second grand object the National League hav in view is purely religious and missionary in its character. The masses of the American people are under the power of a religious superstition which rides them like a nightmare. Seventy thousand clergymen are exclusivly devoted, twice on Sundays, and often during other days of the week, in perpetuating and strengthening the grand swindle of the church as a soul-saving institution. Millions of dollars are raised every year for foreign and domestic missions, under the pretense that the souls and bodies of men are destined to suffer in eternal hell-fire unless rescued by the church. The Radicals hav kindled their beacon fires here and there on the hilltops, but it is the pecuniary interests of thousands of salaried men—preachers, agents, secretaries, and editors—to put them out and continue the reign of darkness. Now, Radicalism is a gospel of glad tidings to the victims of superstition, if they only understood its import. Our mission is to bring these benighted millions out of the charnel-house of the church into the atmosphere of liberty and light; to teach them that their ideas of God are false, childish, and degrading; that their religion is a fraud practiced upon their credulity by men who are not only bigots but who are pecuniarily interested in the work of fleecing them annually, as a farmer does his sheep. We wish to show them that they are ignorantly upholding an institution which has occasioned the shedding of more innocent blood than any other organization of men upon the face of the whole earth; and which for long centuries has hindered the progress of civilization more than any other cause. We cannot giv sight to our blind countrymen by spitting on the ground and making an ointment of clay to rub upon their eyeballs. We cannot by force pry open their eyelids so that they can see. But believing as we do in the force of truth, and that when honestly and perseveringly spoken, it is irresistible in its war against error, we can, at comparativly small expense, speak it, print it, and circulate it among the people. If any doubt the success of such means, against so great odds, we point to thousands in our ranks, who, a few years ago, were enslaved to church superstitions—Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant—but are now free and happy in their freedom. When we, in our unorganized and helpless condition, raise annually a hundred dollars for this kind of missionary work, the church raises a million to hold the fort of superstition which she has for so many centuries occupied. Yet such is the power of the truth we utter through the press and by lectures on free platforms, that it has thinned the attendance of the churches, and extorted from the best authority the concession that men of ability, with all the temptations of large salaries and high social positions and influence, decline entering the gospel ministry, and prefer other vocations in life which do not stultify their reason, and make them abject slaves to medieval creeds and ceremonies.

In the presence of these facts, and many more like them, you are opposed to joining in the work of enlightenment and reform, under the auspices of the Liberal League, with the class of Radicals called Spiritualists, because you are a Materialist, and disbelieve in their views concerning a future state of existence. The Materialist says that while the human race livs forever, the individual man is a meteor, which glares for a moment across the sky, and then goes out in eternal night. The Spiritualist says that a man is a star which is fixed in the firmament of heaven, to remain there forever, increasing in brilliancy. Now, what hav these views to do with the work of preserving the secular characteristics of our national constitution and laws; and making the various states conform thereto, thus putting such men as you and me on an equal footing of credibility with all other citizens? What hav they to do with the missionary enterprise we are engaged in on this planet, of opening the blind eyes of deluded thousands in the church so that they may see the truths we advocate, and feel their benign influence on their hearts and lives as we do? In "the nine demands of Liberalism," which is our program and order of battle, there is not the least mention, either of Materialism or Spiritualism, as ideas to be advocated by the League. The Spiritualists are just as much opposed to the superstitions of the church, and just as ardently in favor of the measures of the League as the Materialists are. They hav done wonders by their zeal in many sections of the country, especially in the east, and by camp-meetings everywhere, in weakening the power of the churches. The Catholic Review, of last May, says that while the Catholics themselvs number in this country ten millions of people, the Spiritualists number eleven millions. Throwing off one-half, is it wise in you to repudiate as allies in the great moral war in which we are engaged, five millions of good soldiers, and that because they differ with you in a single point? Is not this the rankest kind of bigotry under the specious name of Liberallsm?

Materialism, if I understand it, is a mere philosophical theory of a man's relation to the universe. It cannot be organized into a society de propaganda fide, because it has not yet risen by the consensus of the competent into the dignity of a dogma, but is a mere speculation, like the theory of a hollow globe, or the glacial theory in geology. It can awaken no popular enthusiasm which is absolutely necessary in the work of removing great evils. The evolution theory of Darwin has so much truth to support it that it interests a large class of thinkers. But who would dream of organizing it into a popular movement for reform? So we can discuss the merits of Materialism on a free platform, but it would never do for it to subsidize the Liberal League, and make it a mere instrument for its propagation. If the question between us and the church as to our civil and political liberties is to be decided by ballots instead of bullets, the work laid out by the League must be done by a union of all the various classes who disbelieve in the church and are opposed to its ambitious aims.

But you persist in the assertion that Materialiam is true, and that Spiritualism is false and a delusion, notwithstanding good men, and men of eminence as scientists and thinkers, after years of investigation, declare your charge to hav no foundation. It will not do for you, Mr. Schumm, simply because you are convinced of the truth of your views, to take it for granted that they are correct. You are not, and do not profess to be, an infallible pope. The sincerity and zeal with which a man holds to and advocates an opinion are proof to others of its truth. They only prove that he believes it to be true. The Catholics who burnt Bruno at Rome were convinced they did right. The Syndics of Geneva who sentenced Servetus to be burnt by slow fire felt it to be their duty to do so, and the execution of their victims was approved by all the Protestant reformers in Europe. And the bloody doings of the Episcopalians and Presbyterians against each other in Scotland, and the cruelties practiced by the Puritans of Massachusetts against the Quakers were deemed right. All persecutors feel that they are right, and their victims wrong, because they never candidly examined the case of their victims, but took their own for granted. A man who utterly refases to study a theory opposed to his own is not an investigator after truth, but a bigot, who desires his ipse dixit to be regarded as a demonstration. This is exactly what the church does, and has always done, and is one of the many reasons we hav for trying to destroy her power over the minds of men. This spirit is just as detestable, and indeed more so, when exhibited, as it sometimes is, by a man who calls himself a Freethinker, but who has a procrustean bed, with ax and pulleys to stretch out the victim, or chop off his extremities, to suit the regulation length. Materialism and Spiritualism are side issues in all radical conventions, and while people, the docket of whose minds is always open for new evidence, hav no objection to hear them discussed at public meetings for advancing the general interests of Radicalism, it would be manifestly improper in either party to avail itself of the freedom of the League platform, to advocate its distinctiv belief, as if this were the very object for which that platform was erected. The old psalm-singers, the hymn-singers, Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, leaving all their differences in abeyance, hav organized themselvs for the work of putting a religious creed into the constitution, to be enforced by law. Is it too much to ask and expect that the Materialists and Spiritualists, keeping in reserve their single ground of difference, should organize, too, in opposing them?

I had written thus far when I saw in THE TRUTH SEEKER the Cleveland Leader's bitter attack upon Judge Hoadly, the Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio, because of his religious opinions. The Leader calls the nomination of Judge Hoadly "the deepest and most outrageous insult ever offered to the God-fearing people of the state," and charges that the judge is "one of the vice-presidents of the notorious society which issues that vilest of religion-hating and society-degrading sheets, the Index."

We will now see, as the canvass proceeds, whether the Republican party of Ohio is so priest-ridden as to second the Leader's motion to get up an orthodox crusade against Judge Hoadly. If it do, as I fear it will, unless wiser counsels prevail, it will afford another seen and felt reason why the Radicals should everywhere league together and present an unbroken front in behalf of their rights as American citizens.

Enon Valley, Pa., July 5, 1883. A. B. BRADFORD.

SEND us names to whom we can mail sample copies,

"Responsibility of Unbelief."

To the reading, thinking portion of mankind no fact is more patent than the rapid growth of unbelief in the creeds and dogmas of the Christian church. It permeates all classes, and its spread is well known to the priesthood by whom it is both feared and shared. Some are trying to stem the tide of unbelief in one way, and some in another, but all their efforts are as unavailing as were those of Mrs. Partington and her broom in staying the waves of the Atlantic. The tide still rises. A few like Mr. Beecher see the danger their craft is in, and are trimming sail and throwing overboard a large part of the moral rubbish with which she is freighted; a few wiser and more honest, like Miln, Bell, and Chainey, hav deserted the old ship altogether. Yes, the old craft, orthodoxy, with its patched sails, rotten rigging, and barnacle-covered, decaying hulk is destined to go down with all on board. None know it better than the clergy, and the cry of danger is heard alike from Catholic and Protestant. Co-extensiv with the light of true education and the "march of intellect" is this all-pervading skepticism. The world's best thinkers, writers, poets, and scientists repudiate the dogmas of Christianity. Some are outspoken, combatativ, and do not fear to let their light shine, but by far the greater number of those who hold Liberal or rationalistic views and hav no faith in Christianity are quiet and undemonstrativ in respect to their belief. Why? For several reasons, among which are, social ostracism, fear of losing caste, or of losing trade and injuring their business, and of not obtaining employment. In short, the unpopularity of Infidelity and the tyranny of public opinion are the things that put a padlock upon the lips of many. Others again do not feel like disturbing the faith and religious belief of their friends, and particularly those who are near and dear to them, and who seem to find so much comfort and happiness in their belief in Christianity. They permit their children to go to Sunday-school, and their wives and daughters to church; they allow their homes to be flooded with pious literature, and thus contribute in various ways to the support of a religion in which they themselvs hav no faith. Nay, more, they help to maintain and propagate what they believe to be a stupendous lie. Now the question is, How far should those who repudiate Christianity be reticent in respect to their belief? Where, in this respect, does duty commence, and where does it end, that we may escape from moral cowardice on the one hand, and not suffer for bread and butter on the other? The church with its waning faith, and hypocrisy, is still all-powerful. It is not pleasant to be socially ostracized or considered ineligible to office or positions of trust or responsibility, because you are an "Infidel." Yet such is the fact. But the time is coming when it will be otherwise—when the preponderance of public sentiment shall be overwhelmingly against belief in a supernatural religion.

These thoughts hav been suggested by an article in the Contemporary Review, for May, on the above subject. It is from the pen of Vernon Lee, and is in the form of a discussion participated in by three Rationalists, representing three types of unbelievers in Christianity. Rheinhardt is a German optimist, a Voltairean philosopher, who treats Christianity with levity and does not think it worthy of serious discussion. He givs expression to such aphorisms as the following: "Thought is the privilege of those capable of thinking." "Progress exists only in the minority, and all improvement comes from the minority." "Protestantism is a modus vivendi with falsehood." I prefer Catholicism to Protestantism. Confession, celibacy, transubstantiation, Lourdes water, saints' bones, papal infallibility, are too much for the honest intelligent man who reads Voltaire and Renan. With your Protestant the case is different; the Reformation removed the things which would stink too much in the nostrils of the German or Englishman, and he is just able to swallow the amount of nonsense necessary, perhaps, to secure a good living or professorship; meanwhile, he may nibble at Darwinism, or Positivism, and be quite a man of advanced thought. He may even declare that the world was not created in six days, or, that Buddha and Socrates were quite as divine as Christ, yet he holds that the lower classes must not be too rudely disturbed in their belief of the story of the apple and its fatal consequences. Therefore, I say, giv me the council of Trent, the Bull Unigenitis, Loyola Jesuits, Lourdes water, pope's slippers, Capuchins, and Trappists, because, by so doing, you are giving me Voltaire and Diderot, Michelet and August Comte. Vere is a Rationalist who does not believe in disturbing the religious beliefs and opinions of his wife and children. He has pulled down and carted off the moral rubbish which was, probably, a part of his early education, that he may see truth in the light of reason. His convictions hav been painful to him; he finds consolation in the belief that has been forced upon him, and voices his feelings in the following eloquent manner: "Poets hav said a great deal of love and death being brothers; of the desire of one coming in the presence of the other; it may be so. But this much is certain, that whatever may be said of the brothership of love and death, love, in its larger sense, is the wizard who has evoked for us the fata morgana of an after life; it is love who has taught the world that there is not an endless ocean beyond this life, an ocean without a shore, dark, silent, whose waters steam up in black vapors to the black heavens; a rolling chaos of disintegrated thoughts and feelings heaving up and down in the shapeless, eternal flood. It is love who has taught that what was begun here will not be forever interrupted, nor whatever has been ill done forever remain unatoned; that the affection once kindled will never cease; that the sin committed can be wiped out, and the good conceived, can be achieved; that the seed sown in life will yet bloom and fructify in death; that all which is good, and happy, and forever struggling here, virtue, genius, will be free to act hereafter; that those thrust apart in this life will there unite forever. All this is the wonderful phantasmagoria which love has given to mankind. What right hav we to sweep it away, we, who perhaps, hav never loved, never felt the need of such a belief?"

And so, contrasting this beautiful fiction evoked by love, with his "icy and arid Materialism," he refuses to lead his wife and children into the truth as he sees it. Baldwin is as pronounced a Rationalist as his friends Vere, but he believes in the propagation of truth, and thus replies: "We hav been speaking upon the moral discomfort attendant upon a disbelief in a future life. Ask yourself which is the most conduciv to men who are striving to make the world better to others and to themselvs—to men who weigh their thoughts and wishes, who bridle their passions and put forth their strength for good—the notion that there is a place beyond the grave where all is perfect, where all sloth, and unkindness, and repented folly, and selfishness will be expiated and retrieved; or, the notion that whatever excellence there be, man must make with his own hands; that whatever good may be done, whatever may be felt, repaired, atoned for, must be done, felt, repaired, and atoned for in this world!"

Baldwin is not only an exponent of the writer's views, but also of a large and constantly increasing class of thinkers.

C. A. Blen.

Mr. J. R. Perry's Position.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In my last article, I spoke of the wonders of the unseen world around us, and offered several suggestions in relation to the production of animal life upon this planet. As I hav never met with any such thoughts in my readings upon the subject of germ life, and as your readers may put it down as a mere speculation, not supported by any reasonable deductions, I think it best to state at least the probabilities in support of such a theory. I wish also to correct an idea, in relation to the difference between the diameters of microscopic measurements, and the difference in bulk, or relativ size. Magnifying lenses are made to run in power from 10 to 2,500 or more diameters. In order to get an idea of the relativ size of So that in one is magnified 2,500 diameters, it is the object which is this amount. Thus 2,500x2,500x necessary to cube two billion six hundred and 2,500 which equals fifteen large as the actual size twenty-five million of times as ns; so that instead of the object brought under the lens in the twenty of saying that the "diameters range five ranges thousands," I should hav said the relativ size has in the twenty millions, for that is about what has been accomplished to this time. If we see a perfect animal with such a power, of the size of a pin-head, and then reflect that it is from fifteen to twenty billions of times smaller, we are completely lost in the comparison, and if we then reflect that this infinitesimal speck of life is made up of atoms, and various combinations of molecules, etc., the size of an atom is inconceivable.

There are very many persons who are great admirers of nature, but unfortunately their scope of vision is so limited that they take in only the coarsest things, and intend to shut out all that they do not see themselvs, and they build up their philosophies in about the same proportions. To such I would say, hold! let us examin into and see what nature is, meet every question and all phenomena with a candid and humble spirit of inquiry.

Most philosophers agree that whatever there is of vegetable and animal life on the earth came about by the development of inorganic into organic life, and they make the starting-point to be at sometime when the earth was in a condition to produce it, by having cooled off and developed soil, water, air, etc. That vegetable life came first, and then animal life followed. While this may be true in the main, I am inclined to think there is no evidence of any such change ever having taken place, at any time in this world. That is, there is no proof that inorganic matter has at any time so changed into animal life here. The question of spontaneous generation is not proved. Anaximander and Empedocles attributed to this form of generation all living beings which first peopled this globe, and it was a doctrin scarcely questioned until after the middle ages. It was taught by Pliny, and Virgil. The first one to oppose the theory was the Italian naturalist Redi, some two hundred years ago. He proved that the worms and insects developed from vegetable refuse, were developed from eggs, deposited in those places by the parents. The greatest difficulty was found however in the human parasites, which simply adhere to some part of a mucous tissue, or inhabit the cavities, and seem to develop spontaneously; but recent investigations of Von Seibold, and others, hav removed the difficulty, so that to-day a large majority of physiologists reject the doctrin; at all events, such a mode of generation is not probable and has not been satisfactorily established.

It will appear from these facts that the germ principle for all animal life is the true one, and as it can be shown that animal germs in quantities inconceivable, exist in the air, it would seem that the true starting point of animal and vegetable life was in the air, or whatever sphere of elements may hav existed in the early stages of development. If this is so, it follows that we hav not gone far enough into the past, to account for life on this planet, and the case would require us to account for this most puzzling fact, viz: That every animal in this world is made up of two principles or germs, male and female, and hence every animal was a half germ first.

To get back to a starting point, I will state what we know from observation, that for instance, the sun, or any body in space, if hot, will throw off a great sphere of rarefied matter, extending off into space so far until it becomes cooled off and condensed into vapor and air. It will thus form various strata from the outer air, gas, etc., until the globe itself is reached. And every element of the planet will by this means be thus contained in this outer sphere. It may extend for millions of miles away from and around the sun, or other planet according to size and other conditions. Wherever there is matter, there is life and motion and chemical action, we cannot conceive of any state of matter unaccompanied by this chemical action. And this, in the finest states or conditions is developed into animal germ life. This is the world of cause and for millions of years before the soil and air was in a condition to develop and sustain life on this planet, did this world of causes produce these animal germs. As the atmosphere cooled off immediately around the globe, so did these germs settle down and fall upon it. As a farmer might take a handful of various seeds and cast them into a field, some took root, and others were choked out for a time. If the history of geology teaches anything, it tells of these successive ages of development, and of certain fame of vegetable and animal life, in which certain kinds came upon earth, lived out their time and departed forever; finally came man also, and was developed from germ life, male and female, and from several distinct species at that, which accounts for all the variety and no need to search for any missing links. This will account for the many early races and would hav spared Darwin the admission and concession to the theological theory of creation, which he made as regards the original stock of animals.

It will be seen by this that every body in space first develops a spirit world, or world of causes, and that all the highest potencies of matter are therein contained, every element of life and growth originates in this original sphere of matter in its highest state, and when all the germ elements or principles are outwrought, the perfected animals spirit, of every grade will re-enter this unseen world and become a more or less permanent resident thereof. This is demonstrated by every manifestation of spirit power at ing made, which has led to so much discussion, now be esty pro and con.

and disho ted that the matter thrown off from a

It will be no tend much further into space than heated body will ex ter the body has cooled off, an atmosphere will ar now much less in extent hence our atmosphere is un and planet. The than originally, and so of every s many millions of sun is now developing a sphere years until miles in extant, and it will be billions o ace. As animal life will be developed upon his surf he we need his light and heat, it will follow that as becomes more capable of producing animal life, so will our capacity for the same cease, and finally the earth could sustain creatures only that were not dependent on artificial heat. In time this earth must become a solid and burnt out planet similiar to the moon that accompanies her, unfit to produce or sustain animal life which depends on a certain amount of heat and light for existence.

As the elements of matter remain forever distinct, and their nature cannot be changed or destroyed, it follows that the various manifestations of animal being are made up of molecular combinations, and some primal element, not yet understood or discovered, similar to a mind element, or having its characteristics which is the property or essential life element that primarily causes these combinations to take place, and manifests intelligence when so combined. It may be compared to the relation of the five senses in man, which culminate in a sixth and controling one, which comprehends all the others. As regards the outer world, we may begin with objectiv life which produces sensations upon us, by coming into contact with the reason or real self through the various nerve channels. The difference between the reason and any of its senses, is this: that each one of the bodily senses can in the main, only act in its special department and by its peculiar functions, while the reason acts through all of the senses and is also acted upon from without, through the same channels. For instance, the eye sees through the optic nerves, or feels a picture cast upon the retina. The tung tastes by feeling the contact of food upon the nerves of taste. The hand or other part of the body, feels by contact with external objects. The ear feels the vibration by means of the air or other vibrating body, and the olfactory nerves feel, or smell, the fine particles of matter which permeate the air and come in contact with the nerves adapted to this use, while the essential thing, the reason or mind, sees, hears, tastes, feels, and smells, at the same time. It might be illustrated also in various ways. Say an architect, who understands every branch of trade, employs masons, carpenters, plasterers, and the various tradesmen, to assist in constructing a mill. While each man or set of men, may be expert in a branch of the work, the architect is presumed to understand the work of each and every department and by his efforts and his help, the result is the mill. So in the human combination the result is intelligence, which is manifested in the animal world according to various combinations and with the rapidity of thought.

As the original germs only consisted of half beings, and as it was necessary to bring the male and female principles together to produce a whole being, capable of successiv propagation, the essential result of earth life is the development of a whole being embracing in his or her state the qualities of both, so that every man is part woman and every woman is part man, and the future result will be a perfect conjugation of the two, in the beautiful life and world to which all humanity is tending. So it appears to,

J. R. PERRY.

The Freethinkers' Convention.

The headquarters of the Rochester Freethinkers' Convention will be at the Clinton House, and the rates per day will be $1:50. Those wishing accommodations there should engage rooms in advance. The charges at the other hotels will be as follows: Powers House, $3; Whitcomb House, $2; National Hotel, $1.50; Waverly House, $1, $1.25, $1.50, and $2, according to rooms taken; Congress Hall, $1.25; Ayer's Hotel, $1. The boarding-houses generally will charge $1 per day, and there will be many private rooms to rent, and one can get meals out at restaurants very cheap.

THE RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

The Rochester and Pittsburgh railroad will convey home free of charge all who attend the convention over that line from any station from Rochester to Pittsburgh. The Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg railroad will return all who attend over that road at one cent a mile. The Grand Trunk Railway of Canada will do the same thing. Those who come over from Canada on the steamboat Norseman will be returned to Point Hope, Canada, for sixty cents. The Cobourg, Peterboro & Marmora railroad, of Canada, will return free of charge from Point Hope. The Erie railway will sell excursion tickets at two cents a mile from any station on the following named branches of its road to Rochester: On the division between Hornellsville and Rochester; on the division between Corning and Rochester; on the division between Suspension Bridge and Rochester; on the division between Buffalo and Rochester, and on the division between Jamestown and Buffalo.

Persons residing west of Chatauqua Lake should purchase excursion tickets to Chatauqua Lake and from there go to Salamanca, and purchase a ticket at Salamanca over the Rochester and Pittsburgh Railroad to Rochester. As above stated, they will be returned free to Salamanca. Arrangements are not yet perfected for cheap rates of fare from Boston and New York city and from Detroit, which we hope to obtain soon.

SPEAKERS ENGAGED.

The following persons hav agreed to be present and address the convention: Hon. Elizur Wright, of Boston; Hon. Thaddeus B. Wakeman, of New York city; Courtlandt Palmer, of New York city; Hon. C. B. Waite, of Chicago; Mrs. Amelia Colby, of Buffalo; Susan H. Wixon, of Fall River, Mass.; Mrs. H. S. Lake, of Milwaukee, Wis.; C. Fannie Allyn, of Stoneham, Mass.; Miss Ellen Wright, of Boston; J. E. Remsburg, of Atchinson, Kan.; Prof. John Stolz, of Chicago; William S. Bell, of Boston; J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, Mich.; M. Babcock, St. Johns, Mich.; W. F. Jamieson, Lake City, Minn.; T. C. Leland, New York city; Samuel P. Putnam, of New York city; Allen Pringle, Selby, Canada; E. A. Stevens, Chicago; C. Fred. Farlin, M. D., Rochester; Jay Chaapel, Brighton, N. Y.; Geo. N. Hill, Boston; T. L. Brown, M. D., Binghamton, N.Y.; George Chainey, of Boston; J. A. Seitz, North Conway, N. H.

We are in correspondence with the following additional distinguished Freethought speakers and hope to procure their attendance: Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, of Washington; Horace Seaver, of Boston; Charles Watts, of London, England; Prof. Felix Adler, of New York; Mrs. Annie Besant, of London, England; Mrs. Judge Mattie Krekle, of Kansas City; B. F. Underwood, of Boston; Prof. Van Buren Denslow, of Chicago.

THE SINGING.

The finest quartet of singers in Rochester has been engaged to furnish the vocal and instrumental music, and Prof. H. H. Hall, of Bradford, Pa., a distinguished vocalist, will be with us to occasionally enliven the audience with his admirable songs, some of which hav been composed for the occasion.

IMPERSONATIONS.

Miss Ellen Wright, the daughter of Elizur Wright, will giv one of her popular impersonation entertainments one evening of the convention. The Woman's Journal says truly of Miss Wright: "The acting of Miss Wright is worthy of Charlotte Cushman."

THE HALL.

The Academy of Music, the finest hall in the city, in which the convention is to be held, as before stated, is to be beautifully decorated with flowers, evergreens, house plants, flags, and mottos.

TO SECURE PLACES.

Those who desire to secure places in advance can write to Dr. C. Fred. Farlin, secretary Local Committee, 36 Sophia st., Rochester, N. Y.

H. L. GREEN, Sec. N. Y. S. F. A.

P. S. All Liberal papers that wish for the success of the convention will confer a favor by publishing the above communication.

P. S. No. 2. The Freethinkers of Canada who desire to attend the convention over the Grand Trunk Railway should send to H. L. Green, Salamanca, N. Y., inclosing a three-cent stamp for a certificate allowing them excursion rates.

P. S. No. 3. Every reader is requested to get as much as possible of the above article into his or her local secular paper.

Science Schools on Sunday, Instead of Sunday-Schools.

Immense fortunes hav been accumulated in the past few years by venders of quack nostrums. A well-known proprietor of a popular cure-all declares he would rather hav a lien on the credulity of the American people than a first mortgage on all their real estate.

The credulity of the purchasers who thus waste needed means is of itself very pitiful, but how infinitly more pitiable the vast amount of sickness and suffering thus proved to exist—the greater part of which is the result of physical excess, injurious habits, and the ignoring of nature's laws.

Not alone the vicious and depraved, but the moral, the educated, the highly respectable, are unconsciously—in many cases recklessly—indulging in acts and habits that are undermining their constitutions, insuring early death or decrepit middle age, and a progeny mentally and physically imperfect, if not actually deformed.

If the present generation studied the laws of their being, they would attain purer, healthier, and consequently happier livs. As it is, jaded nature is forced beyond the bounds of its normal activity, resulting in an unnatural drain on their physical capital; soon the era of deficit sets in, credit givs out, and the resort is to quacks and healers, who supply stimulus which for a time keeps up the extra and unnatural strain—"keeping the word of promis to the ear, to break it to the hope," until the system breaks down, and lingering misery finds release in death.

Obedience to nature's laws would insure health and strength, alike of mind and body, as surely as violation of her laws insures the dread penalty which no vicarious atonement, no pardoning power, however high or mighty, can release or save from.

While dashing furiously along the track of pleasure, mounted on the fiery steed, Desire, Reason calls "whoa!" in vain. Desire, like the runaway colt, has learnt her power and will use it at her pleasure, regardless of consequences; each indulgence only making her harder to restrain.

The terrible effects of persistent violation of the laws of our being are seldom at the time realized, and because punishment is not instantaneous, the suffering and misery that must follow—sometimes slow, but not the less inevitable—is not feared until it comes. Instead of insisting on reformation, abstaining from that which produced the evil, and by strict obedience to the laws of physiology and hygiene endeavoring to repair the damage, Christianity teaches, "It is a mysterious dispensation of divine providence;" "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth;" "Bear suffering with patience—it was sent by the dear, loving savior for some wise purpose;" "It is all for the best, if you only trust in the Lord," etc., etc.

The duty of Liberals is to inculcate a higher, holier, truer doctrin of the ends and use of human life. Instead of the worse than waste of time, money, and energy in the Sunday-school, children should be instructed that there is something more required to secure their future happiness than memorizing verses from the Bible, gabbling the catechism, or singing lascivious songs about "lying on Jesus's breast" and "safe in the arms of Jesus," etc.

They should be taught that everyone has a duty to do, now and here—to labor for the common good in this present world; that all must regulate their desires with a view of preserving the integrity and harmony of all their powers, and that feebleness of body and imbecility of mind are in most cases disgraceful, because the result of persistent wrong and evil courses on the part of parents, continued by the offspring.

Perfectly developed bodies will giv perfect brain, susceptible of the highest culture, resulting in perfect love, in finding greatest joy in promoting each others' happiness; thus in this present world can be attained the Eden of bliss, the only real heaven.

Advancement in knowledge, of how to secure and perpetuate health and strength of the mind and body of man, is not at all commensurate with that in regard to horses, cattle, or even swine. Every ordinarily intelligent owner of stock takes pains to improve the breed. Any man having improved stock is very willing to spend time and money to still further improve, and will take all possible precautions to avoid or prevent anything likely to perpetuate or increase any undesirable trait or quality.

Would not knowledge of and obedience to the same laws in procreation result in better, more perfect, and healthier human bodies and brains, hence happier and more useful lives?

It is not enough to point out and destroy error; we must build up truth in its place. Instead of Sunday-schools with classes to learn faith in supernaturalism, let us establish, in every neighborhood where ten or more Freethinkers can be brought together, science schools on Sunday, with classes in physiology, phrenology, therapeutics, and hygiene.

Teach old and young to know themselvs, and how not alone to preserve health and strength of mind and body, but also how to abate or remedy disease, weakness, malformation, or evil tendencies inherited or acquired; how to best cultivate that which most needs development; how to cause to remain or become dormant that which is in excess. Make such schools and classes cheerful, gay, instructiv, and entertaining. Use every effort to induce attendance of the most intelligent friends, neighbors, and their children.

At first it may seem up-hill work, but a little patient perseverance, and classes will increase and multiply. Remember, scientific knowledge is the only safe reliance to dispel the dark clouds of ignorance, superstition, and suffering.

Having bid farewell to church of creeds, join the church of deeds. Instead of metaphysical questions, of idle rites and silly ceremonies, let us learn how to repair and preserve health and strength of mind and body. Inspire each other with love of right and truth, with a spirit of fidelity to duty, and an earnest desire to acquire and impart knowledge of what most nearly concerns ourselvs, our children, our life in this present world.

We need science schools on Sundays in which all shall be deeply interested; where a spirit of genial love shall prevail; a love that shall practically endeavor to promote the happiness of the human race; a love that pities the suffering and points out the rational physiological means of relief; that will afford help and comfort to the afflicted, and prevent its entailment on their progeny; a love to make men and women more useful, educating them to be masters of themselvs, lords of their passions, and arbitrators of their own destinies.

Such schools will lack the emotional slush, mush, and gush of the meeting-house; but instead will impart truth, knowledge, strength of purpose, courage, and self-reliance. And from the facts of science and the study of the laws of nature and the true brotherhood of humanity, shall be born a better, higher, and more reasonable hope of future happiness than was ever begotten of mesmeric, psychologic communion with God, the outpouring of the holy ghost (wind), or ecstatic visions of immortal glory, dwelling with swan-winged angels, in a city high as it is broad, with jeweled walls and pearly gates, to keep close prisoners those who would escape the wearisome monotony of everlastingly singing, "Holy, holy, holy."

Educate until the mental shall hold the animal in subjection; passion be curbed and overcome. Then shall procreation result in such well-developed beings—who in turn will be fully instructed how to continue the good work of progress and improvement—that sickness and suffering shall be rare exceptions, and cessation of life before a ripe old age only the result of accident.

Rochester, N. Y. CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.

To the Freethinkers of Canada.

Freethinkers of Canada, desiring to attend the Rochester Freethinkers' Convention by the way of Port Hope, over the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, should write to H. L. Green, inclosing postage stamp for a certificate that will entitle the holder to a low rate excursion ticket. There will be excursion rates across the lake at Port Hope. H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, N. Y.

Notes.

PROF. PHILIP SCHAFF, D.D., believes that King James's version of the Bible is "doomed to a peaceful death and honorable burial," and that it will be superseded by the revision, which is better. By the way the new version remains unsold and the old one unread, it looks as though both were doomed to die together.

S. P. PUTNAM'S "Golden Throne" has found its way across the Atlantic and is to shine in the pages of the the Secular Review and greet the eyes of English Liberals, who will no doubt revel in this Freethought romance of the New World, which is well worthy of the compliment thus paid to it by the London press.

ORLANDO WHEAT, of Waco, writes that the Liberals of his town hav good prospects of early commencing and completing the first Liberal hall in Texas. This is good news, and we hope no time will be lost in erecting the structure. Every city ought to possess a hall within whose walls speech is free and ideas welcomed, no matter how radical. A church is a prison-pen for the mind.

THE old woman in London who quoted from the Bible the precept, "Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find," to prove that begging was "churchlike," was right, and if the magistrate before whom she was brought for begging was a sincere Christian he ought, logically, to hav dismissed her, which he did not. She could hav further quoted, as a biblical justification for her conduct, that command of Christ to "Take no thought for the morrow," for only beggars and tramps liv practically up to this. They are the Christlike people of to-day, and do in their small way what the church does colossally.

EVEN the Calvinistic papers are weakening on hell, and poking fun at it. The Christian at Work publishes this:

"The Christian Register makes fun of the declarations of the Andover creed upon the subject of everlasting punishment, by setting them to music. Our neighbor can find other material for fun in Matthew xxv, 31–40. And suppose those declarations of scripture do not furnish fun in eternity? Get your fun where you can, but remember he laughs best who laughs last."

If this thing continues, Buckley and his Advocate will be the only orthodox preacher and paper in the country. There is no danger of their going back on the consoling doctrin, for Mr. Buckley too ardently desires a hell for his rivals.

WE hav received from our friend, E. A. Stevens, of the Radical Review, a copy of Prof. Richards's statuet of Thomas Paine. It is a fac simile of the design intended for the monument of Paine to be erected in Lincoln Park, Chicago, when sufficient funds are obtained. It represents Paine sitting at his table, with his head resting upon his left hand, in a thoughtful mood. On the table is a manuscript and in his right hand a pen, as though he were writing and had stopped for a moment to think. The whole is an exceedingly neat piece of workmanship. It is claimed by the sculptor, Mr. Richards, that the likeness is the only correct one extant, being modeled from a death mask, which with Paine's other effects was sent to France, where Mr. Richards discovered it some years ago and secured it for this purpose. The price of the statuet is $14. Orders for it should be addressed to E. A. Stevens, 73 Randolph street, Chicago, Ill.

THE recent death of Bishop Colenso brings to mind the fact that he once wrote a powerful book against the authenticity of the Pentateuch. He was of course dragged before the church authorities, but could not be deposed. The following from London Truth shows of how little value the church now considers the alleged writings of Moses the Meek:

"And now it is really difficult to understand what all the Colenso fuss was about. Any clergyman may get up in almost any pulpit in England at the present time and say that the value of the Bible does not turn upon its historical or scientific accuracy; and no one will so much as lift his eyebrows. Canon Farrar teaches very much what Professor Maurice taught about eternal punishment—with only this difference: that he repeated the doctrin after the master, and a few years later on. So Maurice—perhaps, next to Newman, the greatest living force the church of England has had this century—was turned out of King's College, while the amiable and wordy author of the 'Life of Christ' is supposed to be in the running for a bishopric!"

THE Advocate recommends as a good book for young ministers to read Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." In this choice we are happy to say we can commend our pious contemporary. But we are afraid the Advocate would choose the "edited" editions, as they giv a good account of pagan nations, but fail to show that Christianity sprung from the loins of dying heathenism. As the history of the early Christians is an interesting study we would add this to the Advocate's advice: Let every theological student procure the book recently issued by Mr. Eckler, in which is found without abridgment or addition, Gibbon's history of Christianity. After a perusal of this book we think the would-be divine will not feel so confident that he has been "called of God" to preach. To further this good work we shall continue to send the book by mail, postage paid, for $2, and if any college cub applies, his order will be filled just the same as an intellectual man's order would.

A WESTERN journal givs the Rev. Dr. Patton, editor of the Baptist paper of this city a little lesson in the Bible. It will be remembered that at the last session of Congress Senator Ingalls, in paying tribute to a deceased colleag, used the quotation, "If a man die shall he liv again?" On this Dr. Patton flamed out in his paper, saying: "The Senate is not the forum wherefrom to preach sermons on Infidelity, nor should the occasion of memorial services upon a deceased colleag be embraced to question, as did Mr. Ingalls, whether if a man die shall he liv again?'" To this the journal says:

"Dr. Patton actually thinks that the line referred to is original with the senator. Great blunder. It is as old as the Bible, and was uttered by Job over four thousand years ago. We quote the 14th chapter, concluding with the line charged up against Ingalls:

1. Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble.
2. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.
7. For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease.
8. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground;
9. Yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant.
10. But man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?
11. As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up;
12. So man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep.
14. If a man die, shall he liv again?

Before we take leave of this subject we would inform Dr. Patton that neither of the following words are to be found in any part of the Old Testament: 'Immortal,' 'immortality,' or 'immortality of the soul.'

As the doctor confounds Senator Ingalls with Job, he may be far astray on other matters. We should like to hear from Dr. Patton on the above omissions."

THE Sun has discovered another "Infidel preacher" in the person of the Rev. C. W. Park, of New Haven; but on examination his heresy is found to be of an exceedingly mild type. Nevertheless the Sun is right in calling him an Infidel, for unless a man believes the church creeds in all their hideous and repulsiv entirety he is an Infidel of some species. We respect a man who acknowledges his errors when he sees them, and cannot expect one whose ancestors were all extreme churchmen to break away from his mental servitude all at once. Mr. Park is a Puritan by descent and a Calvinist by training. It is greatly to his credit that he has any heretical ideas at all. One portion of his heresy consists in rejecting the dogma of infant baptism, he holding that it is no baptism at all. When the child reached a mature age he would be required to be baptized again. For ourselvs, we fail to see much advance in this. If a washing, say at twenty-one, will last a man till death, we think the twenty-one added years will not make him much dirtier. Besides, it is much less trouble to baptize an infant, it not requiring nearly so muscular a preacher to dip him. And with the limpsey divinity students now graduating this must be an object. Future punishment was another point on which Mr. Park was shaky. He believes there is a possibility for salvation for everybody. This proves that Mr. Park has a heart, and that is not, and never has been, any part of the equipment of a Calvinist preacher. In this his heresy is of a very grave nature. As the Sun says, and the Sun is a better authority in church creeds than the Independent, "take away the Calvinistic doctrin of future punishment, endless and inexorable, and the Puritan faith has lost one of its chief pillars." But Mr. Park's heresy does not end here. He acknowledged that his views regarding the Bible were about like those of the Rev. Heber Newton. The Bible was true so far, according to his notion, as it appealed to our conscience and experience. That is, he judged the Bible as he would any other book, and, of course, rejected the doctrin of its inspiration. These views therefore removed the last prop from orthodoxy, from all Christian theology. There is no divine standard of faith, according to him. A man must believe only what seems reasonable to him. There is no word of God, as theology has taught. All these facts concerning Mr. Park's real belief were elicited by a council of twenty-nine ministers who were examining him as to his fitness to preach to a Congregational congregation in New Haven. The council unanimously decided that he was unfit to be called a minister. A man who does not believe that ninety-nine people out of a hundred will go to hell cannot pound the pulpit in that town. But, asks the Sun, "are the chances of Mr. Park's obtaining a Congregational pulpit destroyed?" And answers its own question thus: "Not at all. More likely calls will now pour in upon him. He is just the sort of pastor to be popular. Infidelity is now so common in the church that there is an activ demand for Infidel preachers. It is reported that the New Haven church is determined to hav him without regard to the council." All of which still further illustrates that Infidelity is in the air, and that theology and theologians are evoluting fast. We trust the Sun may soon find another heretic to mourn over. Its lachrymose wails are interesting to the unbeliever if they do not afford unbounded consolation to our friend Buckley, of the Advocate.

ON another page we print a very candid and just rebuke of the editor of the Radical Review, from the pen of Hon. A. B. Bradford. We also hav another, which will be printed next week, from the able Spiritualist, Geo. Lynn. The drift of Mr. Bradford's accords with the mild reproof administered by THE TRUTH SEEKER in a recent issue. Mr. Schumm's assumptions that Materialists and Spiritualists cannot work together for the attainment of the objects of the National Liberal League is absurd and essentially il-Liberal. We dislike to criticize the actions of a neighbor, as it savors too much of the spirit of the sectarian journals which are eternally at war with each other over non-essentials, splitting theological hairs to a fineness indistinguishable to ordinary folks. But in this case it is a matter of vital importance to the success of Liberalism. A party divided against itself cannot accomplish anything. If the great body of Freethinkers splits up into sects, Spiritualist, Materialist, Positivist, and what not, then good-by to any practical work. The force they should expend upon the common enemy will be wasted in futil words. Concentration and organization should be our immediate objects. The Rochester Convention, the throwing of cold water upon which by the Review called forth our remarks and Mr. Bradford's rebuke, is a step toward bringing about a more perfect union. Liberals will go away from that meeting cheered and strengthened by the association with fellow Liberals. Every convention yet held has done good and spread the truth. The coming meeting will be no exception. The New York State Freethinkers Association has a constitution but no creed; it has by-laws but no Bible. And neither constitution nor by-laws has a word to say about Spiritualism or Materialism. All that is required is that members may be in accord with the objects of the association. These objects are identical with the objects of the League. Therefore, discouragement to this body is discouragement to the League, and the church will not be slow to question the honesty and sincerity of any professed Liberal who does not work with his friends. In commenting upon our remarks in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 30th, Mr. Schumm charges us with endeavoring to "create a prejudice against the Review, because German blood flows through the veins of its editors!" This is childish, and so far from the truth that we will not take space to say anything about it. Next to the English scientists and philosophers—Tyndall, Darwin, Huxley, Mill, and Spencer—the Germans hav given us the best weapons against the church. Who that has read Haeckel does not revere the German institutions that educated him? Buchner's "Force and Matter" is one of the most destructiv assaults ever made upon the philosophy of the teleologists. England's Shakspere is rivaled by Germany's Goethe. To the scholarship of Germany the world owes much of the science of the present day, and not even Mr. Schumm himself can hav a higher regard for that country and that country's philosophers than ourselvs. But this is not a question of races. It is simply a consideration of the best means of "gittin' thar," as some of our Western friends put it. Whether there is a future life or not is not now under discussion. We know we liv here and we know that the mere fact that a man disbelieves in the Christian theology subjects him to serious disadvantages and disabilities. The Spiritualist and Materialist are in the same boat in this, and should and will fight together to remove them. A division of forces is, if not suicide, at least a much longer postponement of victory.

Lectures and Meetings.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has decided to revisit this country and Canada for three or four months, arriving in September. He wishes to immediately begin lecturing, and friends desiring his services can address him in care of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We know that he will do a great deal of good in the field, and trust that he may be kept busy. We shall cordially welcome him back to renew an acquaintance that was very pleasant.

THE Freethinkers of northern and central New York will hold a three-days' meeting at Carthage, N. Y., on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, July 27th, 28th, and 29th. The speakers will be ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham, Mrs. H. S. Lake, H. L. Green, and others. Professor W. F. Peck will furnish the vocal and instrumental music. This is the first meeting of the kind ever held in the vicinity, and it is very important that there be a general attendance of the Liberals of the northern part of the state.

THE fourth congress of the International Federation of Freethought Societies will be held at Amsterdam, beginning Aug. 31st, and continuing to and including Sept. 2d. Dr. H. C. Muller, secretary of the General Council, writes us that the prospects for a full representation and attendance are very good. Already Mr. Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant, Professor L. Buchner (Darmstadt), Dr. de Paepe, A. S. Morin, from Paris; Dr. E. Schlager, and others, hav promised to attend. Mr. C. V. Gerritsen (Amersfoort) and Dr. Y. M. Smit (Apeldoorn) will represent America in the General Council of the Federation. All bodies of Freethinkers in this country are invited to send delegates, and the invitation to attend is general. Communications should be addressed to Dr. H. C. Muller, 122 Brouwersgracht, Amsterdam.

MRS. S. J. LENONT writes from Northfield, Minn., under date of Sunday, June 24th: "Seldom, if ever, has this bigoted city, which boasts of its two sectarian colleges, been blessed with such a 'feast of reason and flow of soul' as we enjoyed this afternoon at the Opera House in listening to a lecture delivered by Dr. W. D. Cole, of Medford, Minn. Subject: 'The Origin of the Christian Religion.' The doctor deserves great credit from all those who were fortunate enough to be present to hear the scholarly discourse and the masterly manner in which it was delivered. It was plainly manifested throughout the delivery—which was about two hours—that the lecture was well received. The doctor is young in the lecture field of Freethought, but there are but few more earnest workers. He not only drives every nail home, but clinches it, and he is not afraid to handle the hydra-headed monster—orthodoxy—'without gloves,' and expose its true character, from its own history, regardless of fear or favor from any one. Could we be blessed with such a discourse once each week, it would not be many months ere the scales of bigotry and superstition would fall from the eyes of many who are now groveling in 'Egyptian darkness.' However antagonistic it may be to their antiquated theories, yet nothing but the plain truth, the stubborn facts, will ever alienate the masses from priestly control and guide them to the sacred fount of reason. But in Minnesota we are under great disadvantages. We lack workers. 'The harvest is ripe, but the laborers are few.' We also lack organization; while the enemies of our race are completely organized and perfectly equipped with all the sinews of war. Even the press is so completely under the control of the churches that it is almost impossible to get a lecture advertised when we do get together. If every Liberal would commence work with the same earnestness that our enemies manifest we would soon hav an organization in every town and precinct throughout the United States, and if each member would giv according to his ability, then we could avail ourselvs of the best talent in the land and 'fight the devil with fire.' As few as the laborers are, if they are only stanch and energetic they can accomplish much good. Come, Liberals, let us 'put our shoulders to the wheel and lift,' and we will be surprised t the result."

Communications.

Mormon Wickedness.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Will you allow me space in your valuable paper (which I think the most Liberal of all papers, as discussing both sides of every question worthy of discussion) to reply to "The Mormon Problem" as published by you on February 17, 1883. My only object in writing is that the Liberals of the world should know really what Mormonism is and what it proclaims itself to be, for evidently it is as little understood to-day by the mass of Liberals outside of Utah as any question that has agitated the minds of men for the last fifty years.

I will divide my subject into three parts. First, what is Mormonism, its aims and objects? second, a few words in reply to Judge Black's plea; third, that the Liberals and Truth Seeker are mistaken about the under dog in Utah.

What is Mormonism? To answer this in the cause of truth and justice correctly is to let Mormon apostles speak for themselvs, which I will do without adding or diminishing from their divine works. As a matter of fact, I admit that Mormonism is a legitimate child of Christianity, for no person can liv up to the requirements of the Bible and be a good citizen of the United States.

First you shall hear from Orson Pratt, one of the very few apostles who had enough brains to write anything (see remarkable visions of Joseph Smith, as published by the above apostle, from page 1 to 15, for all the following; all I may add I will place in brackets): Joseph Smith, Jr., was born in the town of Sharon, Windsor Co., Vermont, December 23, 1805. When ten years old, he moved to Palmyra, N. Y., and lived in that vicinity until he was twenty-one. He could read without much difficulty, but wrote a very imperfect hand. When somewhere about 14 or 15 years old he reflected upon the tenets of the hundreds of denominations and made up his mind they were all wrong. It also occurred to his mind that God was the author of but one doctrin. If any one of these denominations be the church of Christ, which is it? He could not rest till he became satisfied in relation to this question.

We next find him in a grove near his father's house, in the town of Manchester, kneeling down in prayer, asking God to tell him all about this question of his soul. At first the power of darkness came tempting him, endeavoring to overcome him, but he kept on, anxiously expecting to get an answer from God. He saw a very bright and glorious light in the heavens above. At first it seemed afar off. It gradually descended toward him, and as it came nearer it increased in brightness and magnitude, so that by the time it reached the tops of the trees the whole wilderness was illuminated in a glorious manner, etc., and when it reached the earth he was in the midst of it. He was soon enwrapped in a heavenly vision, and saw two glorious personages, who exactly resembled each other in features or likeness. [Mythical father and son.] He was informed his sins were forgiven him; also informed that God did not acknowledge anything that was then on the earth. The promis was given him that at some future time the true gospel should be made known to him, and the vision withdrew some time after. Being young, he was again entangled in the vanities of the world; but he repented.

On September 21, 1823, an angel came again, forgave Joe his sins, saying God sent him to do so; took him and let him hav a look at the gold Bible; told him it was the only true gospel, that it had been hid there since the beginning of the fifth century, and that it was a divine history of America. The first colony came over when God was scared at the dispersion of the tower of Babel. They were very enlightened and pious Jaredites. The second colony came direct from the city of Jerusalem, about six hundred years before Christ (if anyone knows when that was, let him speak). God killed off the first colony about the same time. These last emigrants were called Nephites—all pious and good. They subsequently became very wicked, and God got mad and made them kill each other, till there was only Mormon and a few men left. The American Indians are their descendants. They hav lost all their arts, science, civilization, and their skill in writing gold bibles.

On September 22, 1827, the angel gave the gold plates into Joseph Smith's hands, size 8x7, and bound like a book, with rings six inches thick; weight 200 pounds. As soon as he had the plates he started for home, but two villains were lying in wait to rob him of them. One struck him a powerful blow with a club before he perceived them; but being strong and large, he got loose and ran for home. They pursued him near home, then turned back for fear of pursuit. (Query: If there was only a myth-god, son, angel visits, and Joe in the plot, how did these two villains know Joe had these sacred golden records?) To intelligently understand Mormonism, it should be known that Joseph Smith is not the originator at all. Sidney Rigdon, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, and quite a number of the old nabobs, concocted the whole scheme. Smith was the jumping-jack till he knew he had the biggest trump, then he held on till the plot was laid for his assassination. His death made way for the ambitious ones who had designed it from before the 6th day of April, 1830, when the church was organized with six members.

It would take a book to tell all about what the angels and Joe told each other during their numerous interviews. In brief, Joe obtained the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthood direct from heaven, from the same priests (angels) who held the keys, and was also ordained by an angel, as was also P. Cowdery. "The priesthood is in the place of God on earth, to bless, curse, giv, or take. The earth is the Lord's, and all therein, and we are his saints," etc. One quotation from the Book of Mormon alone will satisfy all Freethinkers of its spuriousness. Bear in mind that these plates were hidden by the instruction of a holy angel direct from God to Moroni, son of Mormon. Then read this quotation as published in the work above referred to, by an inspired apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, page 15. The gospel in the Book of Mormon is the same as that in the New Testament, so help me D. M. Bennett. Is not that inspiration from a personal God—and the only true God, of course?

The only man on earth to-day to whom this God speaks is John Taylor, who, in his mind, is God's vicegerent, prophet, priest, and king. This man's word, in all things temporal and spiritual, is the voice of God to every man, woman, and child baptized in the Mormon church; all others are damned. This is taught in all their theological works. In practice, it is carried out as far as the priesthood dare. If Utah were a state, the same reign of terror would be inaugurated, in less than one year, that existed here from October 6, 1848, till the United States government placed General Connor and his company of troops at Camp Douglass, near Salt Lake City. The organization known as the Danite band, who commenced their hellish work in Missouri, continued in Illinois until forbearance ceased to be a virtue and humanity arose en masse. I hav the information from living Mormons (given when I was supposed to be sound in the faith) almost as old as their church, who worked on the Nauvoo temple from its foundation till they had to cease, that the church never killed its own stock for beef, mutton, or pork, from the time the temple was commenced until it was completed. Every night after dark a band was driven to the saints' slaughter-house, the hides, heads, etc., fed to the fishes, and by sunrise the meat was ready for God's chosen saints. The prophet, apostles, high councillors, quorums of seventy, elders, high priests, priests, teachers, and deacons, were all teaching at this time that the earth was the Lord's, and the saints had the divine right to steal the cattle of gentiles. I wish to emphatically impress upon the minds of Liberals that Mormonism is a revealed religion, direct from a personal God, etc.—that is, it assumes to be; but of course it is like all other revealed religions—a base, infamous lie, concocted and conceived by evil-designing persons.

Its objects are to boldly state a lie; then to stubbornly stick to it as just as good as the truth. This is the strength of Mormonism and Christianity, with this difference: Mormonism to-day is what Christianity was when the church of Christ burnt Bruno. The only reason the gentiles of Utah are not destroyed to-day as the heretics were in those godly times, when God and his holy priests reigned supreme, is not because God or the priests hav changed, but because the Mormons hav not the power. Their spirit and intentions are the same to-day and forever. I could quote from many of the authorities of the church now living. As one of the very best educated and talented men ever in the Mormon chruch, now dead, said on a Fourth of July celebration, "The voice of the people is the voice of the devil." Their cry is that they are the most loyal people in the United States; still, all the loyalty they know or acknowledge is obedience to God and his holy priesthood, and cannot by any manner of means be otherwise; for proof, every man and woman and child eight years old at baptism covenants to obey God when they reach Utah from Great Britain, Germany, or Norway (there hav not been four hundred American converts in twenty-five years, excepting Utah's young crop). These foreign-born people, alien in heart and in fact to everything American, make a covenant, after being washed and greased from the crown of their heads to the soles of their feet, that they will obey God and his holy priesthood in all things, temporal and spiritual, and help to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith upon this nation, and help to establish the kingdom of God upon the earth. This is not a spiritual kingdom in any sense. To divulge any of these mysteries is to sin against the Holy Ghost, which can never be forgiven by God or his servants, hence the doctrin of blood atonement as preached and published by the divine thugs, and practiced even now.

Do not think me tedious dwelling on this subject so long, as you may think Mormonism a very small affair. Small drops make the seas—little grains the earth.

Mormonism governs Utah with a more despotic theocracy than Russia is governed by to-day. Mormonism is the most perfect organization on the earth to suppress free thought, free press, free mails, and the rights of man. Mormonism is an absolute theocracy, not in theory, but in fact. For instance, there is one God. There is never but one man on the earth at one time to whom he makes known his will. See John Taylor, Arson, Spencer, the Pratts, Franklin, D. Richards, Brigham Young, etc., on priesthood. This almighty octopus givs his orders to the apostles, they to high priests, seventy bishops, bishops to teachers and deacons. The teachers visit every member in the church in all the world, on an average of twice a month the year around. The counsel these men giv is the word of God, direct from him, through the only channel he ever recognized in ancient or modern times. If the member knows the teacher is a liar, thief, murderer, or libertin, it makes no difference so long as God has appointed him and keeps him in office. These teacher's words are a savior of life or death. To disobey is to sin against the holy priesthood, the holy ghost, and God. Yet these priest-ridden slaves talk about the American Constitution being given by inspiration of God. Many Mormon works will prove that God never by prophet, seer, vision, or even a dream, spoke to any person on the earth, from John to Joseph Smith. When John Taylor published a paper called the Mormon in New York, in 1854, or near that time, I remember on a scroll on the illustated page was this: "The Constitution of the United States, given by inspiration of God. John Smith." My opinion is John Taylor is the originator of the lie, to blind public opinion to the real objects of the priesthood. This statement is in direct opposition to all Mormon prophecies by Smith, Young, Taylor, Cannon, Arson, Hyde, Book of Mormon, etc. There every breath is a curse on this republic and its people, except they become Mormons. I hav never seen such a statement in any church publication prior to John Taylor's illustration in New York, and do not believe Smith ever said such a thing. The Mormon church cannot produce the proof, for as early as 1833, in his history published by Brigham Young, Taylor, etc., he was accused of seeking after kingly power by a quorum of high priests. This constitutional question is only now raised because the priesthood want a state reaching from the Gulf of Mexico to the open sea beyond the Arctic regions, where God has got the ten lost tribes hidden. So the angel told J. Smith, else apostle Pratt is a liar! In fact, we are told very plainly when these ten lost tribes come forth, and the Mormon missionaries collect the Indians together, and the Mormon host combined, being all of Israel, there is not to be left root or branch of the gentiles or this gentile nation.

Your readers will perceive there is no chance for American ideas, where such an absolute priesthood prevails; they claim now they are Democrats, in hopes that party will help them to become a state, but John Taylor, Cannon, and Caine, can make every Mormon a Republican, an Independent Greenbacker, or anything they wish in two weeks, and every one will go into court and swear by the Christian's god that they changed their political views of their own free will and choice. Such is Mormonism.

Remember that Utah is as large as four or five of your New England states. It controls southern Idaho; the west part of Wyoming; a portion of Arizona; north eastern Nevada; and soon we will hav railroads connecting all these places. Mormon recruits for God's army on their arrival, are transported to colonies where there are no gentiles or apostates; they only know what the teachers tell them; their votes count as much as Judge Black's or President Arthur's six months after their arrival here. Yes, let every Liberal in America remember, if Utah becomes a state while the Mormons are in such a vast majority, they will control politically all the surrounding territories. You ask how. I will explain. On each side of all territorial lines, you will find the Mormons located; the word of the Lord comes, they are to go on a certain day to register, the same to vote; the same Lord commands them to go one, two, or three hundred miles, and perform the same thing in another county and territory. The railroads will furnish the way, the Lord the means. This opinion of mine of the future, is formed by observation and facts of the past. To my own knowledge, Charles C. Rich, one of the twelve apostles, was appointed by God, Brigham Young, and the holy priesthood in 1863, to go from Davis county, Utah, to Bear Lake Valley, Idaho. It was first called Richland county, then Rich, now Oneida county. In two years there were some thirteen settlements averaging about fifty inhabitants to each; every foot of land was claimed in the valley in December, 1864, that was possible to be used. I went there in that month. I thought I was getting out of the clutches of a malicious god called Elohim, but it was the mistake of my life. This Rich had one of the best farms in every settlement. All the corner lots, of value, in every town, or center, belonged to the Rich family; all the best hay lands on the island and between river and outlet of Bear Lake, was reserved from settlement till this man's sons became old enough to gobble up the whole. Then Rich county became Bear Lake; there was a Rich for county surveyor, assesor and collector; a Rich for county clerk, prosecuting attorney, tithings office clerks, store keepers, etc., and Charles C. Rich, Sr., apostle, etc., member of the Utah legislature, receiving his mileage and compensation from the tax payers of Utah for some ten years, not having ten legal votes in Utah territory; his home was, and his is in Paris, fourteen miles beyond the Utah line.

The aim and object of Mormonisim is this: An absolute aristocracy for the few; pauperism for the many; a theocratic government, in place of our constitution and institutions. If Mormonism is right, then American ideas are wrong. If it is religion, for a community of Europeans to settle in the heart of America, and set up another government, a kingdom in fact, with every officer to run it, from constable to king, in direct opposition to America and her laws; if this political organization is religion, then Judge Black, the New York World, and many others are right. If there is no religion in this political kingdom, then they are wrong. I assert there is none. I fully realize they are as superstitious, and submissiv to their masters, as Christians or Mahometans, but they are not religious in a true sense, or in the sense as implied in the amendment to our constitution. The only way I define the word religion, is to do good, and if my definition is correct, then there is no religion in Mormonism at all; in theology or politics; for it is organized vice and crime, against liberty, truth, and virtue.

I need not tell your readers that the same cause that made Judge Black the champion of Mormonism made the world their advocate. The extra assessment of these godly saints to pay the Judge's fees, made them whine loud enough for me to hear that they thought God and the priesthood should retain a Mormon lawyer in place of a gentile at such extortionate fees as Judge Black charged. Had not Judge Black been retained in 1881 to oppose Col. Robert Ingersoll, I should, from his argument, set him down as a shyster and trickster. I will admit he is an able Christian lawyer, and gave full satisfaction to his Mormon clients, by never touching the Mormon problem at all. Both men of straw set up by him and then knocked down, did not touch Utah and its affairs any more than it did the man in the moon, who, Christian teachers used to tell us long ago, was caught up for picking up sticks on the holy sabbath day. I admit Judge Black bulldozed the president, the house and Congress by his sophistry, but not the people; oh, no! of the great west especially. I presume Judge Black will admit Congress had the right to grant Utah the privilege of organizing Utah Territory according to law and not in conflict with the constitution and the United States. If Judge Black will investigate the laws made in Utah for the first fourteen years he will find nine-tenths of them unconstitutional. Every law had but one object in view, to help the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He will find there was not, and is not now, any state or territory. It is all church, and most all Mormon church at that. Of course it was quite consistent in Judge Black to defend Mormonism when he defended Christianity and the Bible, upon which Mormonism alone stands.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

Mr. Peabody Criticised.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I desire to briefly criticise "The Difficulties and Demerits of Spiritualism," an article recently contributed to your journal by Philip G. Peabody, Esq., of New York city.

1st. Jugglers do exist, as Mr. Peabody claims, who can perform as great wonders as any medium, notably the marvelous jugglers of India. So far I go with him, but it is highly unreasonable to infer from this that the millions of illiterate and uncultured mediums throughout the world hav necessarily attained this well-nigh superhuman skill acquired by artists only after a life spent in the pursuit. This should be borne in mind, it being generally considered sufficient to make the statement of Mr. Peabody, to consider the Spiritualist or investigator put absolutely hors de combat. Rather let such as would really disprove the truth of Spiritualism deal not in "glittering generalities," but, with an earnest determination to probe the matter to the bottom, if may be, devote time and attention to the personal and practical examination of the matter, through untiring and long-continued investigation into the merits and demerits of not one, or none, or even several of the most prominent of our materializing mediums, but of the claims of many; then, only, is a person's practical opinion of any value. Mr. Peabody offers us simply the philosophical or theoretical side, and not all of that even, as had he made a careful study of the works of America's great seer, Andrew Jackson Davis, he would hav there met with as perfect a philosophy, to say the least, as that of Baron D'Holbach, who, in many respects, I agree with Mr. Peabody, is one of the greatest philosophers the world has yet seen. It should also be remembered that D'Holbach wrote at a time when modern Spiritualism was unknown. Had he ever witnessed its most startling phenomena, the conclusions reached by his sagacious mind might hav been very different from what they were concerning immortality. I believe Mr. Peabody to be an honest investigator, but he is unpossessed of sufficient practical data to entitle his opinion to weight, except as a theory. For many years I was a fellow-student with Mr. Peabody in the intellectual arcana, and I am sure he will take no exception to my strictures, since he has frequently stated to me that he never made a carefully conducted course of examination into the claims of the various noted materializing mediums; hence, his knowledge is purely theoretical, and, in my opinion, incapable of controverting the results claimed to hav been arrived at by Prof. Carl Frederick Zollner, the great German thinker, in his long continued experiments with Dr. Slade, the American medium. These investigations are published with illustrativ diagrams in this country, under the title of "Transcendental Physics." Personally I am neither a convert to nor an opponent of Spiritualism. I do believe Christianity a great injury to mankind, and look hopefully to the day, fast approaching, when it shall be relegated to the realms of other exploded myths of the past. I do not agree with Mr. Peabody that in this world "virtue is its own reward." I believe, on the contrary, in the melancholy fact that skilled evil almost universally triumphs. A day may dawn when virtue and happiness will be synonymous terms, but that time is yet far distant. I sincerely hope there is no future life, for who can safely trust himself, even for one moment, in the power of a force (intelligent or otherwise), which rules such a cruel, frightfully cruel world, as this one wherein we liv. Also it is more rational for men to concern themselvs about a future to come than a past which nothing will recall to being.

ELLIOTT PRESTON.

FURTHER TAKEN TO TASK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I see by your issue of June 23d, that Mr. Philip G. Peabody thinks that ill nature has been unsparingly used in the articles which hav appeared in your columns in favor of Spiritualism—but that the "simple arguments" of Mr. T. Winter hav never been answered.

It is very evident that we view things from different stand-points.

I hav rarely, if ever, seen what looked to me like ill-nature in the writings of Spiritualists given in THE TRUTH SEEKER. But hav often observed replies to our hyperborean friend Winter sprinkled with mirth, ridicule, and sarcasm, which appeared appropriate.

He puts in an appearance nearly every week simply to reiterate the same old "argument" (?) which our friend thinks has never been answered. Boiled down, it amounts to about this: Man is man solely by virtue of his flesh, blood, and bones; if anything survives the death of the body, it could be plainly seen emerging therefrom, like the butterfly from the catterpillar's skin.

The great Arago declared it to be dangerous to pronounce the word impossible outside of positiv science. But here is our friend Winter dogmatically affirming a negativ (which is said to be impossible of proof) with as much confidence as he can feel in the multiplication-table.

Had our friend lived at the time of the discovery, or invention of the magnetic needle, he would hav declared all fools or knaves who asserted that there was some invisible power which caused the needle when properly constructed and placed in the right conditions, to point always in the same direction. The mighty cyclone is composed of invisible air, and the mightier electricity is known only by its effects.

I hav attended several hundred materializing seances and never saw less than three, and often eight or nine of those whom I well knew when in their own earthly bodies. They often referred to incidents in their mundane existences of which no one present had ever heard, and some of which I had long since forgotten.

Dr. Carpenter, of London, accounts, to his own apparent satisfaction, for such phenomena on the "dominant idea" theory. That is, we expect to see such and such ones, and we think we do, when it is simply optical illusion. But the old doctor's theory don't work in my case. I hav for a long time expected to see a favorit uncle, but who has never put in an appearance, while others of whom I had not thought hav suddenly appeared.

I hav seen two at the same time when I knew there was no mortal but the medium in the cabinet.

Now I oppose this positiv knowledge to Mr. Winter's negativ, or no knowledge.

Our spirit friends assure us that there are those in spirit life, who, when here, so confirmed themselvs in the absurdities of "orthodox" theology, that they hav been searching for Jesus and the great white throne for many decades, and although still unsuccessful, their inmost natures are so distorted and twisted that they are deaf to all arguments against a special and local heaven and hell, and after failing to find the former, expect every moment to be swallowed up by the "bottomless pit."

And I hav often thought on reading the effusions of friend Winter—he seems to so glory in the hope and belief that when his heart ceases to beat he will be defunct "intirely"—I hav often thought, I say, he is so confirmed in this idea—which seems to be his ruling passion—that when he goes "over there" and becomes conscious of the fact that he is still "alive and kicking," he will swear that he is "as dead as a door nail," and that it will take a long time to make him own up that he was mistaken while here!

If Messrs. Winter and Peabody will take the trouble to read the writings of Prof. Hare, Epes Sargent, and others of our country, A. B. Wallace, F.R.S., Wm. Crookes, F.R.S., and others of England, and Prof. Zollner, one of the most profound scientists of Germany, all of whom were compelled, on investigating the phenomena, to giv up preconceived opinions and adopt the spiritual hypothesis, they will be the wiser for it.

Why don't the spirits materialize in the light? is a very proper question; but, can they under any circumstances? is no less so. The spirit world is governed by laws as exact and inexorable as the material universe—there is nothing supernatural. Some chemical effects are possible in darkness but not in the light—so the photographer will tell you.

All human knowledge has been gained by observation and reflection. We know that there is uniformity in many operations of nature, and infer that it is so in all. But no one can comprehend from the very bottom any of nature's processes. We know that "grass grows" under some circumstances, and we marvel not at the phenomenon, it is so common. But we cannot grasp the entire process. If it is susceptible of demonstration may we not hope to see it in some future blast of Winter? Our icy brother appears to regard himself as the embodiment of all the secrets of nature that are worth knowing. He speaks as "one having authority, and not as a scribe." He knows intuitivly—without investigation—that Hare, Edmonds, Crookes, Mapes, Wallace, Varley, Zollner, and many others of equal celebrity, are the veriest charlatans.

It will be a mistake for friend Peabody, or anybody else, to consider these off-hand thoughts as dictated by ill will. Being an unconditional optimist—believing the universe, both spiritual and material, to be run on fixed principles to the end that the greatest amount of good shall accrue—I regard all human thought, will, and action, as necessary to the grand result.

I consider evil and crime as necessary as their opposits for the education and development of the race. As the luscious peach was once a green and sour knob, so mankind must pass through crime and suffering to reach a high state of intelligence, goodness, and happiness. I therefore harbor no malice for even the murderer, much less for Brother Winter, whom I regard as an honest man. But in him I find a living proof of what I hav long suspected—that mankind are the most remarkable folks in the world.

If this life is all, nature is a tyrant. Some pass a long life of ease and comfort, while others suffer a veritable hell on earth. While if we hav an eternity before us, and controled by the universal law of progressiv development—or evolution—a glorious destiny awaits all.

Instead of a knowledge of a future life tending to make us neglect the duties of this, as Mr. Peabody supposes, the opposit is the fact.

STEPHEN YOUNG.

The Antiquity of Man.

From the London Lancet.

An interesting discovery, of much importance for geological and archæological science, has recently been made in a coal mine at Bully-Grenay, in a French department of Pas-de-Calais. A new gallery was being pierced, when a cavern was broken into, which discovered the fossil remains of five human beings in a fair state of preservation—a man, two women, and two children composed the group. The man measured about seven feet, the women six feet six, and six feet, the children four feet and rather less than this. In addition, some fragments of arms and utensils of petrified wood and of stone, with numerous remains of mammals and fish, were brought to light. A second subterranean chamber enclosed the remains of eleven human bodies of large size, several animals, and a large number of various objects, with some precious stones. The walls of the cave exhibited drawings representing men fighting with gigantic animals. Owing to the presence of carbonic anhydride a third and larger chamber, which appeared to be empty, was not searched. Five of the petrified human remains will be exhibited at the mayoralty of Lens. The remainder of the bodies which hav been brought to the surface are to be conveyed to Lille, there to await a thorough examination by the experts of the Faculté des Sciences. Information has been telegraphed to the representativs of the Académie des Sciences of Paris and to those of the British Museum. If the discovery be a real one, no doubt can be entertained of the value of the find, which would on the face of it seem to show that prehistoric man is anything but a myth

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
21 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 21, 1883.

The Monument Fund.

We hav received during the past week the following sums from the persons named:

Previously acknowledged,	$1,013 57	Joseph Henry,	50
Enoch Wickersham,	1 00	O. P. Eldred,	1 00
C. B. Reynolds,	1 00	J. B. Travers,	50
R. P. Harrington,	1 00	W. J. Skidmore,	1 00
Hiram Wilbur,	1 00	C. E. Trask,	1 00
John Nimmo,	3 00	Mr. T. G. Hogue,	1 00
Henry Renard,	25	Mrs. A. J. Hogue,	1 00
W. S. Williams,	1 00	Geo. H. Peterson,	1 00
		Total,	1,028 82

STATEMENT OF PROGRESS MADE.

We had hoped ere this to be able to publish a complete account of the committee's work in the building of the Monument, but owing to various delays, such as the difficulty of getting the committee together in business hours and getting builders to estimate, etc., we hav not heretofore been able to do it.

First, as to the plot in which Mr. Bennett lies. Supposing that he had at least twenty years more of usefulness in Freethought work before him, Mr. Bennett had made no preparations concerning sepulture, and his death occurring so suddenly left his friends no time. Mrs. Bennett's brother, Mr. Loren J. Wicks, of Beverly N. J., owned a lot in Greenwood Cemetery, in which reposed his wife, and he offered that to receive his brother-in-law, which offer was gratefully received by Mrs. Bennett. Mr. Wicks proposes to rest by the side of his wife when nature calls him, and Mrs. Bennett wishes to lie by the side of her loved and honored husband. This made the purchase of extra ground imperativly necessary, and the lot adjoining has been purchased by Mrs. Bennett out of the scant resources of the office at a cost of $286. Mr. Wicks has put a railing around the two lots, making them one, of granit posts and iron tubing, such as is generally used in that cemetery. The cost was $270, half of which would naturally belong to Mrs. Bennett to pay. But Mr. Wicks has generously given this half—amounting to $135—as his donation to the Monument to Mr. Bennett. Thus the plot and railing are all settled for, leaving only the monument itself to be erected by subscriptions from Mr. Bennett's friends.

The design selected by the committee is a plain and massiv granit pile. The base consists of three stones, varying in dimensions from five feet six inches to three feet nine inches. The hight of all three bases is four feet six inches. Surmounting this is what the builders call the "die," a granit column six feet six inches high and three feet square where it rests on the base, tapering to two feet six inches. On top of this rests the cap, with plain lines and polished faces, two feet six inches high, making the total hight of monument thirteen feet six inches. The four sides of the die will be polished, and near the top of the front face will be a bronze medallion portrait of Mr. Bennett on a plate two feet wide by two feet six inches high. Under this will be the usual record of the deceased's name, birth, and death, and under that an appropriate tribute to his worth. On the remaining three sides will be extracts from Mr. Bennett's works—glowing truths uttered by himself, and which are the best monument he could hav. They will tell to coming generations what manner of man he was, and long after the granit shaft shall hav crumbled they will liv in the memories of those who learned them from its face.

The contract for the granit work has been awarded to Mr. John Sheehan, of New Rochelle, N. Y., an old friend and warm supporter of Mr. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER. It was he who repaired the Paine Monument erected many years ago in his town, and all who hav seen it since bear witness that it was skilfully done.

The cost of this work, set upon a cement foundation six feet deep and square—which is peremptorily required by the cemetery authorities—will be just one thousand dollars. It is to be of the best Quincy granit, and is a low figure for such a massiv design as the committee selected.

The contract for the medallion has not yet been awarded, but the price has been ascertained. It will be modeled by one of the best sculptors in this city, and will cost $250.

The cost of the lettering upon the die will depend upon how much is selected by the committee from the writings of Mr. Bennett, but such paragraphs as hav been already chosen will bring the amount up to $150. It is probable that will be the cost within a few dollars.

This brings the total asked for by the committee up to fourteen hundred dollars, instead of twelve, as previously announced, it having been found upon further investigation that this is the least sum which will erect a monument worthy of the man and lasting. Other and lighter designs could be selected, but they would crumble in a comparativly few years, and need an annual expenditure to keep in repair. We are assured that upon this monument one or two hundred years will leave no damaging trace. In Greenwood, too, no vandal hands can deface the structure, as Paine's has been in its publicity at New Rochelle. The whole park-like grounds are thoroughly policed, and if any vindictiv worshiper of mythological deities should dare lay sacrilegious hands upon it he will expiate his offense in the prison provided for miscreants.

As seen by the exhibit above the sum on hand is $1,028.82; the sum required is $1,400. The committee asks that the deficiency be speedily made up, as the work must be paid for by September, the month in which the monument will be set and dedicated.

The Sunday Question Again.

Progress is the order of the day. Notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the God-in-the-Constitutionists and a few other sectarian bigots, there is a rapidly growing sentiment throughout the country against the observance of Sunday in any other manner than that chosen by each individual for himself. An attempt has recently been made in Washington to open the Museums, Libraries, and Art Galleries on Sunday. That this effort received the indorsement of most of the leaders of thought in that city shows public sentiment to be growing in the right direction. Colonel Ingersoll gave his opinion in the following letter to the Washington Post:

25 LAFAYETTE AVENUE,
WASHINGTON, June 16, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Post: I am in favor of all libraries, parks, museums, and picture galleries being open on Sunday. Sunday should be a day of joy and recreation. The gloom of the Puritan Sabbath has darkened lives enough. Nothing can be more perfectly hateful than the orthodox Sunday. It is a prison—a kind of dungeon in which joy is chained and shackled.

The idea that we can make God happy by making ourselvs miserable is the extreme of folly. The fact is that ministers fear competition. They are afraid that people will keep away from the church if any other place is open. The ordinary preacher cannot compete successfully against a park or "wax wurx." I am in favor of being happy seven days in a week. I am the enemy of dyspeptic piety. I want to see the people enjoying themselvs. It is not recreation to go to church and hear about total depravity and eternal fire.

There is nothing in the average sermon to cheer the average man.

I say that all libraries, parks, and galleries should be open on Sunday, and I would like to hear a grand opera every Sunday. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Most of the ministers, of course, opposed the movement—sacrilege, they called it—but their opinion is of comparativly little weight. Their course is influenced no doubt by the fear that their congregations would be made smaller with any competition. It remains for Congress to take action upon the matter.

St. Louis is also agitated over the question of a Liberal Sunday versus a Puritanical Sabbath, and the Post-Dispatch prints nearly a page of opinions pro and con. They are largely from the ministers of the city, who appear to be more liberal in their views than their Washington brethren. A few condemned even the reading of Sunday papers, but the majority favored recreation—with the provision that people should first go to church. Some of the ridiculous prohibitions of the old rabbinical laws were cited by a rabbi, among them being the following, which are just as sensible as many of the wants of the clergy now. In ancient times, the rabbi said, "it was sinful to carry a needle on the Sabbath, to carry any more ink than just sufficient to make two Hebrew characters, to set a dislocated joint on the Sabbath, to bury the dead, to carry any more food than would cover the surface of a dried fig, and, worse than all, they forbade an egg to be eaten that was laid on the Sabbath day."

There is no perceptible difference in the folly of those rules and the Christian idea that it is sinful to buy, sell, or read Sunday papers, or to go on an excursion, or visit the park, or library, or museum, or to play base ball. One St. Louis divine, after condemning all these occupations, said it was admissible to visit a sweetheart on Sunday, if the lover "did not keep her from divine service." It is funny to see the way these ministers want everybody forced to attend "divine service." Even the most liberal put in that clause. It shows how afraid they are that they cannot compete with innocent amusements when the people are left absolutely free to choose. The young man who wouldn't go to see his girl in preference to going to church never deserves a wife.

The case seems to be narrowed down to about this: It is the world of sensible folks against the church, and the ministers are just finding it out, and reluctantly owning up. In this city last Sunday, it is estimated by a daily newspaper, over a half-million of people left the city on excursions. If the church has any lingering hope that she can control this vast body, she might as well giv it up now. Though nominally Christians, they utterly repudiate ecclesiastical interference with their Sunday pursuits. This is the way it seems likely to end in all large cities, and the sooner our ministerial censors acknowledge this fact the smoother will be their paths through this vale of tears.

"The Church Never Forgivs."

The courts of Brooklyn hav had recently before them the case of the Rev. "Father" McCarthy, who was charged by his servant girl, Kate Dixon, with having criminally assaulted her. The priest made the countercharge that she had robbed him. Both cases were tried before Justice Naeher, that against the girl coming on first. This was dismissed. Then came the charge against the priest, which was also dismissed. One of the reasons why the counsel for the priest asked for dismissal was that "the girl had not resisted enough." After the justice had dismissed the charge of stealing against the girl, but before he had acquitted the priest, he found the following letter in his hallway:

JUDGE NAEHER: Honored Sir—As a lawyer, I approve your decision in the Kate Dixon case; as your friend, I am proud of it, but I am sorry for you. There is no political future for you. When your term expires you will retire. If you ever seek another office you will find a mysterious and incomprehensible but all-powerful barrier erected in your path which you can not overcome. Your public usefulness is at an end. You hav offended the church. Be sure of this—the church never forgivs.

About fifteen years ago a judicial officer in New York city—learned like you, independent like you—made a decision which offended the church. He stood high in his party—he had once been talked of for governor. His term expired, he has never been heard of since. Probably you hav forgotten him, but he is living, and in absolute poverty. Be sure of this—the church never forgivs. MEPHISTOPHILES.

Put into plain English the above means that the Catholic church rules the elections in Brooklyn, and she sees to it that those who offend her are properly punished. An old Freethinker of this city stated to us last week that a Jesuit clerk was put into the Democratic headquarters at the last presidential campaign who suppressed documents that had been forwarded to Gen. Hancock because they told against the Catholics. There is no kind of doubt but that this city is ruled by Cardinal McClosky through his nephew, John Kelly, the chief of Tammany Hall. Kelly controls 40,000 or more Catholic votes. He can throw them with as much certainty as though he had them all in his hand in a bunch. The cardinal controls Kelly and the pope controls the cardinal. There may be a little ring like this in Brooklyn, and if so the judge who dismissed the case a priest had brought will be sure to feel its displeasure. As the pope loses his power in Europe he strengthens it in this country. He and his church are among the worst enemies our democratic republican institutions hav.

Help Spread the Light.

It is acknowledged by all that the best way to spread Liberal principles is by papers, tracts, and books. Every issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a good missionary document, and every Freethought book sold is a silent pleader and propagator of the truth. There are thousands of Freethinkers all over the country whom we do not know and who do not know this paper. But our friends know them, and we ask such as are willing to spend a few moments for the good of Liberalism to send us their names and addresses, that we may mail them copies of the paper. We are willing to furnish the copies necessary for this purpose and mail them, as we hope a few extra subscribers may thereby be obtained which will make the pecuniary outlay square. But the main object is to spread the knowledge of Liberalism, its aims and objects, what we think and why we think it. We would like every one to know that the Christian faith is a rope of sand, that the churches are taking the money of the people without giving any return. It is the duty of all Freethinkers to let their neighbors know that the fires of hell hav been quenched.

Many Liberals say they hav no time to devote to missionary work, and do not like to argue with their church acquaintances. Very well, send us the names and let THE TRUTH SEEKER argue the case. Where a man is Liberally inclined—and not dead to all sense and reason—we hope and think THE TRUTH SEEKER will bring him clear out of the fog.

To stimulate our friends in this work we make the following offer, only asking that when the sender has read the pamphlets he shall hand them around that others may be benefited.

To every one sending us the names and addresses of twenty-five independent men and women who do not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who do their own thinking, we will send one copy of either of the below-named twenty-five cent books:

"Influence of Christianity upon Civilization," by B. F. Underwood.

"Advancement of Science." The Inaugural Address of Prof. John Tyndall delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

"Chronicles of Simon Christianus." His manifold and wonderful adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. Fidel.

"Religion not History." An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F.W. Newman, of the London University.

"The Besant-Hatchard Debate." A two nights' debate between Mrs. Annie Besant and Rev. A. Hatchard on "Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World."

"The Clergyman's Victims." A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball.

"Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahweh or Jehovah," shown to be the worship of the Devil.

"Gottlieb: His Life." A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written by S. P. Putnam.

"Jesus Christ." His Life, Miracles, Deity, Teachings, and Imperfections. By W. S. Bell.

"Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier," a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings.

"Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, The Book of the Generation of Jesus." First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up.

To those who do not know twenty-five persons whom a perusal of THE TRUTH SEEKER would be likely to benefit, but who can send a list of ten names, we will send either of the following by D. M. Bennett:

"Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind."
"The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers."
"The Gods of Superstition."
"The Great Religions of the World."
"Jesus Christ." Considered as an Infidel.
"An Hour with the Devil."
"Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds."
"Honest Questions and Honest Answers."

Or either of the following by Underwood:

"What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity."
"Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency."
"Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint."
"Paine the Political and Religious Reformer."
"Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs."
"Materialism and Crime."
"Will the Coming Man Worship God?"
"Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity."

This is a chance to enlighten a large body of people, to help THE TRUTH SEEKER, and to get good books to circulate by only a few moments' work. We hope the responses will be many.

The Salvation Army

One of Christianity's many sins that must be answered for to the people is the erratic Salvation Army. This summer the motley bands hav come prominently and often before the public, and nearly every time it is in conflict with the police or a police justice. The leaders of every band appear to be not only dishonest but positivly immoral. The young girls who are induced to leave their homes to follow the fortunes of these pious adventurers are often going to their ruin. Indeed, it is doubtful if a single virtuous man or woman can be fouud in any of the bands. The following bit of inside history of one of the mobs is furnished by the Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald. It shows a state of morality which it is difficult to believe can exist outside of the slums of large cities. Professional Christian soul-savers hav always been objects of suspicion to right-minded and decent people, but this "army" is sunk in a degradation lower if possible than the ministers cataloged in the "Crimes of Preachers:"

"I joined the Salvation Army," said Miss "Sophy" Richardson, ex-lieutenant of the Army, to a Herald representativ this afternoon, "because I didn't know anything about it except what was on the surface. I certainly knew that there was no money in it, for the subordinate officers at least. Girls are urged to join in spite of the opposition of their parents, and are told to leave all that to the Lord. I don't know what I hav been thinking of. Somebody told me after I got here that I had better go home. I thought the Army was all right and that Captain Hall was about perfect till she began carrying on with Will Moore, the major's son. He is seventeen years old and she is twenty-five. They used to correspond, and she is engaged to him now. The major says his son is going to the devil. He has taken Captain Hall to Toronto. She was crazy about him and used to think and talk about him all the time. The papers said that she used to hav fainting spells in the meeting, but they were hysterics. Any girl would hav them that kicked around as she did. She was no more sincere than—than, well than you would be, getting up and talking that way. She would come home from meeting and take off some of the converts and talk about Will Moore. I was perfectly disgusted with the Army after that.

"They say that they didn't want me to stay in the Army, but, about two minutes after Mr. Carter said that I couldn't stay, he wanted me to go to Canada. I was a lieutenant in the Army before the public, but was never treated as such by Captain Hall. Mr. Carter had my place, and Miss Hall told him lots of stuff she had no right to tell.

"All the money was taken by Major Moore. They raised money for a barracks, but they were never built. I don't think they will ever build a barracks here. I think the major is sincere in some things, but I don't understand how, if he only gets a salary of ten dollars a week, as he says he does, he can liv in the first-class style he does in Brooklyn and can make trips to England. I got five dollars a week and had to pay for my board and clothes out of it. Captain Thompson and Captain Jolly are mad because the papers here hav taken my part. Captain Thompson said Saturday night that in two weeks people would be making fun of me. He said people were saying bad things about me. Captain Jolly said the papers had no right to take my part. They said I had no right to leave the Army. They talk against the churches and church fairs, but if they hav one of their banquets you will see worse things than at any church fair.

"I hav done nothing wrong or that I am ashamed of. Major Moore will be here next week and I suppose I shall hav another free lecture, but I am a free citizen, if that's what you call it, and guess I can stand it."

The Army had an unrestful private meeting at Seager Hall last evening. There were three resignations, as stated in yesterday's Herald. Some of the members hav been disturbed by the conduct of Miss Stanger, a member of the Army, who is called the "Lily," and who sits with three or four boys in the rear of the hall and plays on the tambourine. Mr. Wildredge, the dyer, who is opposed to Miss Richardson, was allowed by Captain Jolly to speak at great length, while Mr. Root, who is a friend of Miss Richardson, was not allowed to speak at all. Miss Richardson was fervently prayed for, but was not allowed to speak.

Mr. William H. Hall, who is said to be the Syracuse secretary of Major Moore, is reported to hav received a letter from the major remonstrating with Mr. Hall for his intimacy with Mrs. Rogers, an activ female member of the Army. Mr. Hall is reported to hav said that he wrote the major that the affair was none of the major's business.

Captain Hall is said to hav one night taken a male married convert out of the hall for alleged religious communion. The convert's wife came and found Miss Hall alone with her husband and is said to hav given the captain quite a piece of her mind.

Miss Captain Hall is also alleged to hav feigned fainting fits after the meeting had begun, for the object of being taken home by Mr. or "Colonel" Carter, at whose house she was staying. Mr. Carter, it is said, would leave the meeting and accompany Miss Hall home, when a lady member of the Army would hav answered all necessary purposes just as well. It is also said that Miss Captain Hall would go into Colonel Carter's bed-room when he was in bed, and talk with him about Will Moore. The colonel is married.

If we may credit the New Testament account, Christ used to travel around the country much after the manner of these people, but while he "took no thought of the morrow" they appear to take a great deal—at least the leaders do. The rank and file only desire to appease their appetites and gratify their passions. The colored clergy are scarcely lower and more animal-like than they.

The "army" has driven a great many of their innocent dupes to the insane asylums. The leaders hav ruined numbers of young girls. They hav begged money for the "cause of Christ" and converted it to their use. They hav used religion as the church has used it in all times—to the detriment of the people. It is time the farce were stopped, by religious people ceasing to lend aid and encouragement to these mountebanks and tricksters. The "army" is a legitimate child of the church militant, and the respectable portion of the Christians must bear this obloquy till they distinctly disavow and repudiate it.

Further Exhibition of Christian Tyranny.

A dispatch from England, dated the 9th, says that Parliament has again resolved to keep Mr. Bradlaugh out of his seat at all hazards. The bigoted S. Northcote arose and said he had heard that the member for Northampton proposed to perform the Parliamentary duties imposed upon him by his constituents regardless of any orders from the House, and asked Mr. Gladstone whether the report was true. The powerless premier replied that it was. Mr. Northcote then moved that Mr. Bradlaugh be excluded from the precincts of the House until he engaged not to disturb its proceedings. The motion was adopted by a vote of 232 to 65. Previous to the taking of the vote Mr. Gladstone and several other members of the Government withdrew from the House. The other members of the Ministry present voted with the minority.

This is a very humiliating position for the premier of England to be placed in, but he deserves the disgrace he brought upon himself by deferring to this session what he should hav done two years ago, when he had a majority at his back. Had he at that time championed the cause of freedom as vigorously as he has since, Mr. Bradlaugh would now hav his seat, and England hav been spared the ignominy of being ruled by a handful of religious bigots. Although boasting loudly of the freedom enjoyed by her subjects, England's treatment of Mr. Bradlaugh has proved her assertions to be shallow hypocrisy and hollow sham, and justify him in assuring the speaker of the House, as he has since done in reply to the speaker's letter ordering him to keep away, that as his enforced absence is illegal he shall take his seat, and if prevented by force will appeal to his constituents. If there be broken heads before this matter is finally settled the blame will not rest on the Freethought party, and the verdict of the fair-minded portion of the world will not be adverse to the champion of constitutional liberty.

Leagues in Arkansas.

ALEXANDER, ARK., July 6, 1883.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Will you please answer through THE TRUTH SEEKER: Are there any Liberal Leagues in this state, the names of the officers, etc.? I think this would be a good field for some able Liberal speaker to labor in. We are sadly in need of such, as the field is large and laborers few. Yours truly, A. J. HALL.

League No. 90 is at Little Rock, Arkansas. Its officers are W. F. Hill, President; Carl Jonitz, Secretary; W. J. Murphy, Treasurer. League No. 103 is located in Forest City, Arkansas, and is officered by the following named persons: W. T. Wellborn, President; H. S. Wright, Secretary; S. C. Wilson, Treasurer.

THE Newark Liberal League had quite an enjoyable picnic at Woodside Park on the glorious Fourth, which was so glorious this year that it seemed as if everything would melt in its fervid rays. However, beneath the pleasant shadow of the lofty trees and by the sparkling falls, the Liberals of our sister city deposited themselvs and passed a comfortable and quiet day, and really enjoyed a foretaste of the "good time coming" when all the world shall be akin, and there shall be no sectarian bars. S. P. Putnam read the Declaration of Independence, Mr. Wakeman gave a pithy oration, and Mrs. Neyman and Madame Michele made the occasion happy with their presence. There was plenty of music, laughter, talk, dancing when one felt like it, and a decidedly generous and genial feeling all round. It was a festival such as Liberal Leagues must multiply all over this land. We must use these national holidays for the advancement of liberty and science. The Newark League is a bright and shining light in this respect and the impulse of its noble work will undoubtedly be felt far and wide.

How a Clergyman Defrauded the Taxpayers.

From the Blade, of Concordia, Kansas.

One of the boldest and most glaring outrages upon the taxpayers that has come to our knowledge lately, was perpetrated by a clergyman in Cawker City recently. His society had a church good enough for all purposes of worship. A gentleman owned a house, a large, elegant dwelling-house, that cost to build over $8,000. Becoming involved he was compelled to sell, and sold to the aforesaid clergyman. Not relishing the idea of paying taxes on this costly luxury, the clergyman devised a plan which, if successful, would enable him to evade that onerous burden and throw it upon less sharp, shrewd, and unprincipled people. There were spacious parlors, drawing-rooms, library, etc., and one of these could be spared for worship, and he would hav plenty of room left for his family. He would hav worship there. This plan was carried out, and after a few meetings had been held and some "holy water" sprinkled upon the premises, he appeared before the board of commissioners praying that the property be relieved from taxation on the ground that it was a place of "public worship," and his prayer was granted. There was eight thousand dollars, as much obligated by law to pay taxes as any other, released from taxation through the cunning of the priest and the ignorance of the Board of Commissioners. The $350 that property should pay has to be paid by others; not alone making them contribute to the support of religion, but unjustly increasing their burden by exempting private property from bearing its proportionate share. The board at the instigation of this priest disregarded the law, which is that church property must be used exclusivly for religious purposes to be released from taxation. But then, boards of commissioners always "come down" when priest or preacher bids them come.

The Sun Gets "Blatant" Again.

From the New York Sun of July 7th.

In many, if not most of our colleges, what is called the baccalaureate sermon constitutes one of the chief features of the closing exercises of the college year—the commencement, as it is called. It is preached to the graduating class, and usually by the president of the institution, he being a minister of the gospel most commonly. Of course the reverend president lays himself out to produce the very best sermon of which he is capable on that conspicuous occasion.

During the last few weeks, this being the commencement season at our colleges, newspapers in different parts of the country hav contained reports of scores of these baccalaureate sermons. We hav gone through many of the reports with more or less care, with a view to discovering whether the preachers showed that they properly appreciated the present condition of thought and inquiry concerning religion among intelligent men. For whoever is in a position to observe the drift of opinion and sentiment is well aware that during the last ten years a very remarkable, a very significant, a very portentous change has come over men's minds even within that short space of time so far as regards religious faith. Fundamental theological doctrins formerly accepted without question, and doubt of whose truth gave a man a reputation for eccentricity, if not as a detestable scoffer, are now openly questioned, and even rejected by great numbers of the laity and by many of the clergy.

Religious skepticism prevails throughout Europe and America, and instead of the Infidel being the exception, as was once the case, implicit faith is rather the exception among men of education. Women's sentiment still clings about the cross, and they inculcate veneration for religion in their children. The mainstay for the church is the faith and devotion of mothers. Without feminin help the outlook would be dismal indeed for Christian theologians. But even among women the seeds of doubt hav at last been sown, and unless the growth is checked they are sure to follow their brothers in revolt against the church.

The present skepticism, too, does not concern religious forms and ceremonies merely, and particular doctrins of the theological system. It does not trouble itself with any such questions as those whose discussion brought about the Reformation. It goes much further and much deeper; for it doubts the reasonableness and the soundness of the whole theological superstructure—of all supernaturalism, even. It does not oppose any given interpretation of the Bible or assail any doctrin or any church as unscriptural, but it rejects the revelation on which all churches and all Christian theology are based.

A tremendous religious revolution is therefore now going on; one beside which the reformation seems small. Christianity, revealed religion, theology, and the church are now fighting for life. If the modern and fashionable philosophy prevails, they will hav to step out, like the paganism and polytheism Christianity displaced. And this philosophy, so subversiv of theology, is proving to be especially attractiv to young men, and most of all to college young men.

Do we find in the baccalaureate sermons of this summer that the preachers rightly understand and appreciate the magnitude of this momentous conflict? We hav looked in vain through the reports of these discourses, the product of so much thought and care, to discover evidences that their authors were aware of the gravity of the situation and were prepared to meet its necessities.

That is, we hav not found any fit champion of faith among the preachers of baccalaureate sermons, presumably among foremost theologians of the denominations to which they belong. They seem to be at a loss what to say. But the issue must be met squarely and bravely.

Brutal Work by an Insane Christian.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your issue for May 26th you copy an article from the New York World, headed, "Victims of Christianity," which calls to my mind a similar case which took place in Maine in the early part of the present century. I cannot giv you the date, but think it must hav been more than seventy-five years ago.

A farmer named Purvington, living between Augusta and Waterville, became religiously insane, and if I mistake not, he read the Bible and prayed with his family in the evening before the murder. At any rate when the family retired they left him reading the Bible. After they had fallen asleep he entered the sleeping-room with an ax and killed his wife, and I hav forgotten whether it was three, four, or five children. His oldest was a son of seventeen in another room. He heard what his father was doing and arose to flee just as the father was entering the room to kill him. He had to leap by his father to save himself, and when doing so the ax descended with terrible force, but the boy was so near his father that the ax reached over him and the corner of it cut a dreadful gash in the back part of his shoulder, while the handle bruised the top of it. The lad escaped and aroused the neighbors, who on reaching the house found the wife and children dead in their beds, and the father dead on the floor. After killing the wife and children with the ax he had cut his own throat with a razor, and laid the bloody implement on the leaves of the open Bible.

At that time Maine was a district belonging to and under the government of Puritanical Massachusetts, and the law forbade burying murderers or suicides in any graveyard, and required that they be buried in a corner in the highway where two roads met, and that a stake be driven down through their bodies after they are buried.

When a young man I spent some weeks a few miles from this man's grave, and traveled the road where he was buried many times. A farmer pointed out the spot in the crotch of the road where he was buried. The ground was level and there was no indication whatever that anyone had ever been buried there. I conversed with many of the oldest people on the subject, but could not learn that either his family or neighbors had ever received from him a hint of the sacrifice he was about to make. He probably kept his own counsel, as Abraham did, but sacrificed his family because he found no old ram tangled in the thicket by his horns, the stink of whose burning flesh would hav been "a sweet smelling savor in the nostrils" of an imaginary God, and induced him to spare the blood of his confiding wife and children.

I asked the farmer if they fulfilled the law by driving the stake through his body after he was buried. He replied that they drove a stake down in the grave, but he thought it did not go farther than to his coffin.

It is well to keep these sacrifices before the people as warnings to the weak-minded till they come to understand that the Bible is a human composition, having no more divine authority than "Gulliver's Travels."

J. Hacker.

Berlin, N. J.

Shooting at People up a Tree.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I want to quote a few sentences from Cook's "Natural History of Society," for the special benefit of Mr. D. W. Craig.

"While Father Lafitau was residing among the Hurons of North America, he had a servant who did not know one word of the language of the Indians, but had caught what may be called its accent very correctly, so that he could giv a good imitation of the general effect of it upon the ear, and this man, merely to amuse himself, was wont to make long speeches to the savages in a jargon literally having no meaning at all, to which the savages used to listen with great attention, and never doubted were addresses in their own language, only they said his style of oratory was so elevated they could not always comprehend him."

I hav little respect for that kind of learning which does not enable its possessor to express his thoughts in language that plain people can understand.

"In every field where I can follow him Mr. Andrews is one of the clearest of reasoners." But half of the time he is in a field where neither Mr. Craig nor anyone else can follow him. Whom does he benefit then?

"When he chooses to write with refreshing nearness to the ground, as he frequently does, he is understood then without difficulty." Would it not be "refreshing" to us if Mr. Andrews would always keep so near to the ground that we could all understand him "without difficulty." If he soars so high that ordinary men cannot understand him, in whose interest is he soaring? His style reminds me of the style of the Irishman's flag. He said he was going to hav "O K" marked upon it, and then put it up so high that no man could see it. Men never fail to make themselvs understood when they are in dead earnest. Ambiguity is not characteristic of the world's greatest thinkers. It is no great compliment to a man because he cannot make himself understood by the masses.

Mr. Craig conveys the idea that we must climb a tree in order to get in range of Mr. Andrew's shot. Mr. Andrews will learn some day that if his shot only take effect upon those who climb trees, he is wasting much ammunition. If the people had been compelled to climb trees in order to get in range of Thomas Paine's shot, many of us who hav received the light would still be groping our way in the darkness of superstition. The truth is, Mr. Paine kept the people dodging to escape the effect of his shot whether they were in trees or on the ground. In fact this has been the case with nearly all great men who hav set the world to thinking—they shot so as to hit the masses.

Here lies the secret of Mr. Bennett's power. He was armed with the truth, and the masses always understood him. The most tangled theological questions he made to appear simple. For this the people honor him.

Mr. Craig says that Mr. Andrews "has tried hard to make the people understand him." What a paragon of ingenuity he must be. I claim that any plain proposition the people can understand, and that the fault is more with Mr. Andrews than the people.

Mr. Craig declares Mr. Andrews to be one of the clearest of reasoners, and in the same sentence, says, "when I fail to fully grasp his meaning, it is because of my ignorance of his subject, or terminology." But how can he know that Mr. Andrews is one of the clearest of reasoners, when he cannot "grasp his meaning." Where is the difference between Mr. Craig and the Hurons, who were so impressed with the profundity of the gibble-gabble of the servant of the missionary?

John Peck.

Naples, N. Y., July 8, 283.

The "Perisprit" and Other Things.

Mrs. Bennett: I think that there is no one of your subscribers who prized the reform work of your deceased husband, D. M. Bennett, more than I did, or who is better pleased with his successor in the conduct of the good old Truth Seeker. Its value is inestimable as a vehicle for the promulgation of truth, and I hav asked (my lame arm has) to be one of its correspondents, in my plain way. I hav subjected myself to the following, which you will find on my business card inclosed: The doctor invites all people, all doctors, all lawyers, politicians, and ministers, who love truth, humanity, and good health, to call at his reception rooms, there to ask any question they wish, on any subject they please. Consultation free.

Now, I would like to giv some of the questions asked, with my answers, viz.: "You are all the time telling about spirit and spirits—why don't you convey some idea to my mind so that I can understand what you mean by the term spirit?" My answer: "I should just as much expect to convey the principles of algebra to a jackass and hav him comprehend it, as you spirit."

Again, I was asked by a materialized form to giv the philosophy of the use of a medium in the act of materializing. Answer: I perceive that there is an emanation from all, and for want of a better word I will call it aroma. That serves the spirit as the quicksilver serves the mirror, to aggregate the particles together to form a substance or body. One more: "Will you giv me the philosophy of the origin of human souls?" I replied, "I will answer it now if you are ready." He said, "Proceed." "I perceive that existence is made up of the two primates, spirit and matter—spirit, attenuated matter; matter, solidified spirit. The twain must be the one—the alpha, the omega; the beginning and the end; that was, that is, and that eternally will be."

One word to Brother Winter—that he had better not be too positiv in his denunciations of what he condemns as a humbug—Spiritualism. For that person, be he whom he may, that condemns that which he knows nothing of, simply shuts himself up in the dark, in ignorance, and will be likely to remain so forever. It would be wise for all to do as I did forty years ago: pledge themselvs never to condemn any body or thing until they can positivly demonstrate the falsity thereof.

Now for the question asked by our good friend Putnam, weeks ago, in The Truth Seeker: "What is Science?" which he attempted to answer himself, and later there was another attempt by our learned friend, S. P. Andrews. Now you hav my answer: "Science is the only positiv method of demonstrating truth. Truth is the only means to prove science mathematically, and as they both admitted that we hav no absolute rule of knowledge which has as yet dawned upon this planet, hence we hav no rule by which we carry out David Crockett's injunction. So we are left yet to grope in ignorance and darkness, with all of the world's best knowledge.

I would like to answer this grave question and giv the rule by which those who want to giv their attention to it may know, and absolutely know, what they are about. But all discoverers, of all past time, hav had to suffer persecution before they could hav their discoveries understood. I am weak, but if any candid inquirer will ask and giv me space, I will giv the information. Rest assured, good editor, you hav my best wishes. N. H. DILLINGHAM, M.D.

Boston, July 5, 283.

Letters from Friends.

TROY, July 11, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please accept one dollar for the Bennett Monument Fund. I wish every dollar thus given could be multiplied to a thousand, for he deserves the grandest monument ever erected to the memory of man. And oh, I wish some of our wealthy Liberals would build a Bennett Memorial Hall in New York, something like the Paine Hall in Boston. But those who would cannot, and I fear those who can will not. So we hav to wait for another generation to do that work. HIRAM WILBUR.

OKETO, June 27, 1883.

SISTER BENNETT: I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER and will be as long as I liv. I claim to be a Freethinker of the most pronounced type. I am not much of a writer, so I will not make this very long. There are very few Infidels in this neighborhood. I am the only outspoken one here, and I hav some good arguments. I carry "Answers to Christian Questions" and "Bible Contradictions" in my pocket all the time. The Christians burnt two school-houses in this district during the past year because two of the directors were Infidels. Yours truly,

JAMES BIGHAN.

ALEXANDRIA, July 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose one dollar, for which you will please send THE TRUTH SEEKER three months to Richard Hodgins, of Hawksberry village, and to me, the "Besant-Hatchard Debate" and the "Clergyman's Victims." This is a lonely place for me. There are some good people here, but their social views and mine don't agree. What would be innocent amusement to me is considered by them very wicked, and what they entertain themselvs with is for me, to say the least, anything but tasty, so I must remain by myself. Only for the weekly appearance of the esteemed TRUTH SEEKER life would be hard to bear here. My best wishes for yourself, for our beloved TRUTH SEEKER, and its able editor.

Yours, CHAS. LAPERCHE.

CEDAR SPRINGS, July 5, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find postal order Mr. E. H. Young sends, and wishes his paper to continue. I wish to thank the many Liberal friends who saw fit to drop me a card approving my suggestion of how to remove the evil of intemperance. My suggestion apparent in March 17th. I received hundreds of cards most flattering, and many letters quite lengthy, all approving the practicability of the suggestion. I hav been quite interested in reading what has been said concerning science, and would say that Mr. Andrews's Universology must be the key to science. It would seem so to read his arguments. Mr. Putnam makes his arguments very plain. I am rather partial to common sense. However that may account for it. I'll put one dollar in for the monument of our standard-bearer, D. M. Bennett. My heart would giv more, but circumstances will not permit. I hav just received fifty cents for a trial trip for Dr. Rails, Cedar Springs.

A. S. CROXTON.

BURTON, July 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps no country is more cursed than this at present in the way of pestilence in having crime and dogmas proclaimed throughout the land by the most successful, perambulating king of tramps, "Major" Penn, the Baptist divine whose mammoth tent covering a full acre is now being spread at this place preparatory of bringing on a three weeks' fight with the devil, in which he is expected to be cheated out of much material to keep his furnace ablast, but as a very small portion of Christendom has ever heard of the true way of salvation, the devil need not fear a scarcity of kindling-wood. This evangelist boasts much of his powers in saving souls, and has really got many to believe that he is God's agent, whose prayers will be readily answered. This ex-attorney, who was called from the most lucrativ practice (as he says) by God to preach his holy will, has really an art in making dupes of the masses. He is second to none—not even Moody and Sankey—in his humble calling. He claims to hav the power of removing Infidels who will heed not from the land, and spares no pains in heaping abuse upon them. He relates instances where his prayers hav caused God to strike them from the earth, and in spite of the proof of his rascality and crooked ways, his creed believe in him the stronger as being God's right-hand man, because I suppose he approaches near the ways of David and others that was so noted for carrying out God's holy will. God I suppose has also answered his prayers in a pecuniary way, for he is now flourishing in the possession of plenty, demanding from $500 to $1,000 before pitching his tent, with privilege of the hat and gate money, that usually trebles this sum.

H. B. JONES.

XENIA, O., July 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR:

"Thou shalt hav one God only; who Would be at the expense of two?"

sings Arthur Hugh Clough.

Cheaper, surely, one than many,
But still cheaper none than any.
Humanity, good Mr. Clough,
For you and me is quite enough.
To aid weak, erring sisters, brothers,
Is better for ourselvs and others
Than wasting time in idle prayers,
Addressed to one who never hears—
Or, if he does hear, answers never;
But good deeds liv and work forever.

The church is nought, 'tis clear to me,
But organized hypocrisy—
A shrewd device of priestly knaves
To make and keep the people slaves.

When rogue from gallows swings to bliss,
Justice and mercy surely kiss.
—Romans, xi, ii.

Yours, O. S.

ONEIDA, July 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year. I cannot afford to do without the good old TRUTH SEEKER. I do not want to miss a single number. I like most of your correspondents well, but I do not approve of denouncing others because they do not agree with me in regard to immortality. I like to see Freethinkers of all kinds friendly. If the Materialist has had no evidence of a life beyond the grave, it does not prove that others hav not. I am confident that Mr. Winter will find but very few, even among Materialists, who relish his kind of talk. I do not know that there is a life beyond the grave, and Mr. Winter does not know that there is not a life beyond the "dark valley," and certainly it is not pleasant to think that we cease to exist at death. If immortality is not a fact, then human life is a farce.

When Mr. Winter says—

"There is no life beyond the grave,
And none will preach it but a knave,"

he descends beneath the status of a gentleman and exhibits as much bigotry as the most orthodox Christian, and his silence would be more acceptable to nearly all Freethinkers. We would like to hear from John Peck in every number of THE TRUTH SEEKER. He is sound every time. Respectfully,

G. BEEBE.

SPRINGERTON, ILL., July 2, E.M., 283.

MR. EDITOR: You spoke in the card of the duty of Liberals in circulating Liberal papers and publications. I am satisfied that is right, but my will is greater than my ability. I inclose a "sandwich," which I use to stir up some of them that are incased in bigotry, and, with the aid of THE TRUTH SEEKER, theology trembles. In one place I was told that my talk in regard to sacred things had done a great damage to the cause of God (?) there. (I wish I could do more). "Why!" this person said, "you speak your sentiments without fear or favor, and that, too, also before the young. You hav no idea what a damage you are to the cause." But in expressing my sentiments I hav to run a certain amount of risk—being called Infidel, blasphemer, etc. I care not. Repeatedly I am threatened with prosecution, but to those thus inclined I tell them to go ahead, as their "overgrown boss of the universe" needs some one now more than ever to bolster up his peuril pretensions. At one place, sitting on the hotel steps, a Methodist friend of mine assailed my sentiments, and I, of course, replied to that extent that another religious bigot sitting by was about to knock me off the porch, but his friends prevailed on him to desist. Yet with all this I am still bound to drill away at the rock of superstition till its "form" is "pied." I wish I had the means to purchase Freethought tracts for distribution, but I bide my time—this section of country is "dyed in the wool" of superstition. I hav repeatedly been asked by a few Liberal minds to express my views in public, and had I access to a Freethought library (and a better opinion of my ability) I think I should try it.

I wish you could see the expression on some faces when to them I present a TRUTH SEEKER. Some turn away with a look of holy horror, others drop it as they would a viper. Success to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I will aid it all I can.

Yours for freedom, ARTHUR C. EVERETT.

MAYO VILLE, July 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see in a recent TRUTH SEEKER Mr. Hale says that "if Materialism is true there is no reason or sense in the gabble of Materialists in finding fault with things that are the result of their own system."

Thus if there are wrongs in our system of government we hav no right to amend them, because they are the result of our system of government in the wrong use made of it. If Mr. Hale's logic will apply to Materialists the same logic will apply to himself, and if Mr. Hale's God is true there is no sense in his gabble on Materialism, it being the result of his God. And again, "When Materialists attack Christianity as wrong they admit of other causes that produce results, contrary to their own, and surrender to their opponent." Will Mr. Hale treat his God to the same dose when he "scuttles" Materialism? Poor man! I hope he will try and help his God out of the vortex. The material world would be a small loss compared with this great pile of nothingness. I can't see where we poor "rats" would get a foothold if it should sink. Is remonstrating with supposed intelligent beings against the wrong use they make of materials which they control to effect others surrendering and administering of other causes? Once more, "If Materialism is not the only cause, and if a cause at all may be no more true than the other cause that produces other results." And right at this point the bottom falls out of Materialism. If Mr. Hale should swallow a few grains of arsenic he would soon think it a material evil in that shape. And right at this point the bottom would fall out of a material organism, but not out of Materialism. Mr. Hale thinks we hav no right to be fed on the same ourselvs because the effects are the results of Materialism.

Is Mr. Hale afraid to question his God, and does he think we are afraid to study and question our sytem and also hav no right to question it? And he calls it Liberalism. Thingem-bob, by all means so unique, so hard to define, so mysterious, would not hav so many base imitators, beside several other splendid advantages. I notice as a rule persons who think their opinions raise a storm and produce a senseless tirade in persons that differ with them, are not always free of the same tirades themselvs. They seem to hav pet corns, and seem to think what will not do for their corn is good enough for other's bunions. Another reader says, "The perusal of THE TRUTH SEEKER to him is a source of irritation and must be to all Liberals of his class." Liberals! what tender, exquisit, divine ideas.

Some enterprising Liberal will want to get a corner on air next. Liberals should not cry prohibition on thought yet a while. And the cob in the husk will say I am in the same husk myself. Would it not hav been more liberal to hav followed the example set and defined (metaphysics) before requesting a definition? Did Mr. Andrews attempt to define science? ARTHUR CHAPEL.

FRENCH CREEK, July 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see some remarks on my theory hav been made by A. E. Ringer and S. D. Moore. I must, however, first inform them that I hav no selfishness or prejudice for any hypothetical theories, either my own or those of others. I am willing to embrace truth wherever found, and gladly abandon error when once discovered.

Perhaps I did err in saying that mind is material. Mr. Ringer says, "brain the cause, mind the effect." This undoubtedly is true, that is, to a certain extent only. Brain, we know, is material, and therefore subject to the same laws that the matter of any other part of our systems is subject to. But is it brain only that causes this effect? Can a pulp of gross matter, in itself, contain a power capable of performing such wonderful functions? I always thought not, which perhaps caused me to conclude, and that, perhaps, too hastily, that mind is material. But of this another time.

I fear my friend S. D. Moore too has come to conclusions perhaps a little too hastily. He says: "Whether they looked around or above them they could see this display of natural phenomena, and the more they meditated on these surroundings the more they become excited over their study; and here was born in man the faculty of marvelousness or "wonder," and the more he ruminated on these natural phenomena, the more he was inclined to these reveries. And here we can trace out the birth of marvelousness or spirituality." "And now, as they were indebted to this god or gods for all their bounties, and even for life itself, they felt that they must devote a portion of their time and labor to his or their service and glorification. Following along this line of individual and mental unfoldment comes the wish and desire for a future life beyond the grave, and here is born hope, etc." Now, my friend, as I understand phrenology, there can be no functions prior to the faculties. There could hav been no excitement, no wonder, no surprise, before there existed a faculty, however small, to exercise such functions. Hence how could they cause the birth of the faculty of wonder? There could be no respect, no reverence, prior to the existence of a faculty of veneration, and no desire or longing for a future life beyond the grave preceding the faculty of hope.

Friend Moore, why not say that in digestion we can trace out the birth of the stomach? or, to come back to our former subject, say that mind caused the birth of brain? I think rather both the faculties and their functions came into existence simultaneously. Dame Nature, perhaps, saw how much they are needed, and therefore created them. If we must admit that our faculties were born in some such way, as I understand you, then we must also admit that yet, perhaps, hundreds of others can be born us likewise; or if these functions existed prior to the faculties, then of what use or need are the latter? "Neither ever exists except in conjunction with the other, but both co-exist and act together, throughout all departments of nature."

J. H. HIRT.

SIOUX CITY, July 4, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: I see by tag on wrapper that my subscription to the best paper published has expired. I inclose draft for $5, for my own subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hav the pleasure of handing you the cash and a new name for a year.

Yours fraternally, N. N. E. WOOD, M.D.

LIMA, July 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I must say I still regard the old TRUTH SEEKER as the rock of my salvation, and long may it liv to battle against superstition and ignorance. Please find inclosed money from three new subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I will try and send you some more names soon.

Yours for prosperity, L. F. HEFLICK.

CORTLAND STATION, May 31, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1.25 for six months' subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER, hoping by that time, if not before, I can send you the balance for the other six, providing you take that small amount at one time; if not, please inform me soon. I hav the specimen copy you sent me a short time ago. It is the best paper I hav seen yet. On with the good work! Let truth be unconfined.

Yours truly, J. D. WHEELER.

GREENE HILL, July 8, 283.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Please find inclosed $3, to be applied as follows: $1.50 for fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," fifty cents for postage on the same, and $1 for Monument Fund. I would hav sent in sooner, but I cannot control things as I would like. I suppose I am not too late either for the book or monument. I am well pleased with the turn in THE TRUTH SEEKER articles from Materialism and Spiritualism to that which belongs to this world and life. This, in my judgment, is as it should be. We want more of scientific and governmental knowledge. That which will make us better. I was well pleased with our friends Andrews's and Putnam's discussion on "What is Science?" Also an essay in the last issue on "Covenanterism" by A. B. Bradford, and several others that might be called side shots that I could mention. This is what I like. I can use it. But that which belongs to the sweet by-and-bye I cannot use in this life. It does not belong here. But there are many minds, and, of course, as many likes and dislikes. So we will hav to be charitable and let them all hav their turn. Why don't the Liberals and Spiritualists of Ohio put a ticket in the field this fall for state officers on our own platform? Ohio may as well lead off as any state. Some one has to be first. Let us see about what she can do. It would serve as a feeler for 284. Yours truly, ENOCH WICKERSHAM.

NEWBERRY, July 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am an Infidel and for that reason the Christian element of this little hamlet uses its influence against me, preventing me from obtaining a position as teacher in our public schools here. They argue that as I am an Infidel, I am not competent to teach the youths of America.

The population of this town is not more than six hundred, yet there are four ministers here. The people are, for the most part, ignorant and illiterate; upon their plastic minds in infancy the dogmas of Christian theology hav been impressed. The ministers, who are quarreling among themselvs for the spoils, lead the people. In fact, the different denominations follow the four ministers like so many greyhounds would follow their masters.

Being the only outspoken Infidel, I hav indeed a hard time of it; being always ready to discuss the exploded dogmas of theology with them, they regard me as a fiend of the worse type.

The ignorance of the people is the result of the teaching of the ministers. There are many here who regard Sunday as the seventh day of the week. I taught the school here four months, and during that time many lies were circulated about me by the Christian people, and for what? simply because on every occasion I expressed my honest thoughts and denounced the ministers of the gospel as being enemies to all mankind.

I believe that I am the only one who takes your paper here. I offer it to many and the answer which I receive, is, "that they will not read such a paper, that if they had the power they would prevent it from passing through the mails."

I am a young man but I intend to do what little I can to destroy forever the influence of Christianity and consign her to the limbo of oblivion.

It matters not where I go, Christianity lies in every road, exerting herself to her utmost to trample me beneath her feet; but she shall not. My days shall I spend battling against her hell and heaven, God and devil.

We need many papers like THE TRUTH SEEKER, to do the work that must be done. I trust that the day is not far distant when theology will be no more, when the ministers of the gospel will hav passed away be remembered no more. Happy will the world be then.

You hav my best wishes for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER. JOHN C. CALHAINE.

HAMPTONVILLE, July 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from the first number, and probably will continue it until my death, if it still teaches truth. Some one said, that when the old lion D. M. Bennett died, there were some young whelps yelping around. That saying is true; for they are read of in THE TRUTH SEEKER weekly. I am so glad that THE TRUTH SEEKER still shines brightly and is true to the cause of right and against wrong. The four volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," hav all been received. I hav said that I would not part with them for $100 if I could not get more. I think there is more and better information in them, than in anything I hav ever seen, and I am more than eighty years old. May I ask a question of the believers in endless punishment? Do you hope that you, yourself, your mother, father, sisters, brothers, wife, husband, and neighbors will suffer endless punishment, if they do not liv as the Bible says? Don't forget its clear annunciation: "To offend in one point, is to be guilty in all. Accursed is every one that continues not in all things to do them. Believe not and be damned. Be ye perfect as your father in heaven is perfect. Without holiness, no one can see God. To be carnally minded, is death." And many more such. "Answers to Christian Questions," received promptly. I hav read the pamphlet three times. It ought to be in every family. Can you afford to giv it to every new yearly subscriber for THE TRUTH SEEKER? If not, can you giv it for one half its price, if a fund was raised to pay the other half? If so, I will giv $1 to such fund. I would like to hear that the monument could be built by $1 subscriptions and the fact stated on the monument. It ought to look grandly.

GEORGE PADDINGTON.

[At the present price of subscription we cannot afford to giv any premiums with THE TRUTH SEEKER. Indeed, unless our subscription list is considerably lengthened we shall hav to put the price back to $3 next January. We should hate to do this, but fear we shall be compelled to in order to make both financial ends meet.—ED. T. S.]

NORTH BENTON, July 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: With the death of D. M. Bennett we lost one of our best champions of universal mental liberty, a loss which we dearly felt, for we had followed him in all his meanderings around the world and back again. We felt a solemn foreboding when we saw the black lines in THE TRUTH SEEKER announcing his death. But such is fate. He was fully ripe and ready for the harvest.

Within you will find $2 to apply on THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am glad to see the good old ship sailing triumphantly over all the breakers, and maintaining all her rigging. She seems to be sailing more triumphantly each week. Old superstitions are passing away. The Democracy of Ohio has nominated a liberal-minded man for governor. The Republicans tried to make capital out of that, but they were soon glad to haul in like a snail in his shell. Hoadly will be elected by a large majority.

The churches make a great effort to maintain their popularity. The slender attendance upon divine service has come to be a fruitful source of disgust to ministers. It is a red-letter day when the churches are able to muster a corporal's guard, and "overflows" are only about as numerous as new comets. A glance over those they do get out shows a notable preponderance of bonnets and bald heads, the vigorous middle-aged element of the population who do the work of the world being conspicuous by their absence. That fact is a poser for the cloth.

The Bible was written mainly to teach men how to do right, and nine-tenths of its contents are rules of life. Here again the preachers might find a text. It is pretty certain that if a man knows enough to liv right he is in a fair condition for dying right. It is the foundation of all preaching, but it's a queer ship that carries nothing but ballast, and it would be a curious building that had only a foundation. When preachers learn to study humanity in its various phases, and then preach from the standpoint of the counting-room, the kitchen, and the workshop, instead of the parlor, pew upholstery will oftener need renewal.

The Christians tell us that Liberals are a penurious set of people; they giv nothing to philanthropy. Let them look at Girard College, Philadelphia, the grandest institution of the kind in the world—and the effort they hav made to capture it. And we would direct their attention to a similar school in Youngstown, Ohio, and to the Lick University in California, which is now well under way. It is on Mount Hamilton, thirteen miles from San Jose, and nearly 4,500 feet above sea level, with an unobstructed view of the heavens, excepting a small portion of the northeastern horizon. The observatory is of the most approved character, and will be completely equipped. It will be easily accessible from San Jose by a mountain road constructed for this purpose and having a very easy grade. But the Christians say they are alpha and omega—the polar star. After preaching that slavery was a divine institution for centuries, and quoting Deuteronomy to show that if you wanted servants you must buy of the heathens around you, and they should be your servants forever, at this late date they will hav the effrontery to say, "We did it. We emancipated the negro, we did." CHESTER BEDELL.

WILLIAMSTOWN, OHIO, July 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: When reading the clipping "Not an Isolated Case" in THE TRUTH SEEKER of 7th, it recalled to my mind my own case but with quite different results. In 1872 I commenced the investigation of Spiritualism. After becoming fully convinced in my own mind of its truthfulness I began to proclaim my conviction aloud. At this time one of Colonel Ingersoll's books fell into my hands. At once new light began to dawn and I purchased all of his lectures, as well as Paine's, and all the Liberal and Spiritual works extant. By the side of these I placed a complete list of writers on and in favor of orthodoxy, Clark and Benson's commentaries, and scores of other writers on the same subjects. When at it I went in earnest to investigate and compare. I now began to add knowledge to my new faith. I embraced not only Spiritualism but Liberalism and the shackles of old theology and superstition began to vanish "like wild beasts before civilization." Having been engaged here for more than twenty years in an activ practice of medicin and surgery and different lines of mercantile business, my friends came in with their advice. "If you believe this, be silent; it will hurt your business." My reply was, I will cry aloud and spare not. I will not sacrifice my sincere conviction of truth for fear nor favor. (I had been an activ member in the M. E. church.) And if my friends forsake me because I hold the truth, they will hav to go. I procured the services of Wella B. Anderson, the great spirit artist, to come and stay with me for several days, as well as other good mediums. I threw my doors open, invited my neighbors, one and all, to come without money and without price. Every room of my residence would be crowded. I employed other mediums to hold materializing seances. Crowds would come. Just at this time the leading Methodist minister of our place concluded he would crush out necromancy, as he called it, and to set the iron heel of orthodox bigotry on it, he appointed a meeting on a beautiful Sunday. For that special crowds came. He preached and prayed for the banishment of the devil and his works from our midst, and warned and forbid his members to go and hear me, as I was to speak in one week in defence of Spiritualism, Liberalism, etc. But the people for six miles round crowded the house. Doors and windows were full and many could not find admittance. The reverends of all denominations near came out. This devilish doctrin, as the preacher called it, was new to all. After the lecture I announced to my hearers that I had all the works extant on Spiritualism and Liberalism, and any one who desired to read should be accommodated with books. The result was a rush for books, and from that time on my library has been open to all to read, and they flock here for that purpose. But this enraged the clergy of all denominations. They called a special meeting to stop the onward march of this abominable enemy of old theology. This did not succeed any better than the first, only inspiring the hearers with a spirit of investigation. Next I had to meet them in open discussion of the subjects. We discussed them for days, and, I am happy to say, I vanquished my opponents. Now all became quiet until I arranged and had printed for distribution many hundred circulars. This raised their ire because it struck at the root of their cherished doctrins. But this did not satify me. I began to circulate through their membership the Banner of Light, Mind and Matter, psychometric circulars, and all the Spiritualistic tracts I could procure. I sent them broadcast. Next I procured tracts and leaflets at THE TRUTH SEEKER office—I re-enforced with them. They read them through. They were a little touched with Infidelity, but with good sense I also distributed several numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and those whose hands all those fell into were the clergy, doctors, lawyers, and the thinking part of the laity. Now let me add right here that the ministers who preached against my views and with whom I held discussions are at this time among my warmest friends and supporters. They call me to attend them and their families whenever needed, and say to me, "You know we do not see alike, but you hav as good a right to your views as we hav to ours." My friends are numerous and my business is good and on the increase daily. No, sir, I will not yield my sincere conviction of truth for friend nor foe. Life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness is guaranteed to us in the constitution, and shall we be afraid to make known our religion? Take from us everything else but freedom of speech and the vindication of our own rights, and when others see us standing by our colors and supporting them, though evil as well as good report, they will respect us and our cause. I do not say what I hav said boastingly, but through the hope that I may inspire others to do likewise. It grieves me that I am not a good writer, as my heart and soul is interested in the welfare of my fellowman. I only wish I could do something to help liberate him from the thralldom of church creed priestcraft, etc. B. D. EVANS, M.D.

Poetry.

St. Leon's Toast.

The feast is o'er! Now brimming wine
In lordly cup is seen to shine
Before each eager guest;
And silence fills the crowded hall
As deep as when the herald's call
Thrills in the loyal breast.

Then up arose the noble host,
And, smiling, cried, "A toast! a toast!
To all our ladies fair!
Here, before all, I pledge the name
Of Staunton's proud and beauteous dame—
The Lady Gundamere."

Then to his feet each gallant sprung,
And joyous was the shout that rung
As Stanley gave the word:
And every cup was raised on high,
Nor ceased the loud and gladsome cry
Till Stanley's voice was heard.

"Enough, enough," he smiling said,
And lowly bent his haughty head;
"That all may hav their due,
Now each in turn may play his part,
And pledge the lady of his heart,
Like gallant knight and true."

Then one by one each guest sprung up,
And drained in turn the brimming cup,
And named the loved one's name;
And each, as hand on high he raised,
His lady's grace and beauty praised,
Her constancy and fame.

'Tis now St. Leon's turn to rise;
On him are fixed those countless eyes—
A gallant knight is he;
Envied by some, admired by all,
Far-famed in lady's bower and hall—
The flower of chivalry.

St. Leon raised his kindling eye,
And lifts the sparkling cup on high.
"I drink to one," he said,
"Whose image never may depart,
Deep graven in this grateful heart,
Till memory be dead.

"To one whose love for me will last
When lighter passions long hav past—
So holy 'tis and true.
To one whose love hath longer dwelt,
More deeply fixed, more keenly felt,
Than any pledged by you."

Each guest upstarted at the word,
And laid a hand upon his sword,
With fury-flashing eye;
And Stanley said, "We crave the name,
Proud knight, of this most peerless dame,
Whose love you count so high."

St. Leon paused, as if he would
Not breathe her name, in careless mood,
Thus lightly to another;
Then bent his noble head, as though
To giv that name the reverence due,
And gently said, "My mother!"

An Indispensable Work.

Reviewing Gibbon's "History of Christianity" as published by Mr. Eckler, the Boston Commonwealth says:

"A substantial volume of nearly 900 pages, the 'History of Christianity,' by Edward Gibbon contains the well-known historian's complete theological writings, separate from his historical and miscellaneous works; shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders, and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitiv Christians. Gibbon's vindication of the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of his history from the attacks of his opponents is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his miscellaneous works, edited by Lord Sheffield in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors. All that can be said by Christians in regard to the origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of Dean Milman, Wenck, Guizot, and other eminent historians who hav edited Gibbon's works; and the scholarly remarks of the editor of Bohn's edition of Gibbon are also given in full. Among the illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the pagan mythology. In the present general discussion of the bases of the Christian belief, such a work as this cannot fail to be of direct service, especially if the inquirer comes to his task with a calm and unbiased mind. The publisher is largely the editor, and has himself written many notes of value surcharged with candor and fairness. Certainly the libraries of all liberal preachers, as well as all instructors of the people, should possess this most suggestiv and quite indispensable volume.

Correspondence Wanted

I desire to correspond with a few earnest Liberal ladies under 30 years of age. Object, to find a true companion. Adress, NATHAN L. VOLNEY, Wheeling, W. Va. 2t28

SEND FOR

The Crimes of Preachers

From May, 1876 to May, 1882.

TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS.

And with previous Translations diligently compared and revised.

By Col. M. E. BILLINGS.

SECOND EDITION.

Price Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, N. Y. city

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Parton's (James) Life of Voltaire. With portraits and other illustrations. Two volumes, 800 pp. $6.00; half calf, $11.00.

Philosophical Dictionary of Voltaire. Two volume in one; containing 876 large octavo pages, with two steel engravings. $5. This is the largest and most correct edition in the English language, having, besides the whole of the London editions several articles from a manuscript translated several years since by a friend of Voltaire, and others translated immediately for this edition.

Primitive Culture. Researches into the development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Language, Art, and Custom. By EDWARD B. TAYLOR, LL.D., F. R. S. In two 8vo volumes. Price, $7.

Queen Mab, with Notes. By PERCY B. SHELLEY. 50 cents.

Religious Worship. The origin of all religious worship, translated from the French of Dupuis, contain a description of the Zodiac of Denderah. Cloth, $2.

Reason the Only Oracle of Man; or, a compendious system of natural religion. By Col. ETHAN ALLEN. 50 cents.

Science of the Bible; or, An Analysis of the Hebrew Mythology, wherein it is shown that the so-called holy scriptures treat of natural phenomena only. By MILTON WOOLEY, M.D. $3.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible. One hundred and forty-four propositions, without comment, embodying most of papaple and striking self-contradictions of the Bible. 15 cents.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. This book is among the ablest efforts of the gifted author. Large type, heavy paper. Cloth, $1.50.

Socialism. Reply to Rev. ROSWELL C. HITCHCOCK. By a Business Man. 25 cents.

Studying the Bible; or, Brief Criticisms on Some of the Principal Scripture Texts. By ELMINA D. SLENKER. 75 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER. A Roman Catholic priest who renounced Christianity. Cloth, $1,50; paper, 1.00.

System of Nature; or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of "Good Sense," etc. A new and improved edition, with notes by DIDEROT. Translated from the French by H. D. ROBINSON. Two volumes in one. $2.

Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pious VII. Translated from the French into Portuguese by D. J. MONTEIRO, and from Portuguese into English by H. D. ROBINSON. With a memoir of the author. 25 cents.

Testimonials to Thomas Paine. Compiled by JOSEPH N. MORREAU. 15 cents.

The Bible: Is it of Divine Origin, Authority, and Influence? By S. J. PINNEY. Cloth, 60 cents; paper, 35 cents.

The Case Against the Church. A summary of the arguments against Christianity. Price, 50 cents.

The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic. By W. F. JAMIESON. $1.

The Day of Rest. By WM. MCDONNELL. Author of "Exeter Hall," "The Heathens of the Heath," etc. 10 cents.

The Devil's Pulpit. By ROBERT TAYLOR, with a sketch of the author's life. $2.

The Diegesis; being a Discovery of the Origin, Evidence, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before or elsewhere so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev. ROBERT TAYLOR. $2.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.

200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

SUBSCRIBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE "PHYSIOLOGIST."

Elmina would like copies of the following Nos. of the New York "Physiologist." June and July (double No.) 1878; April and May (double No.) 1879; Nov. 1878; Aug. and Sept. 1879; June 1879; Jan., Feb., March, April, 1881. If friends will send me these Nos. or either of them I will send copies of "Matrimonial Review," copy for copy in exchange, and be greatly obliged also. Or will send, if preferred, "The Alpha," or "Herald of Industry."

Address ELMINA D. SLENKER,
3t28 Snowville, Va.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

STANDARD SCIENTIFIC WORKS

Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Every Freethinker should read them.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

WORKS OF CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species	2 00
Descent of Man	3 00
Journal of Researches	2 00
Emotional Expression	3 50
Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols.	5 00
Insectivorous Plants	2 00
Climbing Plants	1 25
Orchids ferti lized by Insects	1 75
Fertilization in the Vegetable Kingdom	2 00
Forms of Flowers	1 50
Power of Movement in Plants	2 00
Vegetable Mould, etc.	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. THOMAS HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature	1 25
On the Origin of Species	1 00
More Criticisms on Darwin, and Administrative Nihilism	50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Invertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1 75
Critiques and Addresses	1 50
American Addresses	1 25
Physiography	2 50
The Crayfish	1 75
Science and Culture	1 50
Elements of Physiology and Hygiene. By T. H. Huxley and W. J. Youmans	1 50
Introductory Primer	45

WORKS OF PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.

Heat as a Mode of Motion	2 00
On Sound	2 00
Fragments of Science	2 50
Light and Electricity	1 25
Lessons in Electricity	1 00
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2 00
Faraday as a Discoverer	1 00
On Forms of Water	1 50
Radiant Heat	5 00
Six Lectures on Light	1 50
The above 10 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	19 75
Banquet at Delmonico's. Paper,	50
Belfast Address. Paper,	50
Essays on the Floating Matter of the Air in Relation to Putrefaction and Infection. 12mo. Cloth,	1 50

WORKS OF HERBERT SPENCER.

First Principles	2 00
Principles of Biology. 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Psychology, 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Sociology Parts I., II., and III.	2 00
Ceremonial Institutions: Being Part IV. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 25
Political Institutions: Being Part V. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 50
Data of Ethics: Being Part I. of the "Principles of Morality."	1 25
Study of Sociology (International Scientific Series),	1 50
Education	1 25
Paper,	50
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals	2 00
Universal Progress	2 00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Esthetic	2 00
Social Statics	2 00
The above 14 vols., 12mo	25 25
Philosophy of Style. 12mo. Flexible Cloth,	50
Descriptive Sociology. Published in folio with Tables. Eight Parts now ready, namely:
English.
Ancient Americans.
Negritto and Malayo-Polynesian Races.
Afric n Races.
Asiatic Races.
North and South American Races.
Hebrews and Phœnicians.
French.
Price of the first Seven Parts Each	4 00
Part 8	7 00

WORKS OF DR. J. W. DRAPER.

History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. 12mo	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.	3 00

WORKS OF H T. BUCKLE.

History of Civilization in England. With a complete Index (not published in the English edition). 2 vols., 8vo. Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra,	8 00
Essays; with a Biography of the Author. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00
Half Calf, extra,	2 50
The Life and Writings of Henry Thomas Buckle. By Alfred Henry Huth. 8vo	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.

The History of Creation; or, the Development of the Earth and its Inhabitants by the Action of Natural Causes. A Popular Exposition of the Doctrine of Evolution in general, and of that of Darwin, Goethe, and Lamarck in particular. The translation revised by Professor E. Ray Lankester. Illustrated, with Lithographic Plates. In 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	5 00
The Evolution of Man. A Popular Exposition of the Principal Points of Human Ontogeny and Phylogeny. 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	5 00
Freedom in Science and Teachings. From the German. With a Prefatory Note by T. H. Huxley, F. R. S. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00

WORKS OF PROF. W. E. H. LECKY.

History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols., small 8vo. Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra	8 00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	3 00
Half Calf, extra,	7 00
The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland: Swift, Flood, Grattan, O'Connell. 12mo. Cloth,	1 75
History of England in the Eighteenth Century. 4 vols., small 8vo. Cloth,	9 00
Half Calf,	18 00

WORKS OF SIR JOHN LUBBOCK.

Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man. Cloth,	00
Prehistoric Times, as Illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. Illustrated. 8vo. Cloth.	00
Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera (International Scientific Series). 12mo. Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. OSCAR SCHMIDT.

The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. With 26 Woodcuts. 12 mo	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. E. L. YOUMANS.

Class-Book of Chemistry. New edition. 12 mo.	1 50
Hand-Book of Household Science 12 mo	1 75
The Culture Demanded by Modern Life: A series of Addresses and Arguments on the Claims of Scientific Education. Edited, with an Introduction on Mental Discipline in Education by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo. Cloth,	2 00
A Series of Expositions by Prof. Helmholtz, Dr. Mayer, Dr. Faraday, Prof. Liebig, and Dr. Carpenter. Edited, with an Introduction and Brief Biographical Notices of the Chief Promoters of the New Views, by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo. Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF ANDREW D. WHITE.
President of Cornell University.

The Warfare of Science. 12 mo. Cloth,	1 00
Paper,	50

HISTORY PRIMERS.
Edited by J. R. Green. 18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Greece. By C. A. Fyffe	45
Rome. By M. Creighton	45
Europe. By E. A. Freeman	45
Old Greek Life. By J. P. Mahaffy	45
Geography. By George Grove	45
Roman Antiquities. By S. A. Wilkins	45
France. By C. M. Yonge	45

SCIENCE PRIMERS.
18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Introductory. By T. H. Huxley	45
Chemistry. By H. E. Roscoe	45
Physics. By Balfour Stewart	45
Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie	45
Geology. By Archibald Geikie	45
Physiology. By M. Foster	45
Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer	45
Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker	45
Logic. By W. S. Jevons	45
Inventional Geometry. By W. G. Spencer	45
Pianoforte-Playing. By Franklin Taylor	45
Political Economy. By W. S. Jevons	45
Natural Resources of the United States. By J. N. Patton	45

Poetry.

Kick.

Ne'er submit to any wrong!
Make a kick!
Though your voice become a gong;
Though the strife be sore and long;
Though it leave you weak and sick,
Make a kick!

Right is might for honest men!
Make a kick!
Never mind the where or when;
Though the odds be one to ten,
Show yourself a plucky chick!
Make a kick!

Though it giv the lawyers wealth,
Make a kick!
Poverty oft takes on health!
Fight the wrong by force, by stealth!
Always to your motto stick!
Make a kick!

—Philadelphia Times.

The Best of Books.

From the Davies County Democrat.

If the question, "What is the best book published?" were made general throughout the world there would doubtless be hundreds of answers to it, while thousands of readers would be unable to make a definit reply. If, however, the question were modified, by adding the words, "for the young and those whose opportunities for extensiv study of all subjects that all people ought to study, are limited," we should say, as our answer, "The Liberal Guide," by Prof. H. M. Kottinger, of San Jose, California. The name givs no indication of the contents of this valuable book, and yet we could not suggest a better title. The Liberal Guide is a book of nearly 200 large pages bound in cloth and sold at the extremely low price of $1. It is in two parts. The first is devoted to "Moral Culture" and is composed of short extracts of prose and poetry from our best authors on appropriate subjects, next the "Doctrin of Duties and Rights" in questions and answers, then "Ethics," "Doctrin of Justice," etc. Part Second is entitled "Religious Enlightenment," giving an outline of the principal religions of the world before and since the beginning of the Christian Era, criticisms of biblical narativs and an important and elaborate chapter on "Views of the Universe from the standpoint of the Modern Sciences." A dozen columns of our paper would not suffice to contain the notice we should be pleased to giv this valuable work of a profound scholar, but whoever desires to get more information on the subjects it treats of than is contained in other works costing ten times as much should send for it at once. It may be had at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 21 Clinton Place, New York city.

Got Some, But Not All of the Bottom Facts.

Reviewing John Truesdell's recent book, "Bottom Facts," concerning Spiritualism, the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle says:

"It is needless to say that Mr. Truesdell's disclosures hav attracted a good deal of public attention. The subject, indeed, is a vital one. Modern Spiritualism is, as one of Mr. Truesdell's correspondents says, if it is a truth, is the grandest truth that was ever brought to the world. If it is a fraud, it is the fraud of the nineteenth century. We confess that the book has made a powerful impression upon us. We do not see how the disclosures can be met successfully except by proving that Mr. Truesdell deliberately lies, and, from many years acquaintance with him, we do not believe that he lies. The explanations that he givs of the phenomena he describes are in themselvs probable explanations, as is illustrated in the Chase interview, and in the materialized stone and the parafine mold. If results can be explained by material causes, such explanation is prima facie more reasonable than that of outside spiritual influences working in opposition to the order of nature. It is but fair to say that Mr. Truesdell does not expose all the phenomena of modern Spiritualism, and that thousands of intelligent persons, with their minds well poised and their faculties alert, testify to many phenomena within their own knowledge, which they assert could not possibly hav been produced by fraud or trickery, or collusion—phenomena which even so expert a detectiv as is Mr. Truesdell could not expose, and which he should, therefore, refer to spiritual agencies. His answer would be that if he detected a medium in one trick the inference would be justified that the remaining manifestations were also tricks. This issue we do not assume to determin. This journal has always given the Spiritualistic manifestations and philosophy a fair hearing. The Spiritualists are a large and influential body of men and women. There are among them many men and women of great mental power, of exalted social position and of acknowledged probity of life. We certainly hav no disposition to make a point against them; but they as well as non-believers, who with integrity of thought and with the intense longing common to all humanity to pierce the veil, want most of all to know the truth. In seeking for the truth, we honestly believe that Mr. Truesdell's book will be of much assistance. If its statements can be refuted and its inferences nullified, well and good; but it is certainly entitled to a candid examination from those who seek to know the truth."

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between Mrs. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By MRS. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D. W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect. A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity. between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

FROM ONE WHOM ALL KNOW.

The Kerner Stylographic Pen is the most convenient, handy, and ever-ready pen I have ever use I've tried innumerable fountain pens, gold pens, and all sorts, from the old quill pen to the stylograp and for utility, satisfaction, and general convenience this excels all the rest.

My son Oscar also prefers it for use in the woolen mill to any other he has tried.

It is pen, ink, and pencil all in one and can be carried in the vest pocket so as to be always ready.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Observe the address: GEORGE MACDONALD,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
6m9 Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST!
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 21 Clinton Place, New York

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, cents. Sold at this office.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

(Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York city.

THE
GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a upernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and
A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

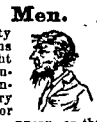
All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

6m15

DR. FELLOWS



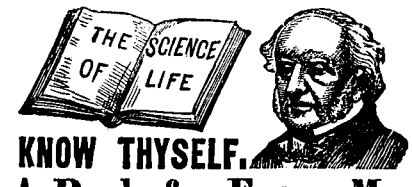
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill nnd experience. 1y33

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.
30 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

CLERGYMEN, like other professionals and tradesmen, are very anxious to please their patrons, and are willing to furnish just such commodities as are in demand. They are getting to take a very sensible view of the matter, and virtually they talk to their customers in this wise: "We wish to please you; you pay us your money, and we desire you to hav just what you want. If you do not like so much sulphur, we can just as easily giv you less; in fact, we think we can soon dispense with it altogether. If you object to the Devil we will keep him behind the curtain, and even not exhibit him at all, if you say so. We are anxious to please our customers as nearly as we can; we are determined to study the tastes of those who patronize our establishment."—D. M. Bennett.

WIVES are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so as a man may hav a quarrel [reason] to marry when he will; but yet he was reputed one of the wise men, that made answer to the question, when a man should marry: "A young man, not yet; an elder man, not at all."—Bacon's Essays.

IT was a common maxim among the ancient Hebrews that woman was made especially for man, as man was made especially for the glory of God, and consequently woman's position by the side of man should be one of inferiority. A man could divorce his wife at pleasure, himself writing the bill of divorce; he could buy or sell his wife in the early periods of Jewish history or even dispose of his daughter, to become a slave of her master. This condition of things naturally kept women in a comparativly degraded state, and it is only with the advance of Hebrew civilization and culture that woman took a place beside man and occupied anything like a respectable position.—Underwood's Lectures and Essays.

MR. BLACK insists that we owe to the Bible the present elevation of woman. Where will we find in the Old Testament the rights of wife, and mother, and daughter defined? Even in the New Testament she is told to "learn in silence with all subjection;" that she "is not suffered to teach, nor to usurp any authority over the man, but to be in silence," etc., etc.—Ingersoll.

WHEN a man hath taken a wife and marries her, and it come to pass that she find no favor in his eyes because he hath found uncleanness in her; then let him write her a bill of divorcement and giv it in her hand and send her out of his house.—Deuteronomy xxiv, 1.

IT has been shown by Lorente that the men who founded the Inquisition were men whose characters were free from the stains of vice, and who were actuated in their cruel work of torturing and burning men by the most philanthropic motivs. Many of the worst persecutors, Catholic and Protestant alike, as Mr. Buckle has mentioned, hav been among the most conscientious men and women. Their cruelty was the result of their faith. What they argued, are the fleeting pains of a few thousand men in comparison with the eternal agony of the thousands and tens of thousands that they will, unless checked, lead to hell.—Underwood's Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. (TRUTH SEEKER Tract No. 126).

SELF-LOVE in its due degree is as just and morally good as any affection whatever. Benevolence toward particular persons may be a degree of weakness, and so be blamable; and disinterestedness is so far from being in itself commendable, that the utmost possible depravity, which we can in imagination conceive, is that of disinterested cruelty.—Bishop Butler.

THE daily life of every one of us teems with occasions which will try the temper of our courage as searchingly, though not as terribly, as battle-field, or fire, or wreck. For we are born into a state of war; with falsehood and disease and wrong and misery, in a thousand forms, lying all around us, and the voice within calling on us to take our stand as men in the eternal battle against them. And in this life-long fight, to be waged by every one of us single-handed against a host of foes, the last requisit for a good fight, the last proof and test of our courage and manfulness, must be loyalty to truth—the most rare and difficult of all human qualities. For such loyalty, as it grows in perfection, asks even more and more of us, and sets before us a standard of manliness, always rising higher and higher.—Hughes' Manliness of Christ.

THE truth of one age is the superstition of the next. The order of thought that claims to be unalterable is a dead order of thought, yea, with the life of thought, as with the life of body, comes change, evolution, advance to a higher level. Eternal no order of thought can be. As the thought grows old our affections cluster around it, as they always throng around old age. But it passes away and in the more beautiful lineaments of the younger, stronger child we trace, not unlovingly, the purified features of the parent that has made its existence possible. No order of thought is final.—Dr. Aveling's Sermon on the Mount.

"WHO are you, where did you come from, and whither are you bound?"—questions which, from Homer's day, hav been put to the wayfarer in strange lands—are likewise the all absorbing questions which man is ever asking of the universe, of which he is himself so tiny yet so wondrous a part. From the earliest times the ultimate purposes of all scientific research has been to elicit fragmentary or partial responses to their question, and philosophy has ever busied itself in piecing together those several bits of information, according to the best methods at its own disposal, in order to make up something like a satisfactory answer.—Fiske's Unseen World. No. 9, Scientific Series of TRUTH SEEKER Tracts).

THAT man is to be accounted poor, of whatever rank he be, and suffers the pains of poverty, where expenses exceed his resources; and no man is, properly speaking, poor but he.—Paley.

Odds and Ends.

A FENCE rail was blown right through the body of a mule by the Mississippi cyclone, so the story goes. Even a cyclone has to approach a mule sideways to get the better of him.

A NEW town in the West has eight saloons and one church. This seems greatly out of proportion, and the inhabitants appear to think so, too, for they are about building another saloon.—Norristown Herald.

"DO you blieve in spirits?" the young lady asked the new pastor. "No, my daughter," replied the old man, "I don't believe in anything this side of heaven. I preached in Washington twenty years."

THE average young lady wants at least four feet of seat in a street car for a ride of six blocks, but she will ride half a day Sunday squeezed into a buggy seat beside her young man and not find the least fault.

It is not safe to jump at conclusions. The choir which belched out the closing anthem, just as the minister paused to lend impressivness to the last six pages of his discourse, was probably in a hurry to get home to dinner.

"YOU must bathe regularly," said a Springfield physician gravely, as he looked at the patient's tongue and felt his pulse. "But, doctor, I do," returned the sick man: "I go in swimming regularly every Fourth of July."

"NO, sir," said the physician who had worked over the Texas man fished out of the water unconscious. "I never could hav brought him back to life. If that circus procession hadn't passed he never would hav regained consciousness."

The Buffalo Express says that it has long been of the opinion that it is very, very wrong for a minister to laugh. But it seems to us that a minister ought to be permitted to chuckle moderately when he fishes up an old sermon that just fits the occasion.

ST. PAUL claims the smartest preacher in the country. He is of the African persuasion, and last Sunday he preached two sermons and whitewashed a butcher shop, for which he received $5—that is, for the whitewashing. He is said to be as handy at one as the other.

THE LAST SUPREME MOMENT.

LITTLE Johnny Parson was out bathing one day, when it entered into his mischievous little head that a ride on a log which came floating by would be fun. So he got astride of it and floated down stream.

Suddenly the log rolled over and Johnny let go his hold and was nearly drowned; but just at the last minute, when he'd swallowed about as much water as his small carcass was graded to carry, a man in a skiff rescued him.

The Sunday-school teacher on the following Sabbath determined to fructify the occasion by drawing an awful lesson on the uncertainty of life out of Johnny's disaster. When she had piled the agony three or four feet high, she turned to the boy and said:

"Now, Johnny, how did you feel at the last supreme moment?"

"Awful wet, marm," said Johnny, innocently, while a smile a yard long crawled over the whole class.

THE PIOUS PREACHER.

There was a pious preacher
Well known and read of all,
And ev'ry night he wandered out,
Along the garden wall.

'Twas thought quite strange,
And he was asked why thus he had a call,
Each night to wander out alone
Along the gadren wall.

He said that he was born in sin,
And ruined by the fall,
And every night went there to pray,
Down by the garden wall.

The cobbler's wife was young and fair,
Her beauty marked by all,
And rumor said they oft did meet,
Down by the garden wall.

The cobbler some how smelt a mice—
He too received a call—
With strap in hand, he started out
Along the garden wall.

And they were in devotion joined,
As I declare to all,
The preacher and the cobler's wife,
Found kissing o'er the wall.

He used his strap as a lasso,
Said he, I'll make a haul,
Then threw it o'er the preacher's head
And held him to the wall.

The preacher thought it was old Nick,
And loudly he did bawl,
The cobler tugged with all his might,
And dragged him o'er the wall.

The preacher thought of all his sins
And did for mercy call,
The cobler held with all his might,
And pummeled him under the wall.

That night the preacher had a dream,
Old Gabriel blew his horn,
Said he, "Old Gabe I'll go with you,
'Tis resurrection morn."

And so they wondered on and on,
Beyond this world of sin,
They saw the New Jerusalem—
Said Gabe, "We'll enter in."

Said he, "Old Gabe I'm going back—
You can't fool me at all;
Your New Jerusalem to me
Looks like a garden wall.

"I know the cobbler will be there,
His action I'll forestall,
His strap no more shall lasso me
And drag me o'er the wall,"

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

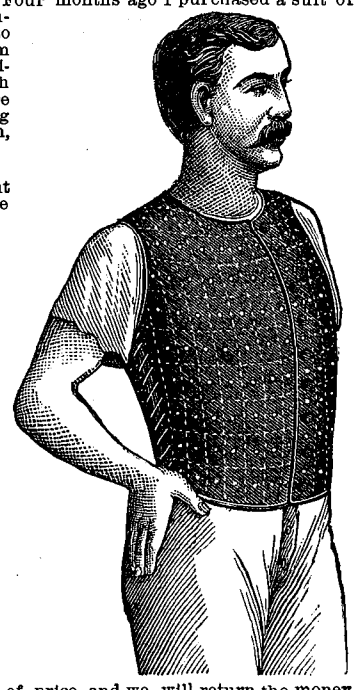
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appl'ances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information,

Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 30. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, July 28, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. Mr. Chew, of Philadelphia, preaches as to Noah's intoxication that the scriptural evidence shows the old man to hav been ignorant of the effects of wine, and that when he once discovered them he abstained from its use.

SUPERSTITIOUS residents at Newtown, Conn., believe that Sherman W. Pratt is possessed by a devil, because he lay several weeks in a coma-like stupor, and has since spoken in an unintelligible jargon, which to them is some unearthly language.

CHARLES G. LELAND says that one of the bitterest curses which he heard in Egypt was, "May God make you wear a chimney pot hat." The Mohammedan sees in the brim of this article a hindrance to touching the forehead to the ground in prayer.

THE Davenport brothers, says the New York Sun, were once noted as Spiritualist mediums. One died a few years ago, and the other retired from the business; but now the survivor has started out again. His feats show no variation from the familiar doings in cabinets, but he will travel in a gorgeously painted car, and thus possibly get a renewal of public attention.

THE story goes that the body of a Jew who died in Chicago recently was laid out in front of a window facing west. The center pane, which is now on exhibition between 7 and 8 o'clock every evening, presents a perfect likeness of the dead man. At no other time during the day is the strange appearance visible. Washing with chemicals has failed to obliterate the mysterious image.

AN English clergyman, the Rev. Robert Topham, vicar of Etruria, was summoned before the Hanley magistrates for having wilfully destroyed trees and plants in a cemetery. He refused to obey, and was taken to the station in custody. The evidence showed that he plucked the flowers to decorate his church. The magistrate observed that the accused had told several untruths, and fined him $25.

THE man who, more than anybody else, is responsible for the drunkenness that disgraces the army and navy of the United States, is R. B. Hayes, of Fremont, Ohio. He made conviction and punishment for drunkenness a farce by reinstating the convicted officers as fast as they were dismissed from the service. This is the man who, while in the White House, never drank wine at his own expense. —New York Sun.

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep," sleepily repeated a little Dracut girl after her mother one night not long ago. Then she stopped. "If—if—" her mother suggested. The little one hesitated a moment, half opened her heavy eyelids, and then continued, pausing long between the words:

"If I had a—cow—that gave such—milk
I'd dress her—in—the—finest silk."

THE Boston Post says there are over 151,000 Catholic Indians in the United States, distributed throughout the following states and territories: In the state of Maine, $1,400; in New York, 900; in Michigan, 4,000; in Wisconsin, 1,480; in Minnesota, 10,800; in Dakota, 2,000; in Kansas, 2,800; in Montana, 7,829; in the Indian Territory, nearly 100,000; in Arizona, 1,500; in Idaho, 700; in Washington, more than 10,000; in Oregon, 1,600; in California, more than 6,000. The same authority states that more than 100,000 of the negroes of the United States are Catholics.

BELLE HARRIS is a heroin and martyr in the eyes of the Mormons. She is confined in the penitentiary, near Salt Lake city, where she is daily visited by men and women high in the church, who continually exhort her to hold firm, and not betray her savior into the hands of the gentiles. In the Mormon belief, a woman's husband is her only savior, and she cannot be raised after death except through him. Belle's case is a test one under the Edmunds law. Several years ago a saint named Clarence Merrill took her for his third wife. She has borne two children, whose paternity has never been questioned. Merrill is being prosecuted for polygamy. Belle Harris was summoned as a witness. Were you ever married? She refused to answer questions as to her marriage. Consequently she was adjudged guilty of contempt of court; and sentenced to pay a fine of $25, also to be imprisoned until she should become a tractable witness.

COLONEL INGERSOLL recently wrote these touching words to a friend whose mother had just died at a goodly age: "After all, there is something tenderly appropriate in the serene death of the old. Nothing is more touching than the death of the young, the strong. But when the duties of life hav all been nobly done, when the sun touches the horizon, when the purple twilight falls upon the present, the past, and the future, when memory with dim eyes can scarcely spell the records of the vanished days, then, surrounded by friends, death comes like a strain of music. The day has been long, the road weary, and we gladly stop at the inn."

HE was an irreverent but truthful observer of the English bishops who wrote of them, as they appeared recently in the House of Lords: "There sat some seventeen elderly persons in episcopal robes, their puffed lawn sleeves suggesting in a rather curious way that a feminin element, not youthful either, had somehow found its way into the House. Look at their faces. The stamp of their profession is on them. Nobody would say that these are men of the world, or men of business, or men of affairs. The pinched lips, the eyes mostly too near together, the skin drawn firmly over cheek and chin, the sloping corners of bitter mouths, the air of sanctimony, of always posing before the world—all this and much more the casual observer may see as he glances at this phalanx of spiritual legislators."

STREET preaching is losing what little power it ever had in this city, and also, to a great extent, elsewhere. The fact that so few preachers who hav very good sense officiate in the streets tends to diminish the influence which they might otherwise hav. There hav been times when some of the best preachers in Christendom harangued street crowds. But of late years it has come to be suspected that any preacher who prefers to use brick piles or curbstones for his pulpit is a crank. The wild and rambling utterances to which some of the street preachers hav given vent furnish good ground for this judgment. The character of the so-called sacred music furnished by some of the choirs which hav labored in connection with certain of these disseminators of glad tidings is such as to drive away most people of sound judgment. Nowadays so many halls are to be had at moderate price that almost anybody who has a message worth delivering can procure a place in which those who wish can enjoy it without molestation.

VISIONS of heaven are common to the Rev. Charles W. Torry, a Congregational pastor in Cleveland, so he says. "I went," he relates, as to one of these experiences, "with two or three young girls, who held me by the hand, to meet the Lord. Many others, old and young, were going the same way. As soon as we caught a glimpse of his face we were ravished with his wonderful beauty. He had just put forth his hand to welcome a young maiden, hardly any older than those with me, and the smile that lit up his features was the most glorious vision I ever beheld. It seemed to lighten everything. It was the effulgence of lightning without its sharpness. It surpassed every conception of earth." But the two girls who accompanied Mr. Torry were rejected, because they had in Sunday-school refused to welcome a ragged child to their class. He describes these things apparently with the utmost sincerity, and much impresses his hearers with them. It is evident that the Rev. Mr. Torry's head is not level.

A TEACHER finding it difficult to obtain the prompt attendance of the boys in her class, resolved to adopt a plan which she felt sure would be successful. She said to the boys: "Now, I will giv a bright penny to each one who will be in their places every Sunday." The plan seemed to work well until one Sunday not a boy appeared in his place. The teacher was surprised and somewhat discouraged that her plan had not succeeded. But the next day, while walking down street and thinking what to do next, she met one of the boys and said to him: "Well, Johnnie, where were you yesterday?" "At home, mum." "But why did you and the other boys not come to Sunday-school and get your pennies?" "Oh, teacher, 'cause we've struck; we won't come for less than two cents now." We are not informed as to how long the strikers held out or whether the advance was granted.

OF all the queer and sensational announcements made by the Salvation Army, those recently issued in Port Adelaide, Australia, take the lead. The hall occupied by the South Australia staff of the army is spoken of as a Glory Shop. A "Monster Hosannah Meeting" held in this Glory Shop is addressed by Happy George, Zulu Jim, and the Boy With Hair Like Heaven. One of the attractions is "The Struggle with Pies, Tarts, Cheesecakes, Ham and Tongue Sandwiches, Bread and Butter, Tea, Sugar, Milk, etc., of which you can hav a Full Supply by paying one shilling each." In the evening a "Merry-go-Round" is held at the Glory Shop, where "some hot bomb shells will be poured into Satan's Territories." A monster salvation meeting is harangued by "a host of Hallelujah Lasses in their Timbuctoo Bonnets." The announcement begins with the startling heading, "Hallo! Hallo! Jack! What's up? Look Here!" and winds up by saying, "Come, See, and Get Gloriously Saved! Amen!" The officer in command, who is responsible for this extraordinary invitation to religious privilege, signs himself, "Captain Tom Gibbs, the Yorkshire Relish."

AN old couple, man and wife, were along the wharves a day or two ago, hunting for an up-shore boat, and the woman explained to a steamboat agent: "It's a very stormy season, and we expect to be seasick, and we druther go on a boat where the captain is a religious man." "Well, that's all right," he replied. "We've got one very religious captain on our line, and his boat sails to-night." "Can we go down and see him?" "Oh, yes. Keep right down the street until you see the boat." The couple walked on and finally boarded the steamer. The captain and all hands were busy with cargo, but the old folks walked up to him and the woman said: "Capting, you hav been recommended to us as a religious man." "The devil I hav!" he promptly growled. They looked at each other with consternation depicted in their faces, and then the old man said: "Capting, what church do you belong to?" "See here!" roared the official, "if you've come to bleed me for some charity, or want me to sign a petition, or expect this boat to carry a lot of deadheads up the lake, I won't stand it. What do you want? Out with it, now, and no infernal chawing around. I'm blanked if I ain't bothered by more dashed lunatics than any other blanked man on the dashed lakes." Man and wife retired to consult, and after getting ten feet away the woman said: "Henry, he's not a religious man." "Well, I dunno." "But he swears like a pirate." "Yes, Maria, but you see this is out West. We don't swear and belong to the church, too, up in New Hampshire, but they may do differently out here. He swears, but he looks like a man to depend on in a storm." "Shan't we look for another?" "I guess not, Maria. I guess the religion out here in Michigan are kind o' stretchy, and they 'low swearing on steamboats and around the depots. We'll go by this boat, and if he don't swear any harder than he did to us mebbe Providence will let him squeeze through on the up-trip and sink him when he comes down!"—Detroit Free Press.

News of the Week.

GEN. TOM THUMB, the dwarf, is dead.

THE senatorial contest in New Hampshire remains unsettled.

THE cigarmakers of this city are on strike, and 10,000 men and girls are locked out.

IMMORALITY charged against Rabbi Schupl has divided the Hebrew congregation at Dallas, Texas.

A TORNADO in Wisconsin last Sunday nearly wrecked a train of cars, blew down houses and trees, and prostrated crops.

THE cholera continues its ravages in Cairo, Egypt. Six hundred and sixty-two deaths in one day were reported on the 21st.

ABOUT two-thirds of the telegraph operators of this country hav struck for higher pay. The prospect is judged to be that they will win.

EX-GOVERNOR HARRIMAN, of New Hampshire, was recently prostrated by an attack of heart trouble, and at last accounts was in a precarious condition.

THE plot of ground south of Cooper Institute, in this city, is to be named Cooper park. A monument to Peter Cooper will be raised by popular subscription.

HANLAN still holds the championship among oarsmen. He defeated Wallace Ross at Ogdensburg, N. Y., on the 18th in a four-mile race, beating all previous records.

A PETITION signed by one thousand persons has been presented to the pardon committee of Massachusetts for the release of George T. Hathaway, the Fall River embezzler.

A SUBTERRANEAN forest, seven feet below the surface of the ground, has been discovered in Chazy, Clinton county, N. Y. Many of the trees are in a good state of preservation.

A MEMBER of the commission of inquiry has been sent from St. Petersburg, Russia, to Germany, France, and England for the purpose of obtaining an exact report concerning the civil rights of Jews in those countries.

THE international rifle match at Wimbledon, England, was won by the British marksmen. The Americans did better than last year, lowering the number of points by which they were beaten from 170 in 1882 to 45 in 1883.

WORKMEN in the town of Manlius, N. Y., on the 18th, unearthed portions of the skeleton of a mammoth which, it is estimated, must hav been fourteen feet high. The animal lived in the post-pliocene period of the tertiary age.

DENIS KEARNEY was refused permission to hold forth in one of the public parks of this city last week. He accuses the park commissioners of trying to smother free speech in New York. Kearney lectured at the Cooper Institute on the evening of the 20th.

THE Rev. Thos. Mitchell, of Brooklyn, indorsed by the Rev. Dr. Burchard (Presbyterian), of New York, and the Rev. Dr. Peck (Methodist), of Brooklyn, has accepted an invitation to represent evangelical Christianity at the Rochester Freethinkers' Convention.

WORSHIPERS in St. Barnard's church, Cohoes, says the Troy Times, were amazed when John Rafferty, during the service, walked up to the priest, announced that he was Pope Pious IX., and ordered his reverence to stop the service. Police Sergeant Smith locked the pope up.

THE court at Nyreghhaza, Hungary, which is trying a number of Jews charged with the murder of a Christian girl named Esther Salomossy, went to Tisza Ezlar, the scene of the alleged murder, on the 17th, when the boy witness, Moritz Scharf, was compelled to look through the keyhole in the door of the synagog through which he alleges that he saw the murder committed. It was conclusivly proven that he could by so doing only see one person in the interior at a time, and that it was impossible to see a group of persons, as he swore he did.

Selections.

Science and Prayer.

From the North American Review.

Theology is the past tense; science is king. Such is the conviction of thousands who lead or hope to lead the world. The reason is, that science has the only verifiable, and therefore the only reliable test of what is true, or good, or beautiful. The practical life of man, the arts, commerce, medicin, law, and even philosophy and ethics, hav become firmly established only as they hav been founded anew upon scientific methods and results.

Will religion be the exception? Or will science banish theology from that, as it did astrology from astronomy? Will the ultimate, the religious, conceptions of mankind be annexed to the scientific domain? If so, this new solution of the world will evidently supplant the ancient one and become the creed of the intelligent of the race, the basis of its higher integration. The rapid progress of science toward this result is the most astonishing phase of human history. This new solution of the universe—this idea of law, which is pushing will from the throne—dates not further back than three hundred years (A. D. 1600), when the Copernican astronomy, by the substitution of the heliocentric for the geocentric theory, presented man with a new heaven and a new earth, a new cosmogony, which necessitates a scientific religion, and will leave none other possible.

It may be replied that science cannot for ages reach the masses of the race who are still Fetichists, nor even the majority in civilized countries who are little better. Granted; but knowledge is power. Those who hav this power will control the earth, although they may not hav the numbers to inherit it. In the rational and spiritual world there is not equality. The law of evolution assigns rank according to courage and capacity. When the vanguard waits for the rear all progress will stop. The rear will never move until drawn forward by the advance. The blind will never see without the light. The highest duty is to tell the highest truth.

What, then, is the verdict of science upon prayer? Prayer is the essence of religion; is, indeed, practical religion under theology. But will the coming scientific, intelligent man pray at all? If not, from whence can he derive the reliance, comfort, and disciplin that prayer has afforded to the past generations of men? If prayer is not a means of grace under the new and higher integration, what will take its place?

Evidently prayer is useless unless prayer is answered. Does not the scientific proof that prayer is answered wholly fail?

At the very first step, the fundamental laws of modern science seem to render prayer-answer a priori inconceivable. Those laws are: the indestructibility of matter, the correlation and equivalence of forces, gravitation, and the law of evolution. This last law is now recognized as the backbone of the organic, the social, the mental, the moral, and the religious sciences. The old rudimentary beliefs about the uniformity of nature, and that like causes and conditions produced like effects, hav been summed up and verified invincibly in these laws. They are the greatest acquisition of the human race, and together form the new solution of the world. All science is merely their repetition or extension; its literature is their illustration. They are not only drawn from the facts and events of the world inductivly, but Mr. Spencer shows ("First Principles," chaps. 4–9) that, at bottom, they rest upon the law of correlation, the contrary of which is from the very constitution of our minds inconceivable. Thus, the indestructibility of matter and the persistence of force are not only proved by every observation and experiment, but upon ultimate analysis are found to be the condition of thought itself. All notions inconsistent with these laws are called by scientists pseudo-conceptions. They hav been inherited in vast masses from the unscientific period prior to 1600, when accurate knowledge beyond simple mathematics was practically impossible.

Is prayer-answer, then, one of those pseudo-ideas? The answer is affirmativ if prayer involves a break or variation of those laws.

The burden of reconciling prayer with those laws rests upon its advocates. Can it be done? Science seems to answer decisivly, No! In the olden times, nothing was more easy than a belief in prayer-answer and miracles, for nothing was more "natural" under the will, or God, solution of the world. "Sacred" literatures are full of these events. The old world was plastic material for the working out of divine and human ends. In its will-science, matter and the laws and order of nature were violated, varied, adjusted, or changed for purposes personal or religious. For instance: water was made wine; or five fishes became a hundred; a storm was broken up; iron floated; or a sacrifice was set on fire in answer to Elijah's prayer. Every instance, and they might be collected by thousands, contains the same illusion; that is, that the matter, or forces, of the world may be changed or increased in violation of, or beyond, the correlate order. In that supposition only consists the value of prayer or miracle. But for this notion of power, over or beyond nature, neither would be sought or used. From the slightest glance at the history of prayer-answer and miracle it is plain, therefore, that both were valued only as they were directly in the teeth of the order of nature, and of what are now known to be the fundamental laws of science. It follows that this venerable practice will cease in direct proportion as those laws become known and people come to rely on them, instead of on petitions to alter them.

But the pseudo-conceptions of this character, and their fundamental illusions, are, as we hav intimated, ancient, venerable, and hereditary. Immense capital—material, mental, social, and spiritual—is invested in them. The law of evolution, therefore, leads us to expect that instead of any sudden change there will necessarily arise an immense expenditure of ingenuity to make these pseudo-notions appear credible, and a very considerable amount of indignation will be visited upon those who may oppose them.

Let us, then, next examin the most common mode of sustaining this belief. It is simply a part of theology, and is itself unscientific in nature and method. It assumes a God who is anthropomorphic, and yet perfect, infinit, eternal, unchangeable, omniscient, with a will, capacities, and feelings similar to, and yet infinitly beyond those of man. The assumption is that this God, in some way and at some time "in the beginning," created the world out of nothing, or out of his own potency, and has since governed it in a fixed order, according to the laws of his own enactment, now known to us, however, as the laws of correlation above described. These laws, therefore, under the theological interpretation, are always within the control of this supreme will, and he varies, changes, adjusts, or in some way uses them so as to effect answers to prayer.

But this hypothesis of a personal or anthropomorphic God is invoked in vain. It has no weight with pure Theists, Agnostics, Pantheists, or Atheists. All these classes of thinkers unite in showing that the anthropomorphic conception of God is a false one, and without the slightest scientific warrant; that it is a dogma of theology which cannot be conceived, much less understood, but which must be "received by faith" as a "mystery," if it be received at all. When mysteries of this kind (as, for instance, the dogma of transubstantiation) meet the law of correlation, they pass at once beyond the domain of science into that limbo of vanity, or of poetry and fancy, known in science as fable and myth.

But to those who still retain, or imagin that they retain, a belief in an anthropomorphic deity, will this hypothesis of a personal God remove or only increase the difficulty? Plainly the latter. It is as impossible to reconcile prayer-answer or miracle with God's necessary and admitted attributes, which are, his omnipotence, omniscience, and perfection, as it is to reconcile them with the scientist's laws of nature. Nor, may we add, does such prayer-answer or miracle remain consistent with any reasonable veneration for a deity. For if the laws of nature be but the order of continuous manifestations of his power, they are invariable, because they must be perfect, for they are the action of a perfect being who omnisciently knew all things for all time, and had infinit power to execute all that he knew or wished. Such a being is, therefore, commonly and properly described as unchangeable, and "without a shadow of turning." To suppose such a being to alter the order of the world would be to admit that it was not perfectly conceived and ordered in the first place, and that its maker failed for want of knowledge or power to make it complete. A perfect and invariable God cannot also be imperfect and variable. Such a being is a bundle of absurd contradictions.

But let us next suppose that prayer was foreknown and fore-ordained by this supreme being, as a thing to happen as a part of his government by which man would procure a benefit that God had fore-ordained thereupon to grant. Then the prayer would be useless; for, the event would happen as a part of the perfect world-order without prayer, or, if prayer were decreed to be inseparably connected with the event, then it would be simply a part of it, a superfluous concomitant of the event, and useless, since the event would happen without it. The maker of the prayer would be only an automaton worked for nothing. If this be the plan of the world, it is plain that God has fore-ordained to grant benefits to intelligent people without this needless addition, which they hav practically dropped. He has wisely fore-ordained that people should drop it as they become enlightened.

But suppose that God has fore-ordained some facts to be born as twins. For he may hav arranged "from all eternity," so that a certain event cannot happen without a prayer preceding, which prayer depends upon the volition of some man. Plainly this would be conditioning the order of events, and the order of a perfect world, upon the volition of an imperfect being. This would contradict God's perfection, omniscience, and goodness. The idea that a perfect being could let his world be run by imperfect and ignorant creatures through their prayers would be simply absurd. Leaving a child in charge of a steam-engin would be nothing to it.

But if the prayer did not thus change or determin the order of its twin event, it would evidently be useless. If it does change that order, God, "from all eternity," knew it, or he did not. If he did not know it, he was not omniscient and perfect. If he did know it, he must hav ordered it, for all things must hav been fore-ordained by himself in order to be knowable by him. But if he knew and ordained the result, he must be morally responsible for it; and if he is also perfect, the result ordained by him must be perfect. But it could be perfect in one order only; for there cannot be two perfect orders. Therefore, the actual order must hav been eternally perfect and eternally ordained, and the prayer for any change must be useless and absurd. Prayer-answer could only lead to imperfections and the consequent inference of an imperfect God.

But, it is said, may not God, in some way, adjust his fixed laws so as to effect answers to prayer much as human beings do, or are supposed to do? The answer is, that scientific laws are unvariable, and therefore always unadjustable. They cannot be adjusted by either God or man. They can only be obeyed or followed. As Bacon taught, man conquers nature only by obedience. Man may adjust matter, or phenomena, or himself, and events, so that these laws may come in play, as is the case in all scientific experiments. But to speak of man adjusting the laws of nature is a total misapprehension of them and of man's relation to them. Man modifies phenomena by bringing them under laws, but he never varies, or changes, or bends, or adjusts laws in any way whatsoever. Nor can God do it without violating his own attributes and committing logical suicide; for the law is the order which is the condition of his attributes and existence. But if any such thing could be done consistently with God's attributes, would it be less a violation of the law of correlation? Certainly not. If prayer be of any value, it must cause God to vary the order of his correlates in some degree, or direction, or time. It matters not whether this variation from the fixed law is made at the time of the prayer, or years before or after. Whether at once, or gradually, it is a variation of the order which otherwise would hav occurred if the prayer had not been offered. Laws, therefore, cannot be adjusted; but man and his affairs may be adjusted to them by his will and efforts. Thus he is said, by labor and prevision, to modify phenomena to his use, and to avoid the crushing weight of fatalism which the inexorable laws of nature would otherwise bring upon him. But the very possibility on the part of man of this power of modifying phenomena, and so of making his life tolerable, or glorious, depends upon the invariability of unadjustable laws. Let it be supposed for a moment that these laws could be changed or adjusted by prayer, or in any other way, then science and the certainty of life would be gone, and modern civilization would disappear.

But next, it may be said, why may not God, in a similar way to man, adjust and modify phenomena under these fixed laws, and so effect answers to prayer? If man can do this somewhat and beneficially for himself, why cannot God do it for him infinitly more? The answer is, that God must be just as perfect, omniscient, and omnipotent as to phenomena as he is as to their laws. As such, he has settled the phenomena and their order, including man's will and works, as well as all possible laws, perfectly and forever, from all eternity. Man is weak, imperfect, and ignorant, and therefore he has to change and adjust himself according to his own will and imperfection. Man is thus subject to the "struggle for existence," and therefore has developed a will, and uses it to provide for his wants. But God is freed from all strife; will and law are one with him, and cannot be otherwise. Man is a contestant; God is conceivable only and always as perfect. He exists only in perfect order. To suppose that he does not, is to involve the absurdities referred to above as to God's attributes and law.

Lastly, this anthropomorphic notion of God which we are considering makes him the reverse of worshipful. He becomes a limited, imperfect quasi human agent, morally responsible for the evils that exist and for all of the sufferings of his creatures. These moral consequences are too horrible to be more than referred to, nor is more than a reference necessary to any intelligent person. All personal Theism, therefore, in attempting to adjust or to escape the order of correlation falls into intellectual contradictions, and ends in making God a moral monster. Such attempts to make prayer-answers credible are hopeless.

But it is said, then let the appeal be to facts; if the case fails a priori, it may be proved a posteriori. Can it be possible that the almost numberless facts from sacred and profane records, detailing, even down to our own day, what hav appeared to the relators to be answers to prayer, can be wholly mistaken or fraudulent?

To this the answer may seem rude or cruel; but to, science, "facts" of this kind, related after the events, even by the observers, are only second-hand facts and, when repeated by others, hav no weight whatever. They simply are not facts to any scientific or intelligent person. Among the superstitious, or those who wish to believe, the eye "brings more than it see." Such "facts" are illusions, common enough now in uncivilized countries and among the more ignorant Roman Catholic people. They merely prove the credulity of the people who assert them, and their incapacity to make and to cross-examin their observations. Anything desired may be proved to or by such individuals.

But, besides this, the ordinary conditions and "facts" of prayer are commonly not of a verifiable nature, as Professor Tyndall has fully pointed out in his well-known letter on prayer-gauge. No facts on this subject, unscrutinized by science, are of the slightest scientific value, and no such scrutiny has ever been applied. No advocate of prayer dares to imitate Elijah by an appeal to facts that could be known to be real and scientific. And this one fact outweighs all alleged "prayer-facts," and is conclusiv evidence that the confidence of prayer advocates is traditional and sentimental and not real.

The truth of this view was well illustrated in 1872, when Professor Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson proposed, in the fairest and most candid manner, a practical trial, or prayer-gauge, referred to in the above paragraph, so that something might be done to verify this prayer-power, if it hav any existence. What was the result? Instead of co-operation, these distinguished scientists were vociferously accused, in the Professor's words, of "insolence, outrage, profanity, and blasphemy;" to which he very appropriately replies: "They obviously lack the sobriety of mind necessary to giv accuracy to their statements, or to render their charges worthy of serious refutation." He had simply asked for one test under conditions that would enable prayer to be established. "A single experiment," he said, "is frequently devised by which a theory must stand or fall;" as, for instance, the lesser velocity of light through liquids, shown at once, was a crucial test against Newton's emission theory of light.

But the crucial test which advocates of prayer in England would not furnish to the scientists was within ten years furnished to the world on the grandest scale (grander than that of Elijah) in America. In 1881, the prayers of fifty millions of people, indeed we may say of the prayer-makers of almost the whole world, went up for months, day and night, but they could not cause the change of a single pus-cell in the languishing form of our dying President. "It was not the Divine will," we hear? Yes; but if the only prayer ever answered is "Thy will be done," why is it not a saving of time and dignity to let that will be done without the useless prayer?

Next, we are told that prayer has been a very general belief in all places and times, and among all religions. Must not the belief and the supposed need of it hav some response or counterpart of fact in the order of nature? How else came it ever to exist? Science answers, No. The belief in a thing, and above all our feeling of a want of it, does not affect the external order of nature, nor prove in the slightest what it is or will be. Science has, on the contrary, reversed every important early belief of mankind, beginning with astronomy and ending with the scientific theory of the ego or selfhood. The presumption is, that all ancient beliefs are based upon imagination and illusions of the senses, and upon that ignorance of the meaning of facts which universally prevailed during the childhood of the race. It is the very business of science to reverse these beliefs. That the general want of a thing proves its existence is, if possible, still more absurd. The want is simply a counterpart of the belief, and when that is removed the want and practice die with it. Prayer is not only not wanted, but is disagreeable to those who hav outgrown it. The existence of fairies, witches, angels, devils, demons, and ghosts can be readily proved by this method. Not solid facts, but illusions and delusions, are their creators.

The custom of prayer is simply evidence of man's weakness and needs, and of the childish views he once entertained of the world and of God. As far as the needs remain, science will supply them under intelligent human effort. Thus, as the light of law advances, the illusions of the old spiritual world, and prayer among them, will vanish like ghosts at dawn. They will be simply outgrown.

In this view, this prayer discussion is of great practical importance. This delusion, if it be one, needs to be removed from the popular mind with all convenient speed. For the sure foundation of practical life is the general belief in the invariable order of nature. If this order can be varied, adjusted, or broken by God, or by the prayer of a man, then science and civilization are all at sea. We are remanded back to the age and the methods of the rain-maker and the sorcerer. The foundation of the future welfare of our race rests on the public conviction of the impregnable immutability of laws, and of the almost infinit modifiability of phenomena under them through human will and effort. There is no reliable basis for individual character or for society if these scientific convictions are destroyed or weakened in the popular mind.

To be deprived of pleasant illusions, or to deprive others of them, may be painful, but all scientists should sustain the highest conceptions of nature, of law, and of God, knowing that they bring their compensations. Says Goethe:

> Painful truth! Yet I prefer her to pleasant error,
> For truth will heal the pain she may oft inflict.

What, then, are the remedies of truth for prayer? That they will all become apparent at once is not probable. We must outgrow the use of prayer as we do other limitations of childhood—gradually, and by the aid of truer conceptions, ideals, and habits.

The higher integration will present its compensations. Space permits only an intimation of these. Confidence in a firm world of law, modifiable practically without limit as to phenomena and events, by the will and efforts of man for the benefit of his race, becomes the true basis of nobility of character. The infinit, the cosmos, and man become the sources of feelings, thoughts, purposes, hopes, and duties which are found to be inspiring, consoling, practical, beneficent, and religious in the highest degree, and which open up a new world. Habitual physical rest, and times devoted to the cultivation of our highest ideals and feelings, become a source of sweetness and light more sure than prayer or sacrifice. To these results, the lives of Spinoza, Goethe, Hume, Kant, Comte, Mill, Carlyle, Emerson, Harriet Martineau, George Eliot, and thousands who hav discontinued the habit of prayer, bear abundant and practical witness.

Mother-wit is the cure for false theology, says Emerson, and it is sure! The bottom of the world, and of human effort and hope, is infinit. It is because we grow to newer and truer ideals, purposes, and hopes that the older, like the leaves, fade and fall. Those who do not see the new will proceed as of old, for no desire will disturb their illusions. Thus the law of evolution happily protects them from the light which might injure or blind. But those who see must fearlessly advance. As Professor Ernst Haeckel enjoins, impavidi progrediamur!

THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

Christ Not Crucified under Pontius Pilate.

When Justice Joseph P. Bradley, in rendering his decision in favor of seating R. B. Hayes in the presidential chair, applied the word aliunde to certain evidence which he found it necessary to discard in order to make his decision plausible, the N. Y. Sun nicknamed him Aliunde Joe. The same judge has now been exercising his extra-judicial abilities in solving the difficult problem, In what year and on what day was our Lord crucified? From astronomical data—that is to say, lunar calculations—he concludes that there was but one year between A.D. 28 and 35 inclusiv, in which the crucifixion could hav happened, to wit, A.D. 30. The gist of his conclusions is given in the N. Y. Sun of June 30th, under the heading "Sunbeams." We sent to the Sun the substance of what follows, but the article has not appeared, and probably will not. The light which Infidels are able to shed on the dark problems of Christianity is seldom tolerated by the N. Y. Sun, which does not shine for all, but rather reflects feeble theological rays, and therefore ought to be called The Moon.

Judge Brady makes what appears to be a strong point, but we beg leave to show: 1. That it is not new or original; 2. That his data are not certain; and 3. That his evidence as to the fact of the crucifixion is aliunde.

1. We hav before us a "Sunbeam," clipped from that luminary of March 8, 1882, containing twenty lines of an article written by a Mr. Linn to the London Standard, in which he reaches the same conclusions from lunar calculations that Judge Bradley does. He says that the paschal full moon in A.D. 29 fell on Saturday, April 16th, which of course excludes that year. But he adds: "In A.D. 30 that full moon was on Thursday, April 6th, on which day the Passover meal was eaten, and our Lord suffered the next day (in our reckoning," [but] "the same day in the Jewish), on which other observances were still to be kept." The writer probably means that the Passover was eaten on Thursday evening, which was the beginning of the Jewish Friday; so that he and Judge Bradley do not seem to differ.

2. McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature says that the 14th of Nisan was the day of the passion according to Jewish usage, and that "strict lunar calculations indicate only one of the six years [from A.D. 28 to 33 inclusiv], viz.: A.D. 29, in which the 14th Nisan was the 18th of March, and Friday." But the same authority concedes that "if it is contended that the crucifixion took place the day after the Passover (!) the year may hav been A.D. 30, in which the 15th Nisan fell on Friday, 7th April" (Art. Chronology).

If therefore Mr. Linn and Judge Bradley mean that the Passover in A.D. 30 was kept on Friday, they differ from the cyclopedia, which puts the Passover in that year on Thursday, April 6th. Furthermore, McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia, Dr. Samuel Davidson, and other recent authorities, fix A.D. 29 as the year of the crucifixion, thus conforming to the most ancient Christian authorities; for example, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and the recently discovered ancient Syriac documents (see Anti-Nicene Christian Library). Tertullian is of course mistaken in fixing the day March 25th, which, as we now know, was a whole week after the full moon.

3. But whatever the true results may be from lunar calculations, etc., it is certain that all such evidence is aliunde. Every intelligent Jew knows that the first or great day of the Passover was never allowed to fall on Friday; and that the Jews never tried or executed anybody on that holy day (Rabbi Wise's Orig. of Chris., p. 30).

What then? Is the detailed account in the Synoptic Gospels of the crucifixion on a Passover Friday false? Certainly; and it is likewise false that Jesus Christ was crucified under Pontius Pilate. There was, however, a Jesus stoned and hanged for sorcery by the Jews a hundred years before; and that was the Jesus of Paul, of Simon Kepha (falsely called Peter, which is only a Greek translation of the Aramaic word meaning "stone"), of James, of John, and the rest of the so-called apostles, who all lived and died before the Christian era. That earlier Jesus is frequently alluded to in the Talmud, and there are various legends in regard to him; but neither the Talmud nor the legends make the mistake of having him executed on the Passover day; it is always the day before. And it is conceded that the Jesus described in the gospels is not noticed in the Talmud (see Lost and Hostile Gospels, by Rev. S. Baring-Gould). Nor is there any pretended historical evidence of a Jesus crucified under Pontius Pilate that is not a Christian forgery. ANTICHRIST.

P. S.—Since writing the above the "Man of Sin" is happy to learn from a reliable source that Judge Bradley is a Freethinker; and further, that all the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States except Mr. Justice Strong, are Infidels. In other words, on the question of the divine origin of Christianity the court stands eight to one. ANTICHIST.

The Real Blasphemers.

I want to call attention to Col. Kelso's latest work, "The Real Blasphemers." It is exceedingly interesting and valuable, sharp with logic and weighty with scripture learning. The author has evidently studied the Bible to good account, and no doubt will enlighten his Christian friends in regard to the character of the God they so blindly worship. The fact is that those who profess to believe in the Bible don't know what it really teaches, and it is a useful undertaking to expose in the bare light of modern scientific criticism the barbarities of this so-called deity. No one could do it in a better spirit than Col. Kelso has shown, for he has simply stuck to the letter of the record, and has not been led astray by any prejudices. He givs a searching and fearless analysis of this "revelation," and demonstrates beyond cavil that if there is such a thing as blasphemy, then the "blasphemy" heaped upon the ruler of the universe by the Christian history is the most degrading and infamous. Surely the "God" revealed in the Old and New Testaments is the ideal of a savage mind, and to the sensitiv heart, that would find something in the infinit unknown of beauty and joy, is most revolting and painful. The true worshiper is he who admits his ignorance, and to whom the mighty universe is an awful and glorious object of contemplation—an unsounded deep to which he dare not ascribe anything of his own personal frailty. We cannot define the force that makes and unmakes the star and dew. It sweeps on amid the manifold laws of nature with an incomprehensible grandeur, and it is blasphemy even to think that its dazzling immensity can be put into any of the shapes of man's limited experience. We cannot imagin even a good God; that is beyond human grasp, and he who is profoundly reverent will not seek to do it. He will say, "I do not know." If it is irreverence to seek any definition of the boundless being of things, what blasphemy to ascribe to that being the qualities of the ancient Hebrew Jehovah, a God which every decent man and woman of to-day must reject with the utmost scorn!

Col. Kelso has done well to emphasize this tremendous fact and bring Christians to the book, face to face with the hideous tyrant they profess to worship, in order that, if truly honest with themselvs, they may reject the creed to which they hav so unconsciously submitted.

As a destructiv criticism, "The Real Blasphemers" is a timely work, and the attention of every thinking Christian should be called to it, in order that like a bath of cold water it may shake him to do him good, and giv him a realizing sense of what is really true. The trouble with the Christian is that he livs in a dream-world; he has no solid foundation for belief. If we could wake him up and bring him to a matter-of-fact outlook, his "Christianity" would go by the board. Col. Kelso's book is a right good thunderclap in this direction. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD;" 4 volumes, cloth, $6.50; leather, $9.50; morocco, gilt edges, $10.50

Communications.

Which First: Mind or Matter?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Something exists. This something is material, and this something fills all the realms of infinit space. Whatever is, is of this material, and naught outside or in addition to it is thinkable or possible. If we imagin any thing, being, or form outside of or different from it, it would, upon closer examination, be found either like or of it, or—nothing.

To deny Materialism is to deny matter, force, everything, the basis of all existence. To deny material existence as absolute and supreme is to deny abstract existence. To deny that the potencies of matter can produce certain results is to deny that anything can produce them. If not matter—substance—what? To think of anything immaterial is like thinking of immaterial substance—it cannot be done simply because there is no such thing.

Man exists. He can see, think, reason. He beholds the world he inhabits and the innumerable phenomena surrounding him, and this existence becomes tangible, real. Existence, then, is a fact. Now man reasons. All objects of knowledge are composed of matter—substance—which he can see, feel, weigh, dissect, examin, analyze, and resolve into its constituent elements or original parts. These parts he denominates atoms. He finds that all objects are but aggregations of these elements or atoms, and that annihilation of these atoms is impossible.

Abstract existence of infinit matter, then, being a self-evident fact, logic and reason peremtorily postulate that this existence is eternal, as its antithesis implies creation from nothing and an eternity of time preceding the time of this supposed creation when it was not, which, if true, would of course hav made any subsequent existence impossible.

Next, logic iniers the infinitude of space, as its antithesis also is impossible. Space being infinit, and the space we occupy and can penetrate with our telescopes being filled with matter, we logically predicate that all space is likewise filled with matter. Matter, then, is infinit in expanse and eternal in duration.

Now all matter—each atom—seems to be endowed with and to possess certain physical and chemical attributes, co-existent and inseparable from it. These attributes manifest themselvs in motion, and this motion causes a mingling, attraction, and adhesion of greater or lesser number of these atoms, and these aggregated atoms possess and evolve innumerable new potencies and capabilities. Thus aggregated they, of their own inherent qualities, assume forms, aerial, fluid, organic, and inorganic. In this sense—as ever activ vital forces—all matter is ever alive and immortal. Spontaneously ever assuming new forms, spontaneously assimilating, growing, evolving other and higher forms, they also spontaneously disintegrate and annihilate their past and present form only to go back to chaos, but ever ready to unite with other affinities, and thus build up new forms or beings.

Matter being eternal, and it being a quality of matter ever to assume forms, it becomes self-evident that at no time in the past it first assumed form, but that this process has been going on eternally in beginningless time, as it will continue to go on forever in the future. Consequently we can logically infer that there never was a first form, sun, system, star, world, etc.; and long and many ages before our sun began to shed her light and heat upon our then life-lifeless system, countless other suns and systems—containing many other worlds, and all swarming with anxious men and women—existed in the noon-day of their glory then even as we do now.

A beginning of cosmic life, a beginning of the universe, a beginning of motion, is absolutely unthinkable, because it implies that all this vast aggregation of matter, at one time—way back during the vast eternity preceding any supposed beginning—existed in absolute standstill, a vast mass of dead, inert substance, which, if a fact, would of course hav prevented it ever afterward from becoming activ energy or living matter, as what it did or could not accomplish during the eternity preceding this supposed commencement, it, of course, could never accomplish at any subsequent time.

It is entirely consistent, then, with humility and logic to predicate no first form or body, either organic or inorganic, but all such phenomena to be but eternal repetitions of an infinit number of like phenomena ever preceding them.

As a first minute or a commencement of time is unthinkable and impossible, so the creation or formation of a first world is likewise impossible.

The evolution of physical forms having gone on in the universe forever and ever in the past, it becomes evident that the evolution of minor forms, like man and beast, has also gone on forever and ever in the past, and that in this sense, and only in this sense, it is true that matter and mind (the latter as a function of organized matter) are both alike eternal; and a first man being impossible, a first mind of course would likewise be impossible.

But leaving the realms of an infinit universe and confining ourselvs now to the evolution of man on this little globe and to a solution of the interesting subject under discussion: "Which first: Mind or Matter?" it seems to me the answer is at once self-evident and must be decided in favor of the a priori existence of the latter.

It is now, I believe, generally conceded by all thoughtful minds that the material composing our earth, in the beginning—when the independent formation process commenced—was in a nebular condition and our earth naught but a vast body of nebulæ. No one will presume to assert that mind or consciousness then existed upon our earth. It was left alone in space, without directing force or power, influenced and controled solely by the sun and its own inherent properties, yet destined finally, of necessity, to evolve to its present condition of perfection.

During millions of years this nebulæ existed as such, but in the course of time, through its own physical and chemical attributes, a condensation process took place, causing this nebulous matter to ignite and change into one vast sea of fire—also a purely physical effect of purely physical causes. And no one will presume that mind existed during this period, or that a "guiding intelligent force" was needed for this.

Then follows a period of fire and flame when for millions of years the general aspect of our earth was similar to that of the sun at the present time—a vast, terrible, seething, belching, boiling mass of burning matter. Can we conceive of mind existing then and there? Is consciousness, and the organic life it necessitates incident thereto, possible in such a literal hell? If not, where then at this period of our earth's formation is the much-talked-of a priori mind or consciousness?

Finally a cooling process occurs. The fires hav consumed the vast store-house of fuel, and the surface of the earth begins to cool off. Was there intelligence needed for this, or did the fires cease to burn as the match does in our hand or the fuel in our stoves, of sheer necessity, when the supply of fuel is exhausted?

During the period following we behold the remaining heat in the center of the earth and the condition of the atmosphere without, producing moisture; this moisture mingling with the debris and ashes during other millions of years finally brought on the carboniferous period and a wonderful prolific vegetation producing in luxurious abundance the most magnificent trees and shrubs of our tropical climes; but alas! the atmosphere so charged with carbonic gas that conditions to animal life were impossible; and, consequently, all this gorgeous vegetation, in its grand and endless profusion, lost to the eyes of man. No eye to see its glory, no mind to appreciate its transcendent beauty!

But, finally, after other myriads of years of prolific vegetation, during which vast period forest upon forest was literary shelved away (for the benefit of the present race) we behold another change. The air is now freed from poisonous gases, and way down in the bottom of the ocean or even among the "primitiv ooze" (as Prof. Swing pleases to call it) on the sea-shore, we discover small organic bodies—"organisms without organs"—but entirely different from vegetation, which float and move about seeking and assimilating food—the dawn of animal life, intelligence, and consciousness.

For millions of ages the earth has existed, evolved finally to conditions where it produces minute organisms, and behold! mind and consciousness are a reality as a function of this minute organism. But which was first? Who will say, following the world's evolution from nebula to its state of perfection, so to speak, that mind or consciousness existed prior to the formation or spontaneous involuntary generation from the unconscious potencies of matter, of this primary and crude animal, or that the latter itself was a factor, designer, or pre-existing agent in causing its own origin?

If nebula, fire, carbon, or any other single force, or aggregated forces, can be a conscious entity; or if heat, light, soil, moisture, etc., can plan and reason, then indeed the hypothesis may be true; but if this proposition is absurd, it must be consigned to the realms of phantasm and folly. These agencies being the sole factors in the formation of this primary germ, it becomes self-evident that matter and force exist prior, and alone and unaided are the sole agents producing mind, or rather organism possessing functions of thought.

Whether or not an accurate and immediate solution of the intricate modus operandi of the transition of unconscious matter to conscious organism be forthcoming, the fact is patent that such a process does take place, and that matter—blind and unconscious—does produce every natural phenomenon in the universe.

And this proposition has at least the advantage of the greatest probability yet advanced, as the proposition that mind exists prior to organism is absolutely wild and purely speculativ. All knowledge and analogy are against such a theory, and besides it is utterly unthinkable and therefore improbable. Mind divested of organism is like a shadow without substance, a human body without flesh and blood, light without eyes, or sound without ears. It is equivalent to assuming that the animal germ of the rat, cat, or dog, as well as that of man, prior to conception, designs and superintends in infinit wisdom the formation and growth of its own body—even before conception as well as while yet in the womb or a suckling brute!

This logic (?) divests eternal, infinit matter, permeated with life and vitality, of all qualities to produce of itself a single effect, but proceeds forthwith to invest an airy nothing with all-sufficient power to do all in its place!

It is like the (ill) logic of the Theist, who, failing to explain natural phenomena, jumps from the realms of reality and the knowable into the realms of the unknowable, and there finds an imaginary and far more mysterious agent to create all which he in his ignorance fails to discover in nature.

Let our friends, the champions of spirit, or of the a priori existence of mind, define the basis of their faith in plain English, and analyze and make clear to the world what stuff their spirits are made of; and unless they comply with this reasonable request, and define their component parts—original elements—they will find that in discarding matter and force and their glorious possibilities, they hav discarded all, and hav absolutely not a vestige of anything left to make a spirit or anything else out of, or anything to build a faith upon.

A short time ago my brother Herman (by the way, the very first outside subscriber of The Truth Seeker on Brother Bennett's books, and also a jeweler six days in the week, and a professor of Finalogy—original—on the seventh), in a communication to the Rochelle Register, advanced the following ingenious idea in solution of this complex problem:

"How about conscious life, a question which has puzzled the profoundest thinkers of all ages? To understand this we must imagin the minutest form of animate life. All matter has its property of polarity. It is dual in its nature, positiv or attractiv, negativ or repellent. It is attracted by what is congenial to its nature, and repelled by what is prejudicial. These properties or forces constantly assert themselvs in the lowest type of animal life. They are intensified therein. Its minute body is constantly swayed by these antagonistic forces. It is surrounded by the elements from which it sprang that are congenial to it, support its life; it is drawn toward them, attracted by them; other elements are destructiv to its life, menace it, and it shrinks back—is forced back, repelled. Can we conceive of such a constant struggle going on without its effect becoming apparent in a perception of what is going on around it? The tendency is there at least to develop perception. Its life must be aware when a congenial element comes within its reach, and when destructiv ones approach, a very indistinct perception though it be, but yet it is aware of its condition. It is easier to conceive that such perception should assert itself under such opposing influences constantly surrounding it than that it should remain devoid of them. This tendency to perceive is the starting-point of judgment, the germ of intelligence, as it has learned to discriminate good from evil. Furthermore our minute protozoa is aware that upon the exercise of its faculty of perception, of judgment, depends its tiny life. Here is the beginning of conscious life; the diversified laws of evolution will do the rest. The germ of life is an ever-moving, writhing atom. It seeks for its like, snuggles up in close embrace to it, and with others equally congenial forms partnerships until death (antagonistic elements) 'doth us part.' This is life in its lowest form."

Matter and force, solitary and alone, unaided and undirected, unconscious and dumb, are the sole causes and agencies of all existence, life, thought, and consciousness, including the transcendent genius of a Humboldt, Goethe, Shakspere, and Raphael, and might be traced, if we had the power, to the peculiar and inevitable condition of the fortuitous assimilation of a few paltry and invisible atoms. And mind thus but a function or process made possible solely by virtue of the harmonious involuntary operation of human organism, conditioned and dependent for its actiivty upon this organism, and as absolutely ceases to be manifest after death, or after the disintegration of the organism, as the indication of time ceases when the clock is destroyed, or as it was impossible to act before conception.

The germs of unborn generations now lie dormant in the generation of the living. No one pretends to claim that their unborn minds now, a priori, are contemplating the policy of making their debut here upon our mundane sphere. They hav no voice in the matter, no choice. Destined to be conceived in love or in sin, and forced to be either white or black, male or female, perfect or imperfect, regardless of choice or volition; the unconscious infant, produced by physical process purely, is born and no mind yet. Through the medium of its senses, and especially hunger and its subsequent gratification, mind is developed. It thinks, remembers the pleasure of drink from the pure fountain of its mother's breast, etc., and behold! after the body has been in existence nearly a year the mind is first born, or rather the function of its brain first begins to act, and through the medium of this and its other senses it soon evolves a conscious intelligent man or woman. Thus is the body the cause of consciousness, of mind. The body develops, and this alone makes mind continuous and possible. Yet Spiritists say that when the body—the cause—is removed, the effect—the mind—can still remain and does remain forever.

Mrs. Macdonald concedes evolution, but objects to the transformation of inorganic matter to "living creatures ever so simple," and insists that "it is impossible." But, I think, I hav at least given a reasonable theory how the prolific and pregnant forces of eternal matter hav finally produced—evolved—a minute animal organism, and within this organism (resembling more an infinitesimal living stomach than an animal) located the seat or dawn of a primitiv mind. And, strange as it may appear, this tiny organism or single cell, possessing naught of consciousness but the gratification incident to obtaining and the digestion of its food, this insignificant, invisible infusoria, in spite of all protestations, is still the actual and only veritable progenitor of the human race, and the only true and first cause, "designer," "mind" and "spirit" preceding vain and conceited man.

Rochelle, Ill., June 3, 1883. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

A Goliath Accepts the Challenge.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Some time since, as secretary of the Freethinkers' Association, I invited, through the Herald, the orthodox church to send a representativ to speak, in behalf of orthodox Christianity, at the coming Freethinkers' Convention. I made the invitation in good faith and felt confident that some honest, sincere, able exponent of orthodoxy would accept it. But immediately thereafter the Sun, the New York Mail and Express, and the Buffalo Express, were all terribly shocked at my audacity and greenness and declared that no orthodox representativ of any respectability would accept the invitation. The Sun said: "Of course no sensible man would accept that offer, and go to Rochester to defend his religious faith at that Infidel meeting." The Mail and Express said: "The secretary's name who issues this proclamation is Green. He seems to suppose that the church will be foolish enough to send representativs to a convention whose title in the past has been indecency." The Buffalo Express said editorially: "If 'Secretary Green' has issued such an invitation, he has shown that he is well named; that, indeed, his front name should be 'Verdant.' Secretary Green knows that no such challenge will be accepted."

What wonderful wiseacres these great (?) editors are; what prophets of what will and what will not take place! What would poor humanity do if deprived of the light that constantly shines from these great luminaries? None of them is named Green, but that don't protect them from showing their verdancy.

As I anticipated, my invitation has been accepted. Rev. Thos. Mitchell, one of the ablest and most scholarly orthodox divines in this country, and a leading orthodox author, has been appointed by two branches of the orthodox church as a delegate to our convention, in compliance with my request, and Mr. Mitchell has accepted the position. He writes to me under date of July 17th, inst:

"I accept the invitation of the Freethinkers' Association of the state of New York, to make an address before their convention to assemble at Rochester, N. Y., August 29th, 1883, in defense of the Christian religion, as published in the New York Herald of June 10th.

"Please find inclosed papers, which, as we suppose, meet the conditions of your invitation in recommending me to appear and to make the proposed address. That you may not be confused, permit me to say that I am not now a pastor of a church, though an ordained minister in the M. E. church, having devoted my time for a number of years almost exclusivly to the work of authorship. My church relation is in Hanson place M. E. church, having a membership of 1,400, and of which Rev. J. O. Peck, D.D., one of the most prominent ministers in the denomination, is now pastor. Dr. Peck gave me the letter of recommendation inclosed the day before he went on his summer vacation and after almost all the board of officers of the church had left the city for various country places, rendering it impossible to obtain a vote of the board concurring with the minister in making this appointment. I may also say that in the government of the M. E. church, the memberships are never called to vote, and in such matters as these the pastor is the church, and as your invitation is not such as to stick upon technicalities, we suppose that this paper of Dr. Peck meets all the requirements. But wishing to be unobjectionable, we hav availed ourselvs of the letter of the invitation which says: 'Or either branch of the orthodox church of the United States may send such representativ.' Hence we applied to the Presbyterian branch and send you the inclosed papers, signed by Samuel D. Burchard, D.D., late chancellor of 'Ingraham University,' New York, now president of Rutgers College, New York, and pastor of Murray Hill church, being also moderator or president of the 'Session,' the board of officers of his church. It is so signed, as you see.

"Dear sir, I need not say to you that I wish to hav it decided as soon as possible whether I am to be the representativ to your convention, as the task of preparation imposed is so great and which suspense increases. I shall be relieved of the latter by hearing from you that I am to be accepted, and of the former by being rejected. Yours respectfully,

"248 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn. THOS. MITCHELL."

To the above letter I immediately replied as follows:

SALAMANCA, N. Y., July 18, 1883.

REV. THOS. MITCHELL, My Dear Sir: Yours of yesterday received. I think you hav substantially complied with the invitation of the New York State Freethinkers' Association, as made through the New York Herald, and we shall be very much pleased to welcome you as a representativ of evangelical Christianity at Rochester. And if it meets your mind you may deliver your address at the Academy of Music, in which our convention is to be held, on Thursday evening, Aug. 30th.

The headquarters of our convention will be at the Clinton House, where my wife and I shall put, up and we should be pleased to hav you stop where we do. Personally, I shall do all in my power to make your visit with us pleasant.

Truly yours, H. L. GREEN,
Secretary Freethinkers' Association.

The following are copies of the certificates presented by Mr. Mitchell:

HANSON PLACE M. E. CHURCH,
BROOKLYN N. Y., July 9, 1883.

This will certify that Rev. Thomas Mitchell, of this city, is personally known to me, and that in the defense of Christianity as against Materialism and free religion and modern skepticism I consider him candid, able, and fearless. I approve of his meeting the challenge of the Freethinkers' Association to meet in Rochester, N. Y. J. O. PECK, D.D.,
Pastor Hanson Place M. E. church.

MURRY HILL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, July, 16 1883.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE FREETHINKERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Dear Sir: Being acquainted with the character and ability of the Rev. Thos. Mitchell, we feel prepared to recommend him to represent our individual church and the cause of evangelical Christianity in your association which is to meet in the city of Rochester, August 29, 1883.

Very respectfully, L. D. BURCHARD,
Pastor of Murry Hill Presbyterian church, New York city, and Moderator of the Session.

Thus we see that the Rev. Mr. Mitchell comes to our convention representing the two principal branches of the Protestant church, the Presbyterian and Methodist; that he is vouched for as a man of character and ability and standing in the church; precisely the kind of man that we are pleased to welcome on our platform, and I know that he will meet with the most respectful treatment from our convention; for Mr. Mitchell is evidently an honest, sincere adherent of the orthodox faith, and there is nothing that a true Freethinker respects more than honesty and sincerity, and nothing he so much abhors as hypocrisy. Truly yours, H. L. GREEN.

Home Again.

DEAR LEAGUES AND LIBERALS: It is no light task to swing around a circle a thousand miles in diameter, to meet face to face an average of a Liberal to a mile, and stir him up to his duty. But I hav accomplished it safely, with profit and pleasure, and my mission has not been in vain. The Liberals I hav met are, in the main, intelligent on the situation and ready to do and dare all they can to oust the church, wholly and absolutely, from the state—for this, in brief, comprises our whole object, our entire program of work to be done. We demand that the church shall not swing one arm of the government to sustain her position, nor lift one little finger of the state to accomplish her purpose as a church. When she stands alone, receiving only the voluntary devotion and support of her members, when she can no longer compel observance of her holy days or dogmas by law, when she pays her own way without taxation or forcible levy of any kind upon those who are not her devotees, then the work of the Liberal League will be done. Our association is, only, organization of defense against organization for aggression upon our guaranteed rights as equal citizens, as well as upon our inherent rights as free men and women. Till the church calls off her dogs of war the conflict must go on. The intelligent brain of to-day will not submit to take holy orders from the ignorant brain of one thousand or two thousand years ago—no, nor even twenty-five years ago; nor will we much longer be taxed, fined, and mulcted to pay the expense of that ancient ignorance. Every religious tub must very soon stand on its own bottom dollar, or, if it hasn't any of its own, the bottom must fall out.

Well, I find the Liberals everywhere alive to the situation—in some places though in the minority, yet strong and activ and giving the church, militant and malignant, a great deal of trouble. In other places I find only a few living in quiet, but sullen, uttering protests, not loud but deep, and willing to help any practical organization for deliverance. The woods are more full of Liberals in western Pennsylvania than in the east, though there has always been a stanch and irrepressible sprinkling of them in Philadelphia, the city of Penn and Girard. In and around Pittsburgh they are moving to hold a state convention in that city on September 8th and 9th. I hope and believe the Liberals of the whole state will co-operate in the movement and secure a large attendance. Mr. T. B. Wakeman, Courtlandt Palmer, Charles Watts, of England; Dr. Juliet H. Severance, A. B. Bradford, and other speakers of Pennsylvania will be there to address the convention.

In Ohio some committees are at work organizing a convention for that state. I hope they will soon announce their program. It was thought best when I was at Salem and Alliance to hold the convention at Canton, where there is a good hall owned by a Liberal. That convention, if held, will be appointed for September 15th and 16th. The same speakers will be in attendance. The Liberals of Ohio should take hold and by their presence and financial aid make that convention a success. We know they will do it.

The main Liberal meeting this year in Michigan will be a camp-meeting of Liberals and Spiritualists, to be held at Flint in August. The Liberals whom I saw generally thought that meeting would be as much as it would be advisable to try to get up this year. It had been already appointed and arranged for before I reached the state, so I could not bring it into time with our series of state conventions. It will no doubt be a great and successful gathering.

The state convention of Illinois will be held this year at Chicago, Sept. 15th and 16th, in Union Park Hall, 517 West Madison street. Mr. F. F. Follett is secretary of the State League, and has the making of arrangements in charge. His address is Joliet, Ill. I met him at Chicago, and was glad to greet the battle-scarred veteran whom no obstacles seem to tire in the work of constructing and cementing the organization in his state, and repairing damage when anything breaks. Leaguers of Illinois, please see to it that your turn-out at your state convention is full and formidable. John E. Remsburg, of Kansas, is engaged as one of the speakers, and there is plenty of oratorical talent in the city and state which will be brought out to make an interesting convention.

The Chicago League is an activ and influential organization. If our whole 258 auxiliaries were after that pattern and caliber we should hav a force formidable enough to take the field and stamp out the church power to meddle with the state. If we adhere to our organization and grow as we hav grown, we shall come to it yet. Persistence—no surrender—never say die—these should be our watchwords, and these are what will do the business. I met with the Chicago League one evening, and found myself at home in that crowd, it seemed so like our own Liberal Club here in New York. An Advent Christian spoke on "Immortality," and then the rest sailed into him and tore his little piece into still littler pieces.

Of one other thing, friend Macdonald, let me assure you. I met THE TRUTH SEEKER everywhere and TRUTH SEEKER readers in plenty. I found them by all odds the stanchest and most intelligent of Liberals. It is wonderful what an educativ power that paper has been. I found a universal sympathy for Mr. Bennett, his persecutions, his severe labors, his calumniated character, and deep sorrow for his sudden and untimely death. But for this bereavement I find the principal consolation to be that THE TRUTH SEEKER is still so ably conducted, so varied in its contents, and generally so interesting. That THE TRUTH SEEKER did not die with its founder is a subject of universal congratulation. T. C. LELAND.

The North American Review for August opens with a very spirited discussion of the subject of "Moral Instruction in the Public Schools," by the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton, who offers a practical scheme for conveying ethical instruction without reference to religious tenets, and the Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, who maintains that the Bible must be made the basis of all moral teaching. Henry D. Lloyd exposes the tricks and frauds of speculation in grain, which operate to make bread dear, and maintains that they should be repressed by law as being flagrantly in opposition to public policy. "Woman in Politics," by ex-Surgeon-General Wm. A. Hammond, is a caustic discussion of certain facts of nervous organization which in his opinion render the female sex unfitted for participation in public affairs. Hon. Francis A. Walker reviews "Henry George's Social Fallacies," criticising in particular his doctrins regarding land-tenure and rent. The evils resulting from "Crude Methods of Legislation," both national and state, are pointed out by Simon Sterne, who advocates the adoption of certain rules of legislativ procedure which, in English practice, hav been found to serve as an effectual barrier, both against lobbying and against the mischiefs of ill-considered law-making. Charles F. Wingate writes of "The Unsanitary Homes of the Rich," and there is a joint discussion of "Science and Prayer," by President Galusha Anderson and Thaddeus B. Wakeman, the last of which (Mr. Wakeman's part) will be found in another column. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

AN Illinois woman has done no work since her conversion to shouting Methodism, and her husband has sued the revivalist who was instrumental in destroying her household usefulness.

AN argument used in England against the enfranchisement of women is the power it would throw into the hands of the clergy. "The vast majority of the weaker sex," it is urged, "would undoubtedly hav recourse to their pastors, not only for ghostly counsel and advice, but also for political principles."

W. H. H. GRAAM iz the laziest riter on rekord. He not only leavez out silent letterz and utherwize shortenz the speling ov awkwarli speld wurdz, but he refuzez tu rite capitalz, uzing insted a shaded curve, riten downward tu the left, bending over, hwich he atachez tu each small leter hware a kapital iz needed. He callz this kapitelizing the small leterz. Hware a number ov kapitalz ar needed tugether he rites small leterz with waved line over them. His shortkumingz in riting put us in mind ov Jon Hole, hoo in signing hiz name wud rite J for Jon, and punch a hole thru the paper for Hole.

"A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD;" 4 volumes, cloth, $6.50; leather, $9.50; morocco, gilt edges, $10.50

Communications.

Mormon Wickedness.—Concluded.

I will notice a few points of Judge Black, as published by you from the World. No person except some Christian crank like the judge ever wished or attempted to deprive the Mormons of the right of marriage, divorce, or make their children suffer for the wrongs of their parents, or prevent the succession of property. Of course they hav that right—no one ever doubted it but Judge Black. When the judge talks about an organized band of slaves numbering 15,000 at their last exodus from Illinois to Utah, leaving their liberties behind them, it is folly. Who drove them from New York to Ohio? from there to Missouri, to Illinois, and to Utah? God's holy priesthood, for a purpose.

This same cry that is now raised against the non-Mormon of Utah is the same old Mormon battle cry of persecution for their religion. But the cry is a lie to-day, as it ever has been in the past. Search all the courts in New York of fifty years ago, and see if you can find two search warrants issued against Joseph Smith to obtain the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. Two officers followed him and searched him and his wagon on his way to Ohio. He had hidden them in a barrel of beans. This was done twice by the villains of New York, so Mormon history tells the world, during the last forty years. Still it is a self-evident lie, for no legislature was expecting such a godsend, and consequently made no law to capture gold Bibles. Yet that is just as true as the Mormons' late outcry. For instance, Judge Black states the Mormons are as 15 to 1. This large majority was a Mormon fraud, caused by the infamous election law of Utah. I admit they are in a large majority over the Americans; also, as all in this country know, or should know, that all Utah legislators, speakers, chaplains, door-keepers, etc., are all appointed by God; all apostles, high priests, and others holding delegated power from God and the Mormon people. Every county and territorial officer, from road supervisor to judge, everyone is a Mormon elder holding power from God through the priesthood to bless or curse in the name of Jesus Christ. How is it possible for the American element to persecute or wrong the Mormons? It would be impossible for them to carry out their desires. And I wish to state right here and now that all the Mormon church cannot prove one item of what they publish; and to hire Christian lawyers and editors to lie about the gentiles of Utah is exasperating in the extreme. Even the Jew in Utah is a gentile except he become Mormon. And what are these gentiles of Utah? American citizens, in heart and in fact—Infidels, Spiritualists, Christians, Jews, etc., who think Utah is a part of the United States, and not belonging to any Asiatic God, or Utah king or priesthood. They propose to liv here till Utah is free or becomes a state. Then some time-servers will hav to flee. The brave will stay to die.

What made Benedict Arnold a traitor and tory in 1776 now makes the vast majority of Utah tories in 1883; and the very eminent Christian judge is no better than Anthony Comstock. Any person in America who aids superstition, God-ignorance, and priestcraft, with the object of making money and robbing humanity of the rights guaranteed every man, woman, and child on this continent, is a traitor and tory in fact.

The question to be solved is this: Because the non-Mormons of Utah will not bow down to Mormon gods (money, lust, vice, and priesthood), is that a just cause, or cause at all, that the minority of Utah should be robbed of every right except taxation? If not, why in the name of common sense does the constitutional party defend it? Of course, Judge Black would defend any Christian who had stolen a golden Jesus off the cross, or copper cents off a dead nigger's eyes, for money.

I admit there are a few Christian cranks here as elsewhere who hav more zeal than sense, who imagin polygamy the all-in-all of Mormonism. I hav closely watched this terrible evil for twenty-two years, and can truly say it is without one redeeming feature. As Judge Black implied by silence that polygamy is a Bible doctrin, and as a matter of fact a virtue, he and the Christians can keep it.

I will not go into the filthy Bible polygamy, except to state that there is not one living woman in Utah who ever went into polygamy of her own free will and choice. They are first coerced to believe that they can never be exalted as queens, to liv forever in the presence of God, without their paramours. It is true all Mormons may become hewers of wood and drawers of water in heaven—slaves forever; but polygamy alone, with the sealing ordinance, is all that can exalt them here. This is the only reason any women are coerced into it. This is why no Mormon women dare vote in opposition to their husbands—because their husband holds a portion of the Melchisedec priesthood. No person can pass through the endowment house (sink-hole of iniquity) without this priesthood being conferred upon him or her. No Mormon woman can vote any sealed ballot but that God knows her act; and that is the priestly chain that binds her. Make the road to the Mormon heaven free; remove the toll-gate of polygamy from the highway of the female saints, and there would never be any more plural marriages. Every convert is made with King James's translation of fables.

The Utah question will never be solved by falsehood or evasion, and that is all that Judge Black & Co. employed, and it is quite consistent from a Christian standpoint, for Judge Black, Judge Benedict, Anthony Comstock, and his fellow-miscreants. These persons being the well-known friends of kingcraft and its twin brother, priestcraft, of course are the foes of equality, humanity, and liberty. It seems to be quite proper for Mormonism to be shielded and protected by the champions of Christianity. This is as it should be, according to the theology of the Bible. The parent is hateful and hideous, and Judge Black is the hired champion of her more hateful child, Mormonism.

Let it henceforth be fully understood that the aims and objects of the National Liberal League, and Liberals in general, are so high that no church, no God, no priesthood, shall ever hav undisputed permission to plant in this glorious land the same darkness that enveloped all Europe for twelve hundred years, till 1600 A.D. It is to the Liberals alone the world must look for the preservation of the rights of man and woman. There is no church in America to-day but that is seeking to obtain the same despotic rule of America as the Mormon priesthood hav had over this part of America for thirty-two years.

When the Liberals of America know what Mormonism is in fact, I am confident they will do what is right; that is, they will be just as willing as I am that every person in this land shall enjoy every right guaranteed by the Constitution, and every right not guaranteed but inherent in humanity. I will never concede that because men claim to hav an Almighty God for their head and a long-tailed devil for their companion (twin brother of God), they hav all the rights in America, and an unbeliever none. This is the situation in Utah, ever has been, and ever will be while the Mormon God & Co. hold absolute sway. I can easily pardon the Infidels of the East for supposing that it was only a Christian movement in Utah against Mormonism.

I am aware of the malicious Christian treatment of Kneeland, Garrison, Lante, Foote, Bennett, Heywood, etc. The persecution of these men was horrible, it is true, but they were as the summer breeze to the cyclone, compared to hundreds, and I believe thousands, since God ruled Utah. When there was only the priesthood organ, the Deseret News, in Utah, they did not chronicle the death of the apostates and gentiles. The law record does not show the crimes that were being committed here when Brigham Young had an alien flag planted and guarded three hundred and seventy miles east of Salt Lake City, when God and his vicegerent was running a mint and making five dollar pieces, with the Mormon coat of arms on one side and the endowment house grip on the other, with these words around the joined hands, "Holiness to the Lord," made from the gold dust of their victims.

This, Mr. Editor, is Mormon history, and by it they must stand or fall (like Christianity); it culminated at Mountain Meadows. That was too large a massacre for the holy priesthood to hide successfully, notwithstanding an apostle of the Lord Jesus was editor of the Deseret News, and for fourteen years they stuck to the same lie that it was the Indians. Subsequent facts, at the J. D. Lee trial, demonstrated that there were fifty-four Mormon elders, every one holding a commission from God to baptize or cut a gentile's throat in the name of Jesus Christ. This organized band of ignorant fanatics are as much united now as they are full of the holy ghost and the spirit of the Lord. And the word of John Taylor to this peculiar people is all sufficient to-day, as Brigham Young's was then. Yes, his word would cause every man to take his knife and pistol, and by to-morrow night they would slay every man, his neighbor and their friends. This is not sensational writing but truth. I know an elder who has one hundred rounds of ammunition, and he has kept them for twenty-two years, expecting a call from the Lord daily to lay Zion's enemies low, and he has nothing he holds more sacred. I will put judge Black's closing paragraph here for Liberals to see, and then endorse if they choose—but I will never: "You are compelled to treat this offense as you treat others in the states and territories. That is, leave it to be dealt with by the powers that are ordained of God or by God himself, who will, in due time, become the minister of his justice." That sounds to me very much like Black's plea for the Christian slave owner of twenty-four years ago. If the Liberals and the constitutional party are willing to trust to Judge Black's God to right all the wrongs that are being introduced in America by aliens and enemies of liberty, then I am not a Liberal. Allow me a moment to explain the modus operandi of God and his Utah priesthood to create public opinion.

Two years ago last March a pamphlet appeared all over Utah signed A. Mormon. It was a criminal and malicious libel against all the non-Mormons of Utah. Its authors, of course, were the Nabobs of God's kingdom; neither author nor publisher dared to attach their names. In a few weeks all the Mormon church papers were filled with extracts from this anonymous work. In April many Mormon missionaries were sent to the states, and in a short time hundreds of silly editors were publishing these extracts against all gentiles in Utah. In May, 1882, a good sized pamphlet appeared from a New York publishing house signed by A. Gentile, an ex-United States official. I hav it, but not at hand; do not now remember the name of publisher—62 Vesey street, New York. It pretended to be a fair, unvarnished narration of Utah and its people. But, in fact, it was and is a church publication, containing all the lies published in March, 1881, by A. Mormon. Of course it might hav been an ex-United States official; for instance, ex-delegate Geo. Q. Cannon or J. H. Hart, ex-postmaster or justice of the peace. By the letters purporting to be from Mormon women showing how they loved the twin relic, etc., the author proved too much. He said he was only here a short time—in 1879—but relates a Mormon lie about a United States judge and a woman that was common gossip in 1861, when I came to Utah; and it was said then to hav taken place five or six years earlier. And that has always been the kind of stuff God and his priesthood hav fed to the gullible. It is good for such persons as Judge Black, the friend of monopoly, and the foe of liberty. But the friends of liberty and equality must not be fed on falsehood and sophistry, even if proffered in the deceptiv, priestly style that Judge Black put it before Congress. If the constitution is a revelation from Jehovah-god why did God select such pre-eminent Freethinkers as Franklin, Paine, and Jefferson to create all the woof and warp contained therein. If God made it, and all things being perfect, coming from the myth, why did fallible man hav to add fourteen amendments to God's perfect constitution. Every thinking man knows the constitution needs many more now, and every generation in the future will need to make amendments. The liberty of the present will be looked upon by our descendants as we look upon the horrid past. Notwithstanding Groate and Jerry Black are such sticklers for fundamental law, of constitutional morality!

I wish the time had arrived when all men would giv willingly to women every right man claims for himself, and still here in Utah the women, having the right to vote, are only a trap of the priests to fasten their chains. I do not personally object to any person on the earth worshiping or believing in Joss, Mumbo Jumbo, Jehovah, Comstock, or Brigham Young, or believing a black and white skunk is as good a god as any of them. I hav never heard any person in Utah object to the Mormons' right of religious belief. I do not think there are twenty persons in Utah who wish to deprive Mormons of their religious belief, by act of Congress or any other means, except by reason; the priesthood and Judge Black know this. My firm conviction is, there is a barrier between belief and practice. For instance, if God's peculiar people murder, lie, and steal in the name of their God, seduce in the name of Jesus Christ, is the crime any the less for repeating such words? If the constitution, as Judge Black implies, givs every party, or persons who organize, the right to define criminal acts as religion and religious beliefs, then I boldly state the constitution of the United States is an immoral document. But such is not the fact, in any sense, except in the addled pate of Black and the priesthood. Suppose I admit Judge Black, the world, and their endorsers are right—for a moment, to illustrate this point; suppose, again, six leading Christian prostitutes, from six principal cities, meet and organize a church or society: in a few years it comprises all the Christian magdalens of the Atlantic and Pacific states, forming a mighty ocean of vice, before which the Young Men's Christian Association would be as the morning dew before the sun. This association of Christian young ladies set up the pretext that it's their religious belief to follow and liv up to the vicious life they hav acquired (often through very godly men). Still the fact remains that they hav the constitutional right, according to Judge Black's argument, and it would be persecution and unconstitutional to attempt to reason with them or make any law respecting them!

There is one peculiar feature about this Utah Mormon dog, which I will mention. There were about fifty of them when they came to Utah thirty-five years ago; they were very poor and lean, with little hair and torn skins. Now they are rich and fat, thick-skinned, and hav a glossy coat, and these fifty hav absorbed and own more wealth than all the one hundred and twenty thousand Mormon community of dogs. You will see it is not a case of dog eat dog at all, but the big ones chawing up not only their own kind but everything in this country, both the land and water; and they want the little dogs, mineral and mines, and they will hav them if the Liberals and Judge Black will only help them to a state—then the Mormon problem will be solved at the mouth of the cannon, and every state will hav to furnish its proportion of darling sons, for Mormonism is one of those strange monstrosities that history tells us of that will never listen to truth or reason; by force and fraud, it will conquer or die.

Congress has the right to suppress any kingdom established in any territory in America. In fact, when any state shall seek to suppress the United States, then Congress has the right to suppress any church or kingdom that proclaims its intentions, as the Mormon hierarchy does, to destroy the republic, with the help of God. Suppose this Young Ladies' Christian Association, which believes it has the divine right to govern all other persons on the earth, starts an emigration fund and sends members of the society to all the countries of Europe and America to convert every young man and decoy every virtuous young lady possible, by falsehood and misrepresentation, to embrace and obey them in all things; that they had a country in America God had given them, and they had a government in America that was above the republic, above Congress, above all laws made by man; that they received their commands from a higher power than any powers on the earth. Then suppose all the Christian gamblers, cut-throats, thieves, pickpockets, etc., amalgamate and join with their sisters in vice upon the same pretext that it was their religious belief to rob and plunder. Suppose this organization had been in existence for fifty years and left its slimy trail in every place, and had acquired by fraud, deception, and blood the heart of America. Suppose thirty thousand American citizens settled, supposing they were in America and under the American flag, among the godly community of prostitutes, black legs, etc., and found every county and territorial office filled with this peculiar class of human beings. That they had a form of republicanism, but denied every right of man; this small minority of Americans make the true situation known at Washington, at least attempt to. Now will be the time for Judge Black to immortalize himself as an idiot. For to be consistent he must defend this mythical monstrosity of mine, for the principal involved is the same. Let him and the corrupt set of men who hav been running this republic of late years hav the glory. The people will awake from their sleep and tramp this octopus of the west, and the infamy of the east in the dust; and liberty be exalted and America made a secular government, in fact, not in theory, as it is and has ever been.

When Judge Black implies that this base, infamous political, priestly kingdom is granted their damnable claims; when he says they hav this right by the consent of the Federal government, he tells what he knows is a lie.

Before I close allow me to giv you a few extracts from the "Kingdom of God" by Orson Pratt, so that Judge Black will know what he has championed before the last Congress. It is just simply Comstockism in full blast. Kingdom of God, Part IV., page 16: "The almighty has decreed to send and break in pieces all earthly governments and break up the nations and send forth his [Mormon] messengers to make way for the establishment of his kingdom to which all others must yield, or be prostrated never more to rise. Awake then, O ye nations, for with you the Lord hath a controversy. His kingdom is now for the last time organized upon the earth. All nations are invited to become citizens. It is the only government of safety or refuge upon all the earth. It hath its seat in the everlasting mountains [Utah.] Its dreadful majesty shall strike terror to the hearts of all in the day of its power. None but the children of the kingdom are to escape its vengence."

Part III., page 7: "We may not always discern the end or result of doing as we are conmanded, but this is no excuse for disobedience," [this seems to be the only qualification of citizenship.]

Part II., page 1: "To become a legal citizen in the kingdom is of infinit importance; for salvation is only to be obtained in the kingdom of God. All other governments or kingdoms will be broken to pieces and destroyed."

Part I., page 1, reads as follows: "The kingdom of god is a theocracy. It is an order of government established by divine authority. It is the only legal government that can exist in any part of the universe. All other governments are illegal and unauthorized. God has the supreme right to govern by officers of his own appointment. Any people attempting to govern themselvs by laws of their own making, and by officers of their own appointment, are in direct rebellion against the kingdon of God."

From the time of Abraham and Lot the human race has been supporting and upholding illegal governments, instead of revealed laws from God. From that time to the present, empires, kingdoms, principalities, republics, and numerous other corrupt, illegal, unauthorized powers, hav multiplied in the four quarters of the globe, from the year one A.D. till 1848, when this was published. All hav been destitute of any legal government. All the emperors, kings, princes, presidents, lords, nobles, and rulers during that long darkness hav acted without authority; hence you will perceive that America and her institutions that are in opposition to Mormonism (that is, fifty millions of the Anglo-Saxon race in America) are traitors to Mormonism, and to the Mormon God. Your readers are quite familiar how godly priests serve traitors to their cause when opportunity offers.

I will just add that this Mormon publication proves to the satisfaction of every priestridden Mormon serf that all the officers appointed by the President, the Postmaster-General, or in the army or navy, are all illegal; that even President Arthur, the mayor of New York and every other city, even our Congress, etc., are all corrupt institutions of human beings, without divinity.

We hav numbers in our last legislature of Mormon priests who were appointed by Brigham Young over thirty years ago. All civil offices come by appointment from God in Utah; the election after appointment is only a farce to blind the country.

Hooper, Utah. EDWARD F. MUNN.

Just Liberalism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I was much pleased with your comments on the point taken by the Freidenker and Radical Review regarding the call for the convention at Rochester, for they were eminently correct and just. When I read what Geo. Schumm had said in the Review of June 16th, the impulse of the moment was to write him a friendly private epistle, giving what I then thought, and still think, were the opinions of many of his best friends regarding what we esteemed a blunder, if nothing more. Day after day I delayed writing, and what you penned was so pertinent to the matter in hand that procrastination on my part seemed profitable. In the last Review he again takes up the subject and persists that their course (the Freidenker's and Review's) is the right one. For one I was most anxious for the success of the Radical Review, believing it would fill a much desired need in the northwest. This, as well as personal reasons, make me desire that it be an exponent of "just Liberalism" in its broadest and best sense. Its editors, Emma and George, are capable, earnest workers, with a spirit of self-sacrifice rarely found. To know them is genuin satisfaction, for you feel assured, in intention at least, they hav the ring of the true metal. What can induce George to talk as he often does is a mystery, and this about a matter he confesses to me he knows so little about. This would be harmless did he not speak with such positiv assurance that his ism and its believers could work such wonders did they cut entirely loose from others who do not accept their "death-end-all" theory. Brother George should not be so sensitiv regarding the German imputation, for there is much truth in the fact that there still lingers in the European mind a small vestige of ancient barbarism not found in American Liberalism. I simply affirm what I hav found true from experience. It will not be charged against me that I echo the voice of a class, for I am an Englishman. On general principles this I find to be the truth: That American Liberals are more willing to accord to women political, social, and sexual rights than are Europeans, and I regret to state that while working to secure the election of a woman for county superintendent of schools, as a class the Germans were our and her most bitter opposers. After this lady had served a term of four years and was conceded on all hands to hav been the best official worker we ever had, and this concession was made as readily by our Greenback Germans as any others, they opposed her renomination on no other ground but that of sex. Go where we will, look where we may, this fact is patent, that the American thought as regards the treatment of the opposit sex, is more broad and just. That which holds true in regard to women is equally true as regards opinions. The grand work of the noble army of women in the Spiritualistic ranks, who dealt such heavy blows against the religious, political, and social shams, should make any one hesitate ere he objects to working with them in any convention that seeks to compass the largest liberty of thought and the best possible condition for human well being. It may be that the class of thinkers and workers to which George imagins he belongs, hav a monopoly on all the logic, and hav made the discovery as to the best and only exact method of correcting abuses and placing the "genus homo" on the sure foundation of present and ultimate happiness. Logic is not always truth any more than correct grammatical construction is always good sense. While we would, under no circumstances, decry science, we are conscious that scientists are but men, and very often under its name utter absurdities on a par with theological savans, that take others a good deal of time to explain away. The truth is simply this, mental arrogance is neither liberal or beneficial, and that phase of it that keeps the Materialist and Spiritualist apart in efforts for mental freedom and material prosperity, though as logical as undulterated Calvinism, has passed its era of usefulness as certainly as the conclusion of the Geneva theologian.

The assertion that ten earnest Materialists could accomplish more for truth and humanity than the whole convention at Rochester of mixed opinions, outdoes "Bombastes Furioso" in expression, and is about as true as any portion of Munchausen's literature. The other assumption is (in his own words), "Materialists so-called and Spiritualists regard this present life from very different points of view—the former class of thinkers necessarily attaching to it the utmost importance, and consequently straining their every fiber toward the accomplishment of life's highest perfection, while the latter necessarily regard their present existence as of passing value beside the transcendant importance of the spirit-life to come." It is not difficult to see that the holding of such views must in the end vitiate and take the very point from every reformatory movement aiming at the amelioration of human society and the perfection of mankind. It is seldom, indeed, that we are refreshed with so scholarly a piece of special pleading as this is, and yet our friend George will pardon me for declaring it neither true nor logical. That it is untrue is found in the fact that nowhere are Materialists, as a class, more ready or willing to work for human liberty and well-being in its broadest sense than are Spiritualists. Nowhere as a class are homes more true, human nature more self-sacrificing, and equal rights of the sexes more respected, among the former than the latter. Neither is it true that the conviction that earth-life is all of our conscious existence, and that the "death-ends-all" theory acts as a greater stimulus to happiness (reform) and virtue than does Spiritualism that teaches that this "is but a part of one stupendous whole." Vastly more likely is this narrow conception of life to beget the feeling that it matters but little whether we make little or no effort to right human wrongs, if what we see of human existence finds its commencement and extinction. The truth is, that it ever has so impressed the great mass of the cultured, as well as ignorant, multitude, and not until this hopeful element in our nature is obliterated, can or will it be otherwise.

It is illogical from the fact that it supposes an architect to care little or nothing for his foundation if his structure is to be a high and important one; whereas, if it is one story, he will encourage an immense amount of fiber-straining over the foundation. Those who believe that conscious life continues after they pass the point called death, are equally conscious that the superstructure of the true life needs the most secure, permanent, and perfect foundation. They also know that nought endures but truth and love; and to secure these no line of policy save that of justice will be successful. These cardinal truths are inspiring; they furnish a constant incentiv to earnest work for human redemption. I am aware that there are many grand souls who see otherwise, who are willing to toil day and night to make earth a veritable heaven by blotting out all the hells of ignorance, false pride, and vice in all their protean forms. These, however, are not of those that refuse to mingle with others who differ with them as to the nature of life, its extent, and the best method of working out practical reforms.

In conclusion, Brother George says: "But we maintain that American Liberalism has something still higher in view than the secularization of the state—this being only a means: the solution of sociological problems and the perfection of humanity here and now; and in these things the co-operation of Spiritualists would be altogether out of the question, Spiritualism being essentially inimical to the highest earthly interests of man." Verily, verily, a Daniel has come to judgment! How oracular! What wisdom in one so young in years, and so far from ripeness in experience! 'Tis best, perhaps, to let our friend hav his own way, to cease co-operating with him, to allow no taint of our weak mental or material influence to mar the importance of his work and those of his kin that will hav no affiliation whatever with such superstitious dupes as we are.

I hav been simple enough to believe that those of all honest mental shades of opinion that claim to be liberal, and Liberalists, could work together for secularization and that measure of human liberty of the press and speech that can tolerate the investigation of all subjects, habits, and customs that retard or aid humanity. That in diversity of honest thought we could find practical and progressiv unity; and that, first and foremost, there would be no antagonism as regards the perfect equality of the sexes. In this, as in some other things pertaining to reform, I hav been mistaken. In the place of this hoped-for broadness and generosity has been found the dogmatic and puritanic spirit of narrowness grafted on the Liberal stem, and their seeds planted in Liberal soil. These abnormal peculiarities thrive and prosper, acting as potent disintegrators of that which should assimilate and become a unit for true liberty and "just Liberalism," making the friends of freedom sad and the enemies of rational liberty merry and jubilant.

GEORGE LYNN.

A NORWICH, Conn. church is pastorless. Cause, dancing. Pastor objected to dancing at a church fair. Ladies geting up the fair indignant, Declared it wouldn't raise a cent unless the bowels of the cat drew out melody from the hair of the horse, while flying feet kept time. Ladies won. Pastor resigned. Lots of dancing. No preacher. Great change, though, from the Connecticut of Cotton Mather.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 28, 1883.

REMOVAL.

Owing to the disagreeableness and rapacity of our old landlord, we hav moved the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER a few doors down the street—to 33 Clinton Place, where we hav obtained quarters very similar to the ones previously occupied, but considerably better. The office is on the ground floor. We shall be glad to welcome our friends here at any time during the next four years, as we hav obtained a lease for that length of time.

Labor and Capital.

The business portion of the cities is at present considering the strike on the part of the Western Union Telegraph employees for more wages. The case stands about like this: For years the Western Union company has been striving to establish a monopoly in the telegraph business, and it has virtually succeeded. Several times it has absorbed smaller companies, and each time it has swallowed a rival it has watered its stock. The last "watering" was from forty millions of dollars to eighty millions. All these years the company has been increasing its business it has also been periodically lowering the wages of its operators, until a point has been reached where forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and organized resistance is the only remedy.

The demands of the operators are reasonable. They hav been averaging only from $10 to $14 per week, and certainly no one can liv in a city on less, and should hav much more to liv comfortably. The strikers are orderly and quiet, hav taken a pledge to abstain from intoxicating drinks during the progress of the strike, and altogether behave like earnest, honest men. One of the demands of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers, by which name their organization is known, is that women shall hav equal pay for equal work. This position is generous and sound, and does great credit to them as men. Perfect equality for the sexes is a sentiment oftener heard from Infidel lips than from trades unions.

Public sentiment is almost wholly with the employees, and this fact should be taken to heart, not only by the Western Union Telegraph company, but by the managers of all monopolies. There is a constantly strengthening opinion that monopolies are taking the place in this country of the landlords in England, and, like them, eating up everything the laborer can produce, leaving him the barest living. Take the Western Union Telegraph company as an instance. Its plant can be reproduced for forty millions, and that is all the capital stock it should pay dividends upon. But the stock has been watered up to eighty millions, and seven per cent is paid upon that enormous amount. To pay this dishonest dividend the wage-workers of the company are ground down to the lowest possible salaries. The elevated railroad in this city is another monstrous fraud. Its cost was thirteen millions, yet it pays dividends on thirty-three millious. The difference between the thirteen and thirty-three millions is all "water"—that is, stock issued to previous stockholders for almost nothing. To pay dividends on this extra twenty millions the company is obliged to charge ten cents during most of the hours of the day, thus robbing the people of five cents every time they ride upon the road. For it has been shown that an honestly constructed road could be maintained, and good dividends paid, upon five-cent fares. There is hardly a railroad in the country that has not been subjected to this watering process in its stock. Besides this, the public lands hav been grabbed for their benefit, and actual settlers, instead of finding free lands, are obliged to pay from two to ten dollars an acre for good land.

Other corporations are no less grasping. The Standard Oil Company has been shown to be a voracious monopoly, ruining every competitor by underselling, until now everyone who uses a spoonful of petroleum pays tribute to the company. Matches, the commonest article of household consumption, cost about three times what they should because one company controls the trade. All the way through the business of to-day we encounter nothing but monopolistic corporations. The producers of the world get but a bare living, while the capitalists get everything. The farmers of the West are victims with the wage-workers of these insatiable corporations. Corners in wheat, corn, oats, the staple products of the country, are common. Prices are forced up and down to suit the gamblers of the Produce Exchange in Chicago and this city.

This condition of things is very serious, and is emphasized to great prominence by the strike of several thousand telegraph operators, who are certainly no fanatics. It simply indicates that the capitalists and corporations, having ground ordinary unskilled labor down to the lowest living point, are endeavoring to do the same with skilled and intelligent labor. The tide has reached further up—that is all. The price of labor is regulated by the law of supply and demand. If there be enough telegraph operators in this country or in Europe sufficiently hard up to accept the wages offered by the company, the strike will fail. If not, the workmen will temporarily succeed. But the conditions that produced it will still remain, and the sore will be reopened whenever the company feel strong enough to succeed.

There are temporary and there are permanent remedies for this state of things. But the people do not know them, or are not wise enough to apply them. The first need is education, and the second is honest leaders. The church is directly responsible for much of the misery that exists, for she teaches obedience to the powers that be and discourages efforts to improve. "God made some to be poor and some to be rich; some to rule and the rest to be ruled," is her cry. "Thank God for what you hav and be content. If he had designed you for better things you would hav them." The Protestant church is largely supported by the wealthy individuals who compose these corporations, while the Catholic derives the most of its revenue from the poorer people, who hav been already robbed by their employers. The aim of both churches is naturally to keep the people ignorant of their low condition, to make them content as they are. Wealth and power are always conservativ. Poverty alone revolts. The working people are a mighty force, capable of wresting from the church and corporations all their wealth and power. Without intelligence and honest leaders, however, they can accomplish nothing. But unless their condition is changed within ten years this country will be ruled by corporations and the people will be practically slaves, or—the French Revolution will be repeated.

The Ministerial Hegira.

Every outgoing ocean steamer carries to Europe an assorted lot of reverends, from the country parson to the noted city divine. We do not blame them for seeking to escape the heat of this country, but it seems to us if their professions of great solicitude are genuin, they must do so at a great sacrifice of souls to the devil. If they really believe that without the Christian scheme of salvation the whole world is lost, it is their duty to stand the heat and labor without ceasing to prevent this dire catastrophe.

The devil, we are informed by religious literature, never slumbers. He is a wolf, and the pastors are the shepherds that keep him at bay. If the shepherds desert their flocks, who is to blame for the havoc made? Certainly not the wolf, for God created him especially to devour the lambs. Then the pastors must be at fault, or else God who created this state of affairs.

If the crop of heretics shall become larger because of the absence of these pastors, and the constant presence of Infidel ideas, will the preachers allow the doctrin of vicarious atonement to be in force at the judgment seat, and will they take the consequence of the sin of heresy for these people, or will they shirk out of it. Surely if they open the gate for the wolf they ought to pay the damage he does.

But if the world should wag along just as it does when they are here, may not the people conclude that they could dispense permanently with these professional soul-savers, as well as temporarily? It behooves the preachers to look after their situations and see that they are secure before starting on their summer vacations. Infidelity is rampant, backsliders are numerous, and the literature of science and Freethought is circulating wider every day. Yet these men of God go calmly on to Europe as though the devil were not waiting to jump into the pulpit as soon as they are gone. Can it be possible they do not care if he does? It looks that way. Either they do not believe in him, or are willing his works should spread. If the first, they are not orthodox; if the second, they are not faithful shepherds, and should resign.

More Charities.

Since compiling our list of Infidel charities we hav received from L. M. Hastings, of Osceola, Iowa, the two following clippings. If any of our Boston friends can furnish the details we shall be very happy to publish them:

"John Redman, of Boston, an Infidel, left $400,000 to the Massachusetts general hospital for free beds."

"Peter H. Brigham, of Boston, an Infidel, gave $3,000,000 to establish a hospital for the sick poor."

There has also come to hand the following rather irate note:

WAUMANDEE, WIS., July 18, 283.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 14th, I see that Geo. Merkle wants to know about the charitable works of Infidels.

You hav brought a long list of those Infidel philanthropic works, but, please, why hav you not mentioned the German-English Teachers' Seminary of Milwaukee, which has a capital of $50,000? Did you not know of it, or did you not want to know?

It has been brought up entirely by Infidels of this country. If you hav a TRUTH SEEKER you ought to publish the truth.

Yours truly, WM. ULRICK.

To Mr. Ulrick we would say we were not aware of the existence of the German-English Teachers' Seminary till we received his letter, and we hasten to thank him for adding to our knowledge. There are a great many German Freethought benevolent societies in this country, we understand, but unfortunately detailed information regarding them is not at hand. Any of our Liberal German friends who are possessed of this knowledge will do the Liberals of the country a favor by letting us hear from them.

We should also like to hav every one who knows of donations to charitable and humane purposes on the part of outspoken Freethinkers, acquaint us with the facts in each case. We will thankfully publish them.

Help Spread the Light.

It is acknowledged by all that the best way to spread Liberal principles is by papers, tracts, and books. Every issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a good missionary document, and every Freethought book sold is a silent pleader and propagator of the truth. There are thousands of Freethinkers all over the country whom we do not know and who do not know this paper. But our friends know them, and we ask such as are willing to spend a few moments for the good of Liberalism to send us their names and addresses, that we may mail them copies of the paper. We are willing to furnish the copies necessary for this purpose and mail them, as we hope a few extra subscribers may thereby be obtained, which will make the pecuniary outlay square. But the main object is to spread the knowledge of Liberalism, its aims and objects, what we think and why we think it. We would like every one to know that the Christian faith is a rope of sand, that the churches are taking the money of the people without giving any return. It is the duty of all Freethinkers to let their neighbors know that the fires of hell hav been quenched.

Many Liberals say they hav no time to devote to missionary work, and do not like to argue with their church acquaintances. Very well, send us the names and let THE TRUTH SEEKER argue the case. Where a man is Liberally inclined—and not dead to all sense and reason—we hope and think THE TRUTH SEEKER will bring him clear out of the fog.

To stimulate our friends in this work we make the following offer, only asking that when the sender has read the pamphlets he shall hand them around that others may be benefited.

To every one sending us the names and addresses of twenty-five independent men and women who do not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who do their own thinking, we will send one copy of either of the below-named twenty-five cent books:

"Influence of Christianity upon Civilization," by B. F. Underwood.

"Advancement of Science." The Inaugural Address of Prof. John Tyndall, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

"Chronicles of Simon Christianus." His manifold and wonderful adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. Fidel.

"Religion not History." An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F.W. Newman, of the London University.

"The Besant-Hatchard Debate." A two nights' debate between Mrs. Annie Besant and Rev. A. Hatchard on "Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World."

"The Clergyman's Victims." A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball.

"Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahweh or Jehovah," shown to be the worship of the Devil.

"Gottlieb: His Life." A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written by S. P. Putnam.

"Jesus Christ." His Life, Miracles, Deity, Teachings, and Imperfections. By W. S. Bell.

"Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier," a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings.

"Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, The Book of the Generation of Jesus." First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up.

To those who do not know twenty-five persons whom a perusal of THE TRUTH SEEKER would be likely to benefit, but who can send a list of ten names, we will send either of the following by D. M. Bennett:

"Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind."

"The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers."

"The Gods of Superstition."

"The Great Religions of the World."

"Jesus Christ." Considered as an Infidel.

"An Hour with the Devil."

"Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds."

"Honest Questions and Honest Answers."

Or either of the following by Underwood:

"What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity."

"Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency."

"Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint."

"Paine the Political and Religious Reformer."

"Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs."

"Materialism and Crime."

"Will the Coming Man Worship God?"

"Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity."

This is a chance to enlighten a large body of people, to help THE TRUTH SEEKER, and to get good books to circulate by only a few moments' work. We hope the responses will be many.

The Monument Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1,028 82	Hattie Baldwin,	1 00
Robert Swail,	1 00	H. C. Grece,	50
Leroy Dutton,	1 00	O. Child,	2 50
Flora Dutton,	1 00	Wm. F. Barre,	1 00
Annie L. Baldwin,	1 00	H. Merrick,	50
		H. G. Maltby,	2 50
		Total, - -	$1,040.82.

Notes.

A LIBERAL League has been formed at Dunkirk, N. Y., with Edwin Ring as president and J. J. Shearman, secretary and treasurer. The officers hope to enroll one hundred names as members by next December.

THE Speaker of the House of Commons having notified Mr. Bradlaugh that he should use force to exclude him from the precincts of the house, Mr. Bradlaugh has in turn notified the speaker that he shall "endeavor to obtain an injunction from the High Court of Justice to restrain you" [the speaker] "from committing such a breach of the peace;" which is certainly a mild way of thwarting the iniquitous Christian bigots. But after the prostitution of justice we hav seen in the imprisonment of the Freethinker editor, publisher, and seller, very little can be hoped for from English courts. Mr. Bradlaugh is doomed to be kept out of Parliament till a greater revolution in public sentiment is worked than now appears in England, or until he turns Christian. The first is but a matter of time; the latter is impossible.

IF any evidence were wanting of the degradation which Christian superstition brings, it could be found in the following story told of Dom Bosco, an Italian Benedictine, by his biographer in a pamphlet which has just appeared in Rome:

"It is a well-known fact, which, as an eye-witness, I am able to state under oath, that a young man, formerly a boy in one of Dom Bosco's houses of refuge, being two years ago at the point of death in Rome, the family telegraphed at once for the thaumaturgus, then in Florence. The Benedictine hurried to Rome, but failed to arrive in time. Charles, the young man, had departed—not for a better life, though, for it was publicly known that he had been dissipated, and his family were consequently afraid of his being lost for eternity. 'Let me alone with him,' said Dom Bosco, and, kneeling at the foot of the dead boy's bed, he prayed fervently for a few minutes; then, rising to his feet, exclaimed in a commanding tone: 'Wake up, Charles!' And Charles immediately sat upright in his bed. The good priest heard his confession, gave him absolution, and, calling in the awe-stricken friends and family, administered to him the last sacraments of the church with much unction and solemnity. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the Benedictine kissed the young man and said: 'Charles, now that you are in a state of grace, what will you do—remain here or go to heaven?' 'To heaven,' answered the one from the dead, and suddenly he fell back again to his winding sheet and returned to the unknown world. The day after he was buried."

Such a story needs no comment.

THIS is the way the Sun writes of the cholera epidemic in Egypt:

"Who does not shudder at the simple statement of the fact that the number of deaths from cholera in the city of Cairo increased from one on Sunday to one hundred and forty on Thursday? Probably these figures do not reveal the whole truth. A few days ago it was announced that in case attempts to isolate the houses in which cholera had appeared failed, the disease would be permitted to run its course in Cairo. But already the disease is running its course, and the dreadful spectacle of a city of 350,000 souls lying at the mercy of a sweeping epidemic is before the eyes of the world. No wonder foreigners are tumbling out of Egypt in hot haste; no wonder scowling faces are turned toward England when the neglect of sanitary precautions by her agents in the Nile land is mentioned."

If there is a good and omnipotent God ordering the affairs of this world, why does he not stay this horrible scourge? Is it because he is too busy watching sparrows and numbering hairs, or does he let these wretched people die because they are not Christians?

C. W. STOWE, who has recently started the Thinker at McPherson, Kan., has long beer a friend of Mr. Bennett's and THE TRUTH SEEKER. In his last issue he givs us these kind words:

"THE TRUTH SEEKER is on our exchange list, and is the Freethinkers' standby. THE TRUTH SEEKER is the leading Freethought paper of the world—the largest and best. It is to the Liberal element just what the Bible is to the Christian. We hav been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER many years, and always read it with 'solid comfort.' It contains more common sense to the square inch than all the church papers in the world. The subscription price has been lowered from $3.00 to $2.50 per annum. D. M. Bennett, the founder, has left a name that will adorn the pages of history through all time. Let us revere his name. THE TRUTH SEEKER still maintains its hold upon the hearts of its patrons under its new management. We know of no one who could hav filled the editorial chair of the dear old TRUTH SEEKER so well as Mr. Macdonald. Let's stand by him, boys."

Mr. Stowe also takes occasion to correct our statement that the Thinker is a local paper. It is intended and fitted for circulation wherever there is a Liberal.

THE Independent (Congregational) has been waiting a long time to get square with us for picking it up on the lie Cook told about the death of Dr. Beard, and it thinks it sees an opportunity in a little slip in the Chicago statistics. But the error is the Chicago paper's, not ours, and we are obliged to the Independent for calling our attention to the same. The proportion should hav been of churches, not church-members. It makes but a little difference in the relativ piety of Chicago, and no difference whatever in the inference drawn therefrom, which is that Protestant Christianity is growing beautifully small in this country. We are willing the Independent should hav what consolation it can derive from this slip of the Chicago paper's, for with hardly a day passing that some prominent minister is not tried for heresy, with the very wellsprings of orthodoxy breaking up, and the whole Christian host changing front and forswearing their most vital tenets; with a rebellion in the college hitherto the citadel of unadulterated orthodoxy; with the laity of most of the churches in open revolt against the puritanism of the pulpit, we think THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Freethinkers hav no cause of complaint at the progress made toward religious freedom in the past five or ten years. If it shall go on for twenty-five years at the same rate, there will practically be but two parties to religion in this country—the Freethinkers and the Catholics. The mossbacks of Protestantism will return to the maternal harlot, and the progressivs will join our ranks. And then will come the "tug of war" to see whether our free institutions shall be maintained, or the United States be swamped by Romanism. At that time, we hav no doubt, the Independent will be found fighting squarely for Rationalism.

A QUESTION that is likely to occupy the religious press for some time is whether God rides upon the storms and controls them, and, if so, whether he is responsible for the damage done to the churches out West by the tornado of the 13th. There is biblical authority for the statement that God is immediately interested in all that occurs. This being the case, the query irresistibly arises why he allowed so much property devoted to his use to be destroyed. At Louisiana, Mo., not only the colored Methodists' church, but their white brethren's, were knocked completely out of time by the wind, and the devotees that knelt in them will know them no more as sanctuaries. At Brookfield the convent school building had the roof blown off. At Trenton the Presbyterians suffered a total loss of their joss-house, as did their equally unfortunate co-creedists at Benton and Stanberry. In the latter place the Catholics and Baptists were fellow-sufferers, having their altars demolished. In Oakdale, Ill., the roof of the Presbyterian church was lifted off, causing a damage of several hundreds of dollars. In Atchison, Kan., the Methodists again incurred the wrath, and their church was literally scattered in the wake of the tornado. At Valley Falls both Baptists and Methodists lost an edifice. A negro church in St. Louis, of the Methodist kind, was also sent whirling by the wind. The Christian college at Columbia, that state, was unroofed, and the Christian church had one wall blown down. In Alton the Catholic and Methodist buildings were totally destroyed. These are but a few of the casualties. That they will grieve our religious contemporaries we hav no doubt. But we hope they will not fear to boldly grasp one or the other of the horns thus presented to them, and tell us whether the Lord is angry at his churches or is powerless before a Western cyclone.

WE conclude this week Mr. Munn's paper on "Mormon Wickedness." It seems to hav been written partly to reply to an editorial last winter on the "Mormon Problem." It is but fair to him to say it has been on hand a long time. We do not see, however, that he controverts or overthrows any position taken by ourselvs, which was that the United States hav no right to disfranchise the Mormons because they are Mormons, or because they indulge in an unusual and reprehensible number of wives. Their religion is their own private business, as are their domestic relations, the latter subject only to the laws governing the territory of Utah. The crimes they hav committed do, however, call, and hav for years called, loudly for some stringent government measure which shall punish equally and justly Mormon and gentile who transgresses. That many Mormons hav been guilty hideous crimes and escaped punishment through the influ ence of the church is indisputable. That the Mormon hierarchy is a constant menace to our free form of government is equally indisputable. But so is the Catholic hierarchy, and so is the handful of God-in-the-Constitution bigots. But any one who would deprive the Catholic traitors or the Protestant plotters of their votes would be committing a gross outrage on their natural and vested rights, and subverting our republican form of government. If a Mormon or Catholic commits a murder, no church power should be allowed to shield him from retribution. If the Mormon or Catholic hierarchies perpetrate an overt act, or refuse to recognize or own allegiance to our government, they should be put down, though it took every dollar in the treasury and every soldier in the army. The federal courts hav jurisdiction in Utah, and their judges are not Mormons. The Supreme Court of the United States is composed of Freethinkers. Surely justice can be done the wronged without recourse to a religious crusade, which is no more justifiable against them than against the Catholics who put their allegiance to the pope above that to the government which protects them in the free exercise of their religion. If Mr. Munn lived in a Jesuit community he would as vigorously denounce them as he now does the Mormons. The two hierarchies are very similar, and what the Mormon elders do openly in the matter of wives the Catholic priests are accused—and rightly—of practicing in secret. The Mormon elders support their "sealed" women, but the priests debauch other men's wives and liv in vicious concubinage with the convent sisters. Do unto Mormons as you would do unto others. This is the right and common sense method. If they murder, hang them. If they intimidate voters and practice repeating at the polls, imprison them. If their priests shield the criminals, punish the priests. If their church defies the United States government, demolish the church. But do not put war measures in force against them until war has been declared!

THE Methodist organs will be put in a considerable flutter, we expect, by the announcement Secretary Green makes in this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER that a Methodist Episcopal clergyman has accepted the challenge given by the New York State Freethinkers' Association to present at the coming convention at Rochester some reasons why the church should longer continue to obstruct the pathway of the world to progress. And the Presbyterian papers will, if we are not mistaken, make the ears tingle of that Murray Hill pastor who has had the temerity to indorse a Methodist. The papers of these two sects hav always suppressed, so far as they could, the fact that there is a solitary individual in the world who disbelieves in the Christian religion. By reading them one would naturally conclude that all the world worshiped a Jew and his mother; that the sun only shone on the Christians and a few wicked heathens who were fast being converted. If they ever mention a doubter of Christian mysteries they hold their breath, and pray God to forgiv them for their sin, and proceed to describe the Infidel as a person on whom the horns are plainly discernible. This recognition of the Infidel convention will make as big a smoke and smudge in the Methodist and Presbyterian ranks as would a pail of cold water thrown on the glowing coals of their hell. Poor Mr. Buckley, of the Advocate, will hav a "conniption fit," as the old women of his church would say, and the minister who has had the courage to accept the challenge will be soundly whipped, like a little child who had strayed too near the lion's den. However, the Freethinkers will welcome the venturesome stranger and listen respectfully to whatever reason he may giv for the faith that is in him. His presence may perhaps attract some Christians who would not otherwise attend, and if they can be induced to remain to hear the other side, some new recruits to our ranks may be confidently looked for. We suggest that Charles Watts be appointed the David to this Goliath and that the convention be treated to at least one evening's debate. If this preacher should be found a foeman worthy of Mr. Watts's steel we guarantee an entertainment hard to pass.

P. S.—Since writing the above we hav received a copy of the Binghamton, N. Y., Daily Republican, containing the following. Although not a professional religious paper, it comes to the rescue of the faithful much like one. We hav not the slightest doubt that Mr. Mitchell will be "tripped up with conundrums," but we resent the imputation that he could be in better company. At any rate it affords us the opportunity of saying, We told you so! with unlooked-for promptness: "Rev. Thomas Mitchell, of Brooklyn, has 'put his foot in it,' by consenting to represent Evangelical Christianity at the Freethinking convention. It will be a very undignified place for his dignified cloth, and he will be tripped up with conundrums he cannot undertake to answer without making a fool of himself. He can serve God better by keeping in good company, and behaving himself like a Christian."

The New Missouri Liquor Law.

From Grip, of St. Joseph.

Last Sunday was the first noticeable attempt to observe or enforce the law closing saloons in St. Joseph on the Sabbath. For several days the previous week the saloon keepers of the city were in consultation on the subject of closing Sundays, and it was generally agreed to close. A few however paid no attention to the law, kept open just the same, and were consequently arrested at early candlelight.

This whisky business and Sunday law is a knotty question, that is it has been pounded at for a long time, and while it may hav been cracked, and has returned the compliment in many instances where people hav monkied with it without gloves, the man or woman is yet to appear on the surface, who has discovered the true method of handling it as it should be handled.

For the past two or three years, the country has been flooded with cranky lecturers, male and female, some apparently intelligent, and others not so much so. They hav battered away at the saloon, the drug-store, the grocery and the inn, most of them knowing about as much of what they were talking about as the average soldier does of Indian fighting.

We hav always felt at home when we strike the whisky question, because we don't know a thing on earth about it, and everybody else is in the same boat. Those things which nobody knows anything about are just meat for the newspapers, and its a sleek thing for us there are a few such subjects. Just imagin the perdicament so many Kansas newspaper men would be in now, while there isn't anything to write about but prohibition, if the subject was not one of this kind. Some very able arguments are offered by our Kansas brothers, hence we feel like tackling the subject with impunity and a sharp pencil.

It is perhaps a lamentable thought that among the few saloons kept open here last Sunday, were those owned by two of our city councilmen. They hav as much right to run saloons as anybody, but as the law forbids the sale of liquors on Sunday, it would seem that officers should set an example which other people could follow without fear of punishment.

There are many different ideas as to what kind of laws shall best regulate this traffic. Grip is no fanatic, does not patronize saloons, but it is fair enough to contend that while the sale of liquor is made legitimate by the laws of the country, people will violate the provisions of the whisky law the same as other statutes. There is a law, we believe, in every state forbidding people from laboring on the Sabbath day. Yet the minister, who is always first to denounce the saloon, performs all his public work on the Sabbath day, some of them working very hard too, with but little or no effect. The church choirs perform their labors on the Sabbath, from which they derive revenue to support themselves during the week. The ordinary laboring man who toils all the week, looks forward to Sunday as his holiday and day of worship. There are so many kinds of worship in this day it would seem but fair to allow every one the right to his own choice. The minister and musician in the church pay no tax or license, and those who look upon the saloon as their house of worship, think it a little one-sided. When we reach the ever-green shore the mystery may be solved, but who can tell here who has hold of the right string? Should it turn out that the followers of the Bible are wrong and the other fellows are right, but hav been the persecuted christians on earth, the astonishment will be greater than any of we impartial plodders can imagine. There is a large percentage of the people on this earth who believe it is no more sin to take a glass of beer when they feel it is necessary than it is for church members to pass the wine through a congregation on the Sabbath day. There is one thing apparent: Those who drink beer call it beer (except perhaps in Kansas where it is termed for convenience "sea-foam,") while the church members everywhere lie about their wine, calling it the "blood of Christ." If wine can be drank in church as the "blood of Christ," why not drink beer in Kansas as "sea-foam." The sea is nearer to many than Christ, and sea-foam can be transported at this day very reasonable, while the channels of commerce with the country to which "our savior" was transmitted years ago by the Jews, has not yet been opened. Should the authorities undertake to enforce the Sunday law against the ministers, such a howl would go up from among the church spires as was never heard from any other class. We do not doubt the sincerity of many professed Christians, neither do we undertake to say their theory is incorrect, but there is always more than one side to a question and at this day of Freethought and speech, it is well enough to be fair and consistent with each other. There is much said and done by the churches to break up the saloons and the use of whiskies, wines and beer, yet the church membership is not small which indulge the use of such fluids, and the quarterly introduction of wine in many congregations, though it is labeled "blood," has a strong tendency to cause those who drink it as "wine," to think lightly of the motivs of their opponents. As Grip neither uses saloons, whisky, wine, beer, or churches, it is but fair to accord it the semblance of sincerity, and the place of an impartialist. We don't think anybody ought to drink, and in our meek way discourage it, but those who think they can curse, drive or force sinners to heaven are only wasting their time. Persuasion and education in the right way is the only cure for intemperance. There is no doubt but intemperance in many things is practiced in and out of the churches, the legislatures, and the courts, and the keynote to its safety-valve is yet lost.

An Appeal to Intuition.

From the Buffalo Sunday News.

Editor Sunday News: In Father Lambert's notes he quotes Ingersoll as follows, in chapter 3d: "To put a God back of the universe compels us to admit that there was a time when nothing existed but the God. . . That this God lived from eternity in infinit vacuum and absolute idleness. . . The mind of every thoughtful man is forced to one of two conclusions, either that the universe is self-existent, or that it was created by a self-existent being. To my mind there is far more difficulty in the second hypothesis than the first."

In reply to the comments on the above, the highest generalization by both inductiv and deductiv reasoning in science establishes the conservation and correlation or indestructibility of matter and force. This conclusion once reached, we hav no occasion, or place for a God. Matter exists and is everywhere in motion. Gravity is a force, coeval and coextensiv with matter. To admit the existence of a God is to become a disciple of theology. Our reasoning must be purely deductiv, which though logically correct proves nothing. We know we exist, and by intuition know that no being can be produced from nothing. It is evident that from all eternity there has been something, since we exist and are actuated by a force called mind and we are surrounded by matter in motion. So this eternal matter is all-powerful and forceful. Soul, spirit, magnetism, electricity and mentality are mere modes of motion. Perception is a mode of force, but it cannot be existent apart from matter. A soul can no more exist without a body than a person can hav an appetite without a stomach. Father Lambert looks on attempting to investigate Deity as something awful, while he claims to worship three infinit Gods and one omniscient devil. He says God is pure act, the source of all activity and life. If so, the tens of millions of sun systems in our universe, all separated by billions of miles from each other, are so much at variance from what his inspired prophets left on record that we are forced to believe the inspiration was not genuin, and that Moses was mistaken when he was two days with God, and only got instructions how to cut a priest's coat and cook a kid. If a God exists he could convince all men of the fact. Then unbelief would be impossible. Not doing so proves one of three things:

First, that he is not good in not proving his existence and attributes; second, that he is not all wise or all-powerful; third, that he cannot hav memory, reason or perception. Memory is of the past; reason for the future, but to God immutable there can be no past, no future. The words past, present, and future imply change. Intelligence must be accompanied by perception, memory, and reason. God can never perceive. The act of perception results in the obtaining a new idea, but being omniscient his ideas must be eternally the same. Perception and sensation are one. Every fresh sensation involves a change in mental or physical condition. God, if immutable, cannot change; if he be infinit there can be nothing external to him, and sensation must be impossible, yet without perception where is intelligence?

ALEX. COLE.

A Pessimistic Wail from the Friend of a Would-be Suicide.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The encroachments upon the individual rights and liberties of American citizens by this priestridden people is awfully despotic. A penalty of $250 is imposed upon the person of every unsuccessful attempt to get out of this rascally world by suicide! What, sir, is it come to this, that a man cannot call his soul his own? To deny him the right of calmly leaving a world replete with every species of contention, of elementary and physical trouble, hypocrisy, knavery, overreaching priestcraft, and superstition! I can look upon this enactment but as a barbarous outrage.

Now what is the animus of this inhuman barbarity? Why, sir, the prevailing tyranny and increasing superstition of immortality! An ignorant, venerable monkish dogma; a belief in a heaven of eternal bliss, and a hell of eternal torment! and this in the face of all the facts of science, and the profound researches of such astute philosophers and thinkers as F. N. Albright, T. Winter, Peter G. Peabody, Mrs. Slenker, and others.

Permit me, however, to differ with the last named heroin, when she avers this is a "beautiful world." Speaking of death, she says: "Man feels he has lived a happy and useful life, enjoyed his days in all the fulness and completeness possible for him, and is willing to step down and out when the great fiat comes and makes room for those to follow after and succeed him. Our only future is the future of our race."

Now I can indorse all that the lady says, except its being a beautiful world.

Yes, sir, I admit a "beautiful world" to these happy few who hav the fortune to be born with health, wealth, happy, harmonious organizations, and harmonious surroundings, who hav never felt the acute pangs of parental mortuary separations, etc.; but to one born to poverty, to disease, to every species of physical and mental misery in its innumerable hideous aspects, viz, cancers, natal deformities, blindness, palsies, deafness, and leprosies—of such unfortunate wretches, I would ask, Is this life worth living? Is it not a place of torment? Is it not a veritable hell? In fact, to all but cowards and idiots, is not this world a hell of a place?

For contention, it is nothing but "dog bite dog" from the cradle to the grave. It takes but little observation to notice these facts.

The old maxim holds good, "eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." This being the positiv condition of our existences in spite of all theologic financial scheming and dreaming, I ask, is it not a shameful trenching on one's liberty, to deprive agonized humanity of the right (if he so chooses) of rushing from this unbearable existence?

Over two hundred yearly suicides in the precincts of New York city alone, is surely evidence sufficient of the vast inequality of pain and pleasure. The vast inequality of wealth and comfort, to the tens of thousands of poverty-stricken wretches, groaning helplessly with every species of suffering, physical and mental, is surely appalling; and then to deprive the poor wretch the sacred privilege of an eternal sleep, is the basest of all tyranny. "A beautiful world" indeed!

Rascality seems rampant. If the priests had the insane honesty of fanaticism to back up their assumptions, they were more excusable, but while they flaunt in "scarlet and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day," they not infrequently belie their own teachings, when detected in their hypocrisy by committing self destruction—daring the torments of their imaginary hell.

We are sagely told by Mrs. Slenker that the world is improving in condition and that it behoves us to set a good moral example to coming generations, and let this expectation of the world's future bliss be our highest enjoyment. Now this is a species of logic which indicates that the lady has not shaken off the prospectiv allurements of priestcraft. It is viewing life in its easiest aspect, when we know from science and the arguments of the before named gentlemen, and her own contributions to your Liberal paper, that man is only an advanced species of animal.

Now I would ask, in the name of common sense, why should we care for the poor wretches who may be doomed to follow us in the same tantalizing course of existence that we hav experienced? Man is an intensely selfish being—must be so. Livs for himself alone—for his own personal gratification—here and now. Hence, let me say, let future generations take care of themselvs, and the agonized wretch be thankful when his time comes. Let the fittest survive.

These remarks were called forth by an unsuccessful attempt of one of my friends to commit suicide by drowning who now has to suffer the above mentioned penalty by languishment of one year's imprisonment as a criminal. With respect to your contributor, he also is suffering under the slow operation of a gnawing throat cancer which must terminate fatally. In conclusion, let him say that although your TRUTH SEEKER may lose an interested reader of many years, yet, in the language of scripture, "you may seek me, but ye shall not find, and where I am ye cannot come."

C. O.

The Gradual Cooling of the Earth.

In a "Treatise on Natural Philosophy," by Professors Sir W. Thomson and P. G. Tait, Sir W. Thomson, speaking of an opinion advanced by Sir Charles Lyell, respecting the possible maintenance of the earth's heat without change throughout countless ages, used words which, says Knowledge, may be applied without change of a word to the stupendous theory advanced by Sir C. Siemens not so very long since—such an idea of a practically endless cycle "violates the principles of natural philosophy in exactly the same manner, and to the same degree, as to believe that a clock constructed with a self-winding movement may fulfil the expectations of its inventor by going forever." The earth is necessarily cooling from century to century; her volcanic energies are certainly diminishing, as certainly, to use an illustration of Sir W. Thomson's, as the quantity of gunpowder in a "monitor" is diminishing when hour after hour she is seen to discharge shot and shell, whether at a nearly equable rate or not, without receiving fresh supplies of ammunition.

Letters from Friends.

POTTSVILLE, July 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: A Christian boy in this borough was quarreling with a Jewish one. The mother of the former called in her son to prevent him from fighting. "Mother," he said, "if you do not want me to fight, let me go out and call him a Jew!"

SHENANDOAA, July 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: There is a great talk among these Spiritualists about which there is no proof. 1. What loss would it be if I never was born? 2. When I am dead and unconscious of all thought, what profit is it for to come again without the knowledge of what I hav been. They may as well say he had been from eternity as to say he is coming again. It is an easy way of trying to get up a new fraud when they see the old one losing its grip. You may make an article of this if you think it worth while. That's the substance of an unbeliever. REES DAVIS.

MERIDEN, July 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I want to refer Messrs. Andrews, Putnam, Thomas Winter, and A. Noe to the third volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World" for a correct definition of science as given by Coot Hoomi's letter to Mr. Sinnett on page 67 and Madam Blavatsky's on page 13, etc. My ideas are expressed on pages 72 and 73. The era of blind faith has gone and we hav in its place fraud and hypocrisy. Education with us is used to rob the people in most cases. Now Brother Andrews proposes to teach us how to count three. Is it by Coot Hoomi's definition of science? If so, I want to learn how to count and multiply scientifically. Yours, S. D. GREER.

TROY, July 17, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Many thanks for inserting my letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 16th, page 380. I wish some one would answer my query. Hav read J. J. Haviland's "Spiritual and Material" on page 444 of THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 14th. He says science no longer disputes psychological force, but Materialists assert Spiritual force a fraud, etc. Now I think the Spiritualist and the Materialis thav both something to learn before they can define this force that animates matter. They may agree, I claim, to be a Materialist, and I think electricity and magnetism are the forces which cause matter to think and act. Will some one giv his views? Yours, with my best wishes,

SAMUEL G. SCOLLARY.

HOMERWORTH, July 17, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find enclosed $3–$2.50 for the renewal of THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year, and "Answers to Christian Questions," by D. M. Bennett, and "Religion the Gibraltar of the World as Now Constituted." I would like to say something about the demise of our ever to be esteemed and fearless friend, D. M. Bennett. But there has been so much said that I do not know how or where to begin. But I am glad to know that THE TRUTH SEEKER is willing and able to maintain the struggle. It just suits me, and I hope it may increase in strength, popularity, and good works. From a true and unknown friend, born October 10, 1808.

Yours, P. E. EDWARDS, SR.

ALUM CREEK, July 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send $5 to apply on subscription, except twenty-five cents for "Answers to Christian Questions." Please excuse delay.

Elmina's article on the activ, energetic work for the advancement of Freethought meets my hearty approval. There are twenty-five Liberals in this immediate neighborhood, and but three of that number who take any Freethought literature of any kind. There should be something done to organize a League, that some light and truth may be spread among the ignorant and superstitious of this benighted land. My time is almost wholly occupied in procuring means for subsistence, but I am willing to do something for the good of humanity.

Yours for truth, JAMES MORROW.

WHITEHALL, July 12, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find post-office order for $2.50, which, I believe, pays up to the first of April, 1884. I expect to take it as long as I can pay for it, and when I become too poor to pay for it I shall either stop it or ask the publisher to donate. I hav been somewhat amused of late with the arguments pro and con on Materialism verses Spiritualism, and paradoxical as it may seem. think I am perhaps on both sides. I like friend Winter's pluck, but regard him as rather positiv. There is one thing, I think, he has not learned yet, and that is that it is not best to be too positiv of anything except what has been thoroughly demonstrated and placed beyond a doubt. I am quite convinced, individually, that there is nothing beyond or outside of matter in some form; but the forces and modes of motion inherent in matter are so extremely subtle that the most learned and best informed are as yet quite in the darkness to the extent of their capabilities and conditions. Consequently it is best not to be too positiv, get excited, call hard names, and pronounce every one a fool or a crank that happens to differ with us in opinion. This age is making gigantic strides in the right direction, and when we become far enough advanced to giv up the worship of myths, discard unsubstantiated dogmas, evolute out of the superstitious notions inculcated by the literature of a semi-barbarous age, and seek for a solution of our doubts in scientific investigation, we shall be able to make far more rapid progress in solving the difficult problems which to-day are puzzling the brain of every one who is disposed to allow himself the privilege of independent thought. As to what is in store in the future we must of necessity hav but very crude conceptions. The past and the present are all we can hav any positiv knowledge of except what must follow from the known and established laws of matter and motion. Any farther than this is in my estimation merely inferential. Yours for the advancement of truth,

N. F. STRONG.

WINCHESTER, July 9, 283.

MR EDITOR: I find myself again on the delinquent list, and as I am well aware that Infidels cannot thrive on faith alone, and that all they ask for is that which is their own and the privilege of right and free action, I will send this mite to show that my faith in the grand herald of light—THE TRUTH SEEKER—is still strong.

The immortal D. M. Bennett still livs, and his image is enshrined within the heart of every true man and woman who ever knew him and read his noble record.

Long may our banner wave;
Strong be our hearts, and brave;
Earnest be our work to save
Those now in bonds.

J. B. TRAVERS.

PHILADELPHIA, July 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $5—$2 25 for the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," in leather, and $2.50 for the universal Bible —THE TRUTH SEEKER—for another year. For the balance, 25 cents, you may send "Answers to Christian Questions," by D. M. Bennett. I feel as though I can't very well do without THE TRUTH SEEKER, for I find it suits my way of thinking on most questions.

But I think our friend S. P. Andrews soars too lofty for the most of your readers. It seems like a waste of time, to my understanding, to follow him, although I hav through all he has had to say so far; but I don't think I hav learned much from the perusal of what he has said.

My best wishes go with the editor and the proprietor of the noble old TRUTH SEEKER, and I remain,

Yours, CHAS. BORIE.

DALLAS, July 14, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: The books I wrote to you for a short time ago arrived to-day, and I am very well pleased with them. Be assured I will do all in my power to advance the cause of Freethought, by lending them and all other books and papers devoted to the elevation and reformation of mankind, whenever my modest means enable me to purchase from time to time. I hold it to be a duty which we owe to ourselvs and humanity to labor to free first our own intellects from ignorance and the degrading superstitions that hav so long enslaved us, and then to spread the light in order to hasten that "good time coming," when faith shall giv way to knowledge, and error be displaced by truth. I shall certainly do all I can to bring about this much-to-be-desired state of things.

Yours for right and truth, JOHN W. GRIGSBY.

ROSEBURG. July 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: You say yours is a Liberal paper, and I reckon you will not bar me out because I am a Christian. I want to say to my brethren through your valuable paper that we hav had a glorious revival out here in Oregon. Sinners were converted and the church greatly revived. As for me, I had my spiritual strength greatly renewed—praise the Lord! Yesterday I had the good fortune to hear our new preacher. He told the wicked that unless they repented and believed the gospel they would be in hell before their toes were cold. That is the kind of preachers we hav in the United Brethren church (for a church without hell is like pork without salt—no good). At the close of the sermon the minister notified the crowd that Brother Smith would meet the class; that all who wished to stay in could do so, and that it would be no intrusion for any to leave with all the crowd. But myself, the minister, Brother Smith, and two women stayed. Brother Smith sung a verse, prayed, and turned and asked me if I did not want religion. I told him I had religion fifty years old. He said he was glad to know it. He then turned to a young lady and asked her what her prospects were for heaven. She said tolerably good. Then with a few words of encouragement he passed to an old lady apparently a hundred years old (a bran new convert). "Well," said he, "grandmother, how are you getting along in the divine life?" "Wall, I'm trying to make heaven my home." "Well, did you ever hav any doubts that you had pure religion?" "Wall, to tell you the truth, I hav. When this great change came over me I thought sure it was religion; but since, I think perhaps it is nothing but worms." The minister said, "Let us pray," pronounced the benediction, and left in a calmer mood. I don't think the lady was quite so old as I intimated, but the rest is the clean truth.

NELS. KING.

GOSHEN, 7, 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: If consistent, I would like to giv my views of some points in the Christian religion which I consider weak. There is certainly a vast difference in the way different individuals look at the theory of the Christian religion. I cannot conceive how any person that lays claim to good sound judgment can entertain such ideas as some of our good brethren claim they do.

Here are some of the many things that seem somewhat incredible to me at least. That God, after millions of years, should make this little earth and place man upon it, making a heaven and a hell and a devil (although Christians claim that he did not create the devil, and still insist on saying that God created all things). When God made man he knew just what kind of a creature he was making, and knew just what he (man) would do. God knew that man would yield to his temptations and be punished forever. He certainly gave man the will-power and the emotions with which he is governed, and is, therefore, responsible for man's actions. Christians say God tempted man to try his faith, but, according to their own theory, he knew all about their faith before he tried it.

When a person is born God knows just what kind of a life he intends to lead, and if he is a Frank James or a Cole Younger he certainly knows it, and allows him to grow up and be just such a desperado as the above, when he could with one turn of his hand make a peaceable and law-abiding citizen of him. It seems to me that a man who will stand by and allow man to suffer death when he could relieve him by the turn of a hand, should be judged worse than a criminal.

Another thing that appears a little strange is that a just and merciful God will punish a man that has lived an honest and virtuous life and has never been known to do anybody any harm, just the same as he will punish the vilest sinner ever known. The former may never commit a single sin until he is found on his death-bed, and then should he commit some little sin and not ask forgivness, he will be roasted in a lake of fire and brimstone through all eternity, while the latter may ask forgiveness while on his death-bed and be received into the bright kingdom of heaven. Still they call the executor of such deeds a just God.

Hoping you will publish my first, I remain

A YOUNG TRUTH SEEKER.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

CINCINNATI, July 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: No name appears in public print more worthy and honorable than that of Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. She seems the embodiment of sound sense. Her remarks strike deep, and must go far to impress and fasten great truths on the human mind. She might truly be called this world's angel, for she recognizes no world with fabulous angels therein; and she is perfectly right, for this is the only world where angelic qualities can ever be manifested.

But the trouble lies here: Instead of all ladies endeavoring to become angels on earth, they seem to avoid this delightful experience, and think that some other world is the only proper place to be angelic. Now, ladies, this is a ladies' mistake. This life and this world is the most proper time and place to display every lovely and angelic quality. Do not, ladies, wait until you are dead corpses; then your happy chances will be ever past. Now is the time. Begin at once, and like our noble, sensible, and kind-hearted Elmina, become armies of angels, wingless for evil, but robed in nature's beauteous garb, with sweet and gentle smile, filled with love, charity, and the purest chastity; and be no longer the slaves and puppets of clerical cajoleries. Withdraw from the false and tricky religionists, and play the part of grand and noble womanhood, to enlighten, improve, and increase the stock of sound and secular thinkers, that our grand old planet may be the universal home of the brave, the free, and the most intellectual. Then the silly dream of a paradise in the sky will vanish from the mind as mist before the sun.

I feel grateful to this Lady Elmina for her noble defense of Materialism, as so strongly advocated by the great Western Materialist, T. Winter, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who never flinches from the utterance of truth, no matter where it strikes, or who kicks. Truth, struck to earth, will rise and triumph over every deceit, every sophistry, and every cunningly-devised fable, whether by prophet, priest, or knave.

Truth, mighty Truth, shall stand,
In spite of crank or priest;
This is the solid land—
No froth, or cant, or yeast.

All is material everywhere,
And none can this gainsay;
No spirits here, nor spirits there—
White, black, or gray.

Now, let no priest nor medium smart
Beguile and rope you in.
Their object is your pocketbook,
And then they slyly grin.

THOMAS WINTER, Materialist.

A TRUTH SEEKER HAND TAKES A VACATION.

WESTMORELAND, N. H., July 18, 1883.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As you hav probably missed me from my accustomed place in THE TRUTH SEEKER office, may be you would like to know where I am. I am in Westmoreland, Cheshire county, New Hampshire, the town where two or three years of my youth were spent. It is a fine old town, and lies amid some of the prettiest country to be seen out of doors. Those who are in search of pleasant scenery will fare worse if they go further. But the greatest attraction for me in this place is the people. Better I hav never met. They are generous to the extent of their means, and hospitable to the outside limit of human nature. They do not look down upon a young man because he comes from New York. As I said, when a boy I lived here, working upon a farm as a day or month laborer. I made the acquaintance of a good many families then; and now, eight years later, I find their friendship still alive and warm. Man and beast are welcome, and the horse which I hav hired from a stable in the adjacent city of Keene fares sumptuously and is getting fat. So you see I am well situated—scenery glorious, climate salubrious, people cordial; and the girls! stop the press while I write a column! No, you may go ahead. I am not competent to do them justice. The capacity of pen and ink is limited.

On the day I arrived here the town was in a stir over three events, happily of a somewhat unusual nature. There was a funeral, a fire, and a fight. The funeral was occasioned by the death of an aged and esteemed citizen, named Kennedy. When I lived here he was the champion checker-player. He had his own way, I believe, with the players who used to assemble evenings at the store; but it appears that Death cornered and jumped him. He is said to hav been an unbeliever. Well, he knows now all of life and death that it is given man to know. While his coffined remains were lying uninterred, and but an hour or two previous to the time set for the funeral ceremonies, the house and barn were struck by lightning; and that was the occasion of the fire. The third in this alliterativ array of events—the fight—was between one of those disreputable characters with which most towns are afflicted, and a negro vender of stove blacking. The colored troops are said to hav fought nobly. An exercise of the constitutional right to get drunk was the occasion of the fight. After the excitement incident to the foregoing occurrences was over, a prayer-meeting was held at the house where I am beating my way; but as the services were to be of a Congregational character, while I lean toward Hardshell Baptism, I did not attend it, although I was invited to do so. A "Freethinker," I judge, is looked upon as a rare bird here. Freethought, Freelove, and Spiritualism are all one to the majority. I hope I hav made the distinction clear to those who hav inquired about it.

Religious ardor is apparently on the wane in Westmoreland. The church buildings look desolate. Perhaps the people are weary of the old story. It is certain that no preacher can be hired for $800 or $900 a year who can make it interesting to live men and women. I am of the opinion that Westmoreland people would pay respectful attention to a good Liberal lecturer, and be benefited by one. Some Second Advent or Seventh Day revivalists were here a few years ago, and the religious disorder which they inaugurated crops out occasionally still. A number were converted and practiced the observance of Saturday as the Sabbath. To some of these now all days, Sunday included, hav become alike, and Seventh Day Adventism is going. By those who do not believe in it it is regarded as a nuisance and a folly, so it may as well go as stay. One sort of religion is more than can keep up an appearance of prosperity here. At the east part of the town there is talk of discharging the minister. No particular offense is alleged against him, but it is hinted that hiring a man to saw up his wood-pile every year, when he could just as well do it himself, smacks of extravagance. He also voted for Greeley, which was a kind of political heresy the Republicans of East Westmoreland would not tolerate. The truth probably is that he has preached himself out and begun to repeat, and that as all who heard his first sermons are not yet dead, he has been detected. A minister can not be too careful.

Like other New England towns, Westmoreland is growing the wrong way. Its population diminishes. The boys do not love the soil well enough to cultivate it. Anything but a farm for the young men, and anything but a farmer for the young women. I do not blame them. The East cannot compete with the West in raising crops. The soil is productiv but hard to work. The population drifts toward the rivers, and the old farms are turned to pastures. The hills are deserted; their turf remains unturned, and on their summits and sides the desolate cellars yawn like graves awaiting the corpse of New England agriculture. There may be a return to the old-time industry, but it will be when the resources of the West are exhausted.

Surry is a town adjoining Westmoreland, and there I hav spent a day or two among friends and relativs. The hospitality of the people there, as well as the grace and beauty of the girls, is a subject of comment. I found the people in the midst of haying. I endeavored to assist. I loaded two loads of hay and pitched off one. I had it in my mind to cover up the young man in the mow, but after I had struggled for twenty minutes to effect that object, he was still visible. How he kept himself in sight I am not able to explain. He had a method of absorbing hay that I did not catch on to. When the load was off he came down and put on his coat, remarking that it was rather cool up there standing around doing nothing.

The "shire" city of this county is Keene, a rather enterprising place. It contains the offices of the Sentinel and Cheshire Republican newspapers, in which the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER learned his trade. The New England Observer is also published there, and because of its liberality and enterprise is reported to be more popular than its somewhat antiquated contemporaries. The mayor of Keene is the Hon. Horatio Kimball. I had the honor of meeting and dining with him. When not engaged in the duties of office Mr. Kimball finds pleasure in making it lively for the foxes in the outskirts of Keene and in the neighboring towns. The mayor's son, Edward P. Kimball, a boyhood companion, he informs me, of the present editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, is doing business in Keene as executor of fine job printing. His work shows that he understands his case. If any one has a job of printing to be done they cannot do better than to communicate with him and let him size it up. I hope this advertisment will do him good, because he is a worthy young man, and reads THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I shall be back among you in few days, though I shall leave this boyhood home of mine with regret. THE TRUTH SEEKER office, where I hav spent eight years, is dear to me; but these friends, these hills and valleys, these girls—they are dear to me also. I could be happy with either. Tell the boys in the office to be as good as they are beautiful. It is a good deal to ask, I know, and it will come hard for them, but I hav always tried to do that way and hav found it best. Good-bye.

GEORGE MACDONALD.

ADRIAN, July 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The Salvation Army are in a bad way here. They hav got into a savage fight among themselvs. They hav thrown away their blood-stained banners, torn off their shoulder-straps, and disbanded as a religious military organization. It is as I expected at the start. Like their great prototypes, Peter, and Paul, and Barnabas, they cannot agree, and "so mote it be." Yours, P. B. REASONER.

NEW YORK, July 20, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1, which apply to the Monument Fund.

I hope Freethinkers will carry out the suggestion of entering politics which I see in your last number. I believe it would do the cause much good, for many who would not otherwise hear of Freethought would be reached. I also approve of it because the Reform Association is making great efforts to get its God into the Constitution, and we should make every effort to defeat it. I should like to see this question taken up by Mr. Putnam and others of our great writers.

With sympathies to Mrs. Bennett, I remain,
Respectfully, WM. F. BARRE.

MILWAUKEE, July 18, 283.

MR. EDITOR: What a charitable soul our friend Thomas Winter is to be sure! .By his philosophy Kingsley is a knave! Why? Because Kingsley "preaches life beyond the grave."

As dear Brother Winter can neither prove Kingsley's teaching false or Winter's assertion true, it ill becomes our kind brother to assert that mankind, who believe in future existence, are "scheming knaves and crafty characters." But such are the arguments by which "Materialism must triumph" and prove it to be "the boss truth."

There is a life beyond the grave,
And who denies it is a "knave."
He givs no proof beyond assertion,
And every crank has got his version.

What a profound and philosophical argument from the learned Thomas Winter, indeed! We advise our dear brother to "try again" or dry up and giv us peace—or giv us something better than his bold "assertion." See THE TRUTH SEEKER June 30, 1883, A. Allen Noe's article. E. N. KINGSLEY.

NEW YORK, July 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It is not to be wondered at that any one who had "never read, heard, or thought" of a science of the universe "until four months ago," and then had seen or read during that time in regard to the subject nothing but the few "articles which hav appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER," should fail to comprehend it. Suppose Mr. Buck had never read, heard, or thought of the science of geology until four months ago, or of chemistry or botany, or of mathematics, even, and then had heard nothing of the principles or laws "embodied" by those sciences, or of the method, and should hear asserted some of the most far-reaching generalizations, would he consider himself capable of giving an opinion on them? In geology, for instance, without knowing any of the data upon which the reasoning is based by which the geologist arrives at the conclusion that the earth must hav existed for millions of years, instead of the few thousands told in the Bible, would he be prepared to assert that there is no truth in geology? or without knowing the simple rules of arithmetic would he be prepared to criticise a solution of a problem in the rule of three or fractions?

I would like to reply quite in detail to the various points in his communication, but as the limit of space forbids, I will content myself for the present by giving you the opinion of a gentleman who needs no introduction to the scientific world. It is as follows:

"NEW YORK, May 23, 1881.

"About ten years ago, on the occasion of the publication of the 'Basic Outline of Universology,' I furnished Mr. Andrews a statement of the impression which I derived from perusing the proof-sheets of that work. My joint pursuits, in connection with the diseases of the throat, the physiology of the voice, and phonetics, brought the subject—especially the linguistic part of it—peculiarly within the range of my habitual studies, and enabled me to form a judgment in respect to his labors at an earlier day than could be expected from most scientific men. While at that time favorably affected by the extraordinary research and elaboration which Mr. Andrews presented, I was still guarded and cautious in respect to any indorsement of the immense and profound discoveries which he claimed to hav made. Since then he has kept me aware, from time to time, of the progress of his investigations, and I hav had opportunity to appreciate the increasing clearness of his views; objections resting in my mind hav been successivly removed, and confirmativ demonstrations established. The latest of his publications, entitled, 'Idealogical Etymology and Elements of Universology, with Special Reference to the Science of Music,' one relating to language, the other to music, come again within the domain of my specialty, and I hav taken pains to arrive, in regard to them, at an objectiv intelligent judgment. Certainly there could be no severer test of the claim for the possession of a universal organon of science than to apply it directly to the special sciences, as Mr. Andrews has done in these works. I do not hesitate to express it as my opinion that Universology has successfully stood the test. There can no longer be any doubt, I think, that Mr. Andrews has substantially made the discovery which he claims; and that, if this be established, it will prove in the end the most important event in the joint evolution of science and philosophy.

(Signed), LOUIS ELLSBERG, M.D.,
"Professor of Laryngology and Diseases of the Throat in the Medical Department of the University of New York, Editor of the 'Archives of Laryngology,' President of the New York Laryngological Society, etc."

Let me also add the following extract from a notice which now lies before me, by J. Storer Cobb, LL.D., late of King's College, London, England. He says (speaking of mathematics), "Even of this most fundamental, longest known, and best settled department of science" [vide Putnam's and Wakeman's "poetry"], "I find this new scientific discovery of Andrews's adequate to recast the philosophy in an unerring manner."

What, in the face of such testimonials as these, are the opinions and assertions of one who never "read, heard, or thought of Universology till four months ago?" or what are they to the comparativly few in number who hav been students for the last five, ten, or fifteen years, or even one year, or only a few months? A. C. M.

WHEATLAND, July 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Your kind letter, pamphlet, and photograph hav all been received. Was glad to get your picture and hav placed it with others of my friends. Inclosed please find money order for $6.25 for subscription; fourth volume "Around the World;" and for the Monument. For common use, I do not believe in monuments, unless they can be so arranged as to be useful as well as ornamental. If the friends would conclude to erect a nice building to the memory of Mr. Bennett, and make it a home for THE TRUTH SEEKER as well, it would suit me to a dot. Certainly, a monument over his grave would not be seen by nearly as many as the building in a business location. But his grave of course should be marked in some way that his living friends could visit the spot and recognize it. But I want something for Christians to look upon; something that will remind them of the doings of Comstock, Benedict & Co., and be an eye-sore to all that kind of Christians as long as there is one in the land. I hope in the near future to hav a monument of my own to D. M. Bennett. It will be a book-case or circular table with circular shelvs running up from the center; top surmounted with the bust or a picture of Mr. Bennett; and on this table I will place every word he ever wrote as near as I can get them, including the bound volumes of THE TRUTH SEEKER, from volume first up to the time of my exit, when I hope my boy or girl will continue to add to them as long as they liv. I hav the paper from the first issue to the present time, except a few missing copies which I am now engaged in hunting up, and if I do not succeed will soon hav to trouble you to find them for me. There are many Liberals all over the country, able to hav such a monument, and perhaps it would be well for you to set a price upon all his writings for those who would like that kind of a monument. When I hav completed mine, I will keep it in view, and any one who wishes may read, but they will not be allowed to take any books from the room. I will take great pride in such a monument to my dear friend who was so great, so unassuming, and so kind to all, and without any airs of superiority or culture. The Dutton's and their families all loved him. I hav just been laboring with a young man from Wyoming, to induce him to subscribe to THE TRUTH SEEKER. He fears that it will injure his business, though he likes the paper. Send him a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER, or something that will stiffen his spinal column, and he will eventually subscribe. Giv my kind regards to Mrs. Bennett, and the entire force of workmen in THE TRUTH SEEKER office, and believe me thine for the right,

JEROME DUTTON.

She Died of Mortgage.

BY WILL M. CARLTON.

We worked through spring and winter, through summer and through fall,
But the mortgage worked the hardest and the steadiest of them all;
It worked on nights and Sundays; it worked each holiday;
It settled down among us, and it never went away.
Whatever we kept from it seemed almost as bad as theft;
It watched us every minute, and it ruled us right and left.
The rust and blight were with us sometimes, and sometimes not;
The dark-browed scowling mortgage was forever on the spot.
The weevil and the cut-worm, they went as well as came;
The mortgage stayed forever, eating hearty all the same.
It nailed up every window, stood guard at every door.
And happiness and sunshine made their home with us no more,
Till with failing crops and sickness we got stalled upon the grade.
And there came a dark day on us when the interest wasn't paid;
And there came a sharp foreclosure and I kind o' lost my hold,
And grew weary and discouraged, and the farm was cheaply sold.
The children left and scattered, when they hardly yet were grown;
My wife she pined and perished, an' I found myself alone.
What she died of was "a mystery," an' the doctors never knew;
But I knew she died of mortgage—just as well as I wanted to.
If to trace a hidden sorrow were within the doctor's art,
They'd ha' found a mortgage lying on that woman's broken heart.
Worm or beetle, drouth or tempest, on a farmer's land may fall,
But for first-class ruination trust a mortgage 'gainst them all.

Baptized in Spite of Herself.

In Georgia negro baptisms are a Sunday morning feature at this season of the year, and each congregation, in succession, witnesses the immersion of the converts made during the winter. Hymns are sung, and every one appears animated by religious zeal. On one occasion, so the story goes, a worthy colored woman, with culinary tastes, got so much interested that she unconsciously pushed up to the minister, and he, regarding her as one of his flock, seized her. She resisted, but the minister imagined that she was merely afraid of the coldness of the water, so before she could explain the situation he soused her. She came up spluttering, and exclaimed: "What you doin'? Lemme go, I tell you!" But he exerted his strength, and sent her "ker-chuck" below the surface again. She emerged, clawing the air wildly, and shouting: "G'way from here! Don't you chuck me under ag'in, you nigger!" But the clergyman was inexorable, and he plunged her under a third time, and held her there for a minute, so as to let it soak in and do her good. Then she came up and struck for the shore, and standing there, looking like a draggled mermaid cut in ebony, she shook her fist at the astonished pastor, and shrieked: "Oh, I'll fix you! I'll bust the head offer you, you or'nary trash! sousin' me and nearly drowned me, when you know'd well 'nough all de time dat I'se a Methodist, and bin christened by dem dat's your betters, and knows more about religion den all de Baptises dat ever shouted, you mis'able black scum! and me got the rheumatiz enough to set me crazy! Oh, I'll see what de law kin do for you! I'll hav you 'rested dis very day, or my name's not Johanna Johnson, you wooly-headed herrin'! You hear me!" Then Johanna went home to redress, and the ceremony proceeded. It is asserted that Miss Johnson has since borne testimony that the Baptists are not any better than pagans.—Atlanta Constitution.

CORRESPONDENCE.

An honorable, intelligent man of 25, without means, wishes to correspond with a lady of suitable age with some means. The lady who wishes to hav a good husband and to be a good wife for life has a chance. Address, E. A. NYGREN, 2t30 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.

TRUTH:

A Poem in Three Parts.

BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the JEWISH JEHOVAH.

As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid, FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire. 200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

SUBSCRIBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE "PHYSIOLOGIST."

Elmina would like copies of the following Nos. of the New York "Physiologist." June and July (double No.) 1878; April and May (double No.) 1879; Nov. 1878; Aug. and Sept. 1879; June 1879; Jan., Feb., March, April, 1881. If friends will send me these Nos. or either of them I will send copies of "Matrimonial Review," copy for copy in exchange, and be greatly obliged also. Or will send, if preferred, "The Alpha," or "Herald of Industry."
Address ELMINA D. SLENKER,
3t28 Snowville, Va.

WETTSTEIN'S

JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.

Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Clock Struck One, and Christian Spiritualist. Revised and corrected. Being a Synopsis of the Investigations of Spirit Intercourse by an Episcopal Bishop, three Ministers, five Doctors and others, at Memphis, Tenn., in 1855. Also, the opinion of many eminent divines, living and dead, on the subject. Communications received from a number of persons recently. By the Rev. SAMUEL WATSON, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Cloth, $1.00.

Clock Struck Three; Being a Review of "Clock Struck One," and reply to it: and Part Second, showing the Harmony between Christianity, Science, and Spiritualism. By Rev. SAMUEL WATSON. Cloth, $1.50.

Criticism of the Apostle Paul in Defense of Woman's Rights. By M. B. CRAVEN. Price, 25 cents.

Curious Life of P. B. Randolph. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Paper, 60 cents.

Danger Signals; An address on the Uses and Abuses of Modern Spiritualism. By MARY F. DAVIS. Paper, 15 cents.

Death in the Light of Harmonial Philosophy. By MARY F. DAVIS. A whole volume of Philosophical truth is condensed into this little pamphlet. Paper, 15 cents; cloth, 30 cents; cloth, gilt, 50 cents.

Debatable Land Between this World and the Next. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. The main object of this book is to afford conclusiv proof, aside from historical evidence, of immortality. Cloth, $2

Diakkaism; or, Clairvoyant Travels in Hades. By A. GARDNER, of London, Eng. Price, 10 cents.

Dialogues and Recitations, Adapted to the children's progressive lyceums, and other forms of useful and liberal instruction. By Mrs. LOUISA SHEPARD. Paper, 50 cents.

Dissertation on the Evidences of Divine Inspiration. Price, 25 cents.

Defense of Modern Spiritualism. By A. R. WALLACE, F.R.S., with American Preface by EPES SARGENT. Paper, 10 cts.

Discussion. Between Mr. E. V. WILSON, Spiritualist, and Elder T. M. HARRIS, Christian. Subject discussed—Resolved, That the Bible, King James's version, sustains the teachings, the phases, and the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. Price, 10 cents.

Divine Law of Cure. By W. F. EVANS. This treatis is the result of the author's six years of careful research, study, and experience, and makes its appearance at a time when the necessity of the age seems to demand a work of this nature. Cloth, $1.50.

Empire of the Mother over the Character and Destiny of the Race. By HENRY C. WRIGHT. Price, 75 cents.

Experiences of Judge J. W. Edmonds in Spirit-Life. Paper, 30 cents.

Experiences of Samuel Bowles, Late Editor Springfield Republican, in Spirit-Life, or Life as he now sees it. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING. Paper, 20 cents.

Fabulous Tendency of Ancient Authors. By M. B. CRAVEN. 10 cents.

Faiths, Facts, and Frauds of Religious History. By EMMA HARDINGE BRITTEN. Price, 75 cents.

Flashes of Light from the Spirit Land. Through the Mediumship of Mrs. J. H. CONANT. Compiled and arranged by ALLAN PUTNAM. Price, $1.50

Ghost Land; or, Researches into the Mysteries of Occult Spiritism. Illustrated in a series of autobiographical papers, with extracts from records of magical seances, etc. Translated by Mrs. EMMA H. BRITTEN. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50.

Gospel of Nature. By SHERMAN and LYON, authors of "The Hollow Globe." Price, $2.00.

Heaven and Hell; or, The Divine Justice Vindicated in the Plurality of Existences. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $2.00.

Higher Aspects of Spiritualism. By M. A. (OXON), author of "Psychography" and "Spirit-Identity." English edition. Blue cloth, in form with "Spirit-Identity" and "Psychography." Price, $1.25.

Hollow Globe; or, The World's Agitator and Reconciler. A Treatis on the Physical Conformation of the Earth. Presented through the organism of M. L. SHERMAN, M.D., and written by WM. F. LYON. Cloth, $2.00.

How to Magnetize; or, Magnetism and Clairvoyance. Paper, 25 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps ineleyant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents.

Poetry.

An Improved Inquisition.

BY BERNARD BIGSBY.

Ah, Deacon Smith was a pious man—
I kind o' guess as you'd seldom find
A leveler head o' the orthodox plan,
Or a much more reg'lar turn o' mind.
Scripter he'd quote by book an' verse,
From Adam an' Eve to Revelation;
An' as for the hymns as he'd rehearse,
When once set goin', t'ud beat creation.

An' when the summer come reekin' hot,
An' things in the city war kind o' b'ilin',
An' the whirlin' wheels o' life hed got
Rusty an' stiff an' wanted 'lin';
Then board 'ud go up, an' nary a one
O' all them homesteads in yonder vale
As wasn't crowded an' overdone
By folks as come from town by rail.

No depot, you say? I ruther guess not;
But twenty miles over Greylock hill,
By Glenway creek—you know the spot,
Close to where Hurlbert owns the mill—
Stood a tumbled-down shanty as ever I seen,
An' the deacon staged over there last season
In a kind o' ramshackle batting-machine
As he called a coach—'thout rhyme or reason.

Now the deacon druv a wall-eyed mare,
A flea-bitten gray, a useful critter,
As 'ud do twelve miles wi'out turnin' a hair
In less nor a hour, if ye would but hit 'er.
But the deacon was slow an' methodical some,
An' the beast got inter the ways o' her master,
Till you'd think to see her jogging to hum
At a ten-forty gait as she couldn't go faster.

Wall, one day last fall the down train brings
A young city sport—a glorious bein',
Fixed up wi' watch-chains, pins, an' rings,
Like a jeweler's store gone out a-spreein',
An' he off wi' the deacon over the hill,
An' they fell a-talkin' o' gettin' religion;
An' this here young chap he argyed until
The deacon sot ruff'd like a moultin' pigeon.

He gev him Bob Ingersoll hot an' strong;
He dosed him wi' Darwin's Evolution;
An' prayers in the public schools was wrong;
An' he'd hev no God in his Constitution.
An' he talked o' advancement an' Reason's Age,
An' his tung ran like a streak o' lightnin',
An' the deacon was bilin' over wi' rage,
An' his lips grew white, an' his breath kept tightnin'.

Fur he hadn't the words to answer him back,
Though his hair was liftin' his hat wi' horror,
As the young un kep' the inside track,
An' poured out his vials o' sin an' sorrer.
Then the deacon thought he'd giv him away,
An' put a stop to his high-falutin';
So he let the whip onto his flea-bitten gray,
An' away down the hill went the critter scootin'.

I guess 'twas a sight to see the old stage
Rock like a ship in a stormy ocean,
An' the gray mare's heels—wall, I'll engage
She can kick like a mule when she's got the notion.
Then white as death grew that young man's face,
An' he clung to the seat in desperation,
An' he prayed the deacon to slacken the pace,
But the deacon was sot on his soul's salvation.

"D'ye believe in Adam?" he screamed in his ears,
"In Eve's temptation, an' Noah's story?
In Methuselah livin' eight hundred years,
An' Elijah a-ridin' to heaven in glory?"
"I don't!" yelled the youth. But there lay just there
A corduroy road over which they flew, sir,
Which shot the poor lad clean up in the air,
An' when he lit down, says he, "I do, sir!"

Now the deacon made him eat every word—
Take all of it back as he'd dared to say,
An' promis he'd ne'er again be so absurd
As to sneer at religion in that sort o' way.
Then the gray mare stopped, an' that child o' sin
Started afoot to his distant goal,
While the deacon druv on wi' a placid grin,
Right pleased to hav saved an immortal soul.

—Merchant-Traveler.

Nature's Harmony.

For the last week or two I've been reading at intervals this book full of thought, "Nature's Harmony." It is a peculiar volume. Interesting and fascinating in the extreme, yet you are all the time protesting at some startling expression of the writer. Some beautiful and harmonious development of organized or unorganized matter will be truthfully and scientifically described, and you agree perfectly with the author and feel that he is telling your own thoughts better than you could do it yourself, when all at once he utters some wild if not impossible assertion that causes you to wonder if he really means it, or is testing your credulity and judgment. He proves conclusivly that what we are depends entirely on circumstances, over which we hav no control. That our every thought and action are the results of external influences—external to the mind. The spirit of consciousness, being a passiv principle, only acts as it is acted upon. And this we do not deny. But as a Materialist, believing that the mind is wholly an effect—wholly the consequence of organization—it seems nonsensical in the extreme to hear a philosopher talk thuswise: "If the soul before being robed with mortality, as the conditions of this sphere indicate, were conscious of its existence, then it must hav been a life-germ." Now a life-germ is no more a "soul" or a mind than a blank sheet of paper is a letter, a deed, or a will. The very opening sentence of the book is an assertion, which as yet all the world has failed to prove. An assertion belonging to the old effete God idea. The idea of a creation behind which stands a giant, limitless in capacity, intellect, conception, and all manly attributes and qualities. The sentence is this:

"Since planets exist for the satisfaction of intellectuality, the inference is, that without mind, there would need be no such principle as matter."

Materialism places matter before mind, since mind is the result of organized matter. Fuse the earth into a molten mass and where would be the mind that is now manifested in all its organized existence? Gone! Blotted forever from the universe. But the power to again produce mind would remain in the matter of the earth, and when conditions become favorable it would once more be evolved. Not the same individual minds, not the identities, he terms "souls," for no identity can exist more than once. As well say the dew drop of to-day is the same dew drop that nestled in the rose of ten thousand years ago. As well say the snowballs of one winter are the same identical snowballs as were those of all the winters past and gone.

Our author says: "There is a reason why intellectual beings exist." True enough, and there are many reasons why this is, and the fact that reason, as well as all that is, exists of necessity, exists because they cannot nor could not hav done otherwise, embodies them all.

In speaking of the wonderful adaptation of the stomach and the offices it performs in the economy of the individual, he says: "Nature made one mistake in the office to which she applied the stomach." Thus seeming to take for granted that a perfect human stomach was completely developed and made ready for its office, all finished in its entirety, before it entered upon the discharge of its work, whereas he is well aware that the stomach, like the mind, is a growth. How many millions of stomachs were begun and failed in doing perfect work—were abortiv of nature's harmony before a perfect one (and are we sure any one is yet the very best that might be?) was developed? Nature is just as full of unharmony as she is of harmony. She aborts as often as produces. She fails as often as succeeds. She destroys as often as creates.

Life, death, and immortality are all a part and portion of matter, inherent in it and indivisible from it. Identities are but as drops of water—forming and forming again and again yet never the same twice over.

But in spite of all criticism the book is very readable, and I think it well worth its price. May its talented author liv to produce many more thought-creativ volumes, is the wish of,

Yours truly, ELMINA.

July 12, 283.

A REMARKABLE BOOK!

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING

SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address,

JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
Syracuse, N. Y.

30tf

LOVE AND CONJUGALITY.

Hints toward the true and felicitous in Love and Conjugality. Sexuality viewed from a higher ideal. New thoughts thereon, clearly presented, yet in unobjectionable shape. All in, or contemplating the conjugal relation should hav this essay. Sent on receipt of seven cents, postage, by S. G. LEWIS, GRASS VALLEY, CAL. 5t30

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.

12t24

TO MY FRIENDS!

No God, no heaven, no hell!
These books sound their death-knell.

"The Darwins," paper 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.—John's Way, 15 cents.—Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents. These three are Infidel romances.—Studying the Bible, 75 cents.—Specimen copies of Alpha and Herald of Health, 10 cents each.—Four tracts 6 cents. Health Hints, 25 cents.—Diana, A new Theory of Sexual Relations. Sexual Satisfaction in Continence. This book should be read by all married people and by all who contemplate marriage.—Godly Women, showing how the Bible degrades and humiliates women, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.—Private Physiology for Girls, worth five dollars to any woman if she needs health, $1.—Photos: card, 15 cents, imperial, 20 cents.—Crimes of Preachers, 25 cents.—Leaves of Grass. a splendid poem, Shaksperian in style, full of good ideas, $2.—Any other Liberal book you may want at publisher's prices.

Please order them of Elmina as she makes no profits on any of her books save those sold by herself. Address, ELMINA D. SLENKER, 6teow18 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,

Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

[Please Order by Number.]

No.		Cents.
1	Discussion on Prayer. Bennett and others	8
7	The Story of Creation. Bennett	5
8	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett	2
12	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers	3
15	Come to Dinner. "	2
16	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. Bennett	2
20	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett	2
21	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22	Discussion with Elder Shelton. Bennett	10
23	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett	3
24	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell	5
25	Discussion with George Snode. Bennett	5
26	Underwood's Prayer	1
27	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. Bennett	5
28	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran	10
29	Paine Hall Dedication Address. Underwood	5
30	Woman's Rights and Man's Wrongs. Syphers	2
31	Gods and God-Houses	2
32	The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. Bennett	8
33	What has Christianity Done? Preston	3
34	Tribute to Thomas Paine	2
35	Moving the Ark. Bennett	2
36	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil	2
37	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
38	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam	1
40	Bible of Nature versus the Bible of Men. John Syphers	2
41	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett	1
42	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood	3
45	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett	3
46	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	2
47	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter	3
48	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson	5
49	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild	5
50	Jonah and the Big Fish. Bennett	3
51	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1	5
52	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood	3
53	Questions for Bible Worshipers. "	2
54	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett	5
55	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman	8
56	Bible Contradictions	1
57	Jesus not a Perfect Character. Underwood	2
58	Prophecies. Underwood	2
59	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. Underw'd	2
60	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. "	2
61	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden	5
62	The Jews and their God	10
63	The Devil's Due-Bills. John Syphers	3
64	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. Bennett	5
65	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown	2
67	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2	5
68	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon	2
69	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
70	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon	3
71	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman	2
72	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Bennett	2
73	Foundations. John Syphers	2
74	Daniel in the Lyon's Den. Bennett	2
75	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett	3
77	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett	5
78	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett	5
79	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman	2
80	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett	5
81	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. Syphers	2
82	Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett	1
83	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey	5
84	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London	2
85	Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. Bennett	10
86	An Enquiry About God's Sons. D. M. Bennett	2
87	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. Underwood	1
88	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. E. D. Slenker	2
89	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson	3
90	Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates	2
91	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood	1
92	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter	3
93	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle	1
94	The New Raven. Will Cooper	5
95	Jesus Christ. Bennett	10
96	Ichabod Crane Papers	10
97	Special Providences. W. S. Bell	2
98	Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
99	Do the Works of Nature Prove a Creator? Sciota	2
100	140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell	2
103	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett	1
104	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson	10
105	Decadence of Christianity. Cappho	2
106	Franklin, Washington, and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett	2
107	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown	5
108	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. Preston	2
110	Invocation to the Universe. Bennett	1
111	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett	1
112	Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage	2
113	Come to Jesus. Bennett	2
114	Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston	1
115	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett	2
116	The Sunday Question. Bennett	2
117	Constantine the Great. S. H. Preston	3
118	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. W. S. Bell	5
119	The New Faith. Stoddard	3
120	The New Age. W. S. Bell	10
121	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers	3
122	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett	10
123	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and the Observer	10
124	Sinful Saints. Bennett	10
125	German Liberalism. Clara Neyman	2
126	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood	10
127	Tyndall on Man's Soul	5
129	Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman	2
130	The Ethics of Religion. Clifford	5
131	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr	3
132	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson	1
133	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood	3
134	Talks with the Evangelists	5
135	Is There a Future Life? Bennett	3
136	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett	3
137	Christian Love. C. L. James	3
138	Science of the Bible. John Jasper	2
139	Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston	3
140	Astro-Theology	5
141	Infidelity. H. W. Beecher	2
142	Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon	10
143	Chang Wan Ho. Eli Perkins	2
144	The Comstock Laws	10
145	If You Take Away My Religion, What Will You Giv Me Instead? Martin	10
146	Seymour Times Prayer	2
147	Reply to the Index on Comstock Laws	10
148	When Did Paul Liv? Scholasticus	2
149	Age of Shams	3
150	The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman	10
151	What is the Bible? M. W. H.	5
152	A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas	2
153	Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway	5
154	Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce	3
155	Co-operation the Redeemer of Society. S. M. Papin	2
156	Free Speech and Free Press. P. B. Shelley	2
157	Questions from a Western Reader. Bennett	3
158	The Fool's Creed	1
159	Bennett Indignation Meeting at Boston	5
160	Sabbath Observance. W. E. Coleman	3
161	Protestant Persecutions	3
162	Eighth Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett	10
163	Ingersoll's Creed	2

Scientific Series.

1	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D.	5
2	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood	3
3	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood	3
4	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M. D.	3
6	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll	2
7	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	3
8	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford	2
9	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske	10
10	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures	10
11	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson	10
12	Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M. D.	3
13	Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium	5

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

Iron-Clad and Manna Series.

IRON CLAD SERIES.

Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake. 5 cts.

Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Muller. 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison. 20 cts.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 15 cents.

Essay on Miracles. David Hume. 10 cents.

Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Were Adam and Eve Our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Why Do Men Starve? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cts.

Logic of Life, Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.

A Plea for Atheism. Charles Bradlaugh. 10 cts.

Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.

Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake. 5 cents.

Defense of Secular Principles. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.

Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts. 5 cents.

The Christian Deity. Charles Watts. 5 cents.

Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts. 5 cts.

Freethought and Modern Progress. C. Watts. 5 cents.

Christianity: Its Nature and Influence on Civilization. Charles Watts. 5 cents.

Thoughts on Atheism. A. Holyoake. 5 cents.

Is There a Moral Governor of the Universe? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.

Philosophy of Secularism. C. Watts. 5 cts.

Has Man a Soul? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Poverty; Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H. 10 cents.

Science and Bible Antagonistic. C. Watts. 5 cents.

Christian Scheme of Redemption. Charles Watts. 5 cents.

Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.

Poverty; Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

MANNA SERIES.

New Life of David. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

200 Questions Without Answers. 5 cents.

Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin. 10 cents.

Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian. 10 cents.

Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake 5 cents.

New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

A Few Words About the Devil. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

New Life of Jacob. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Daniel the Dreamer. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.

Specimen of the Bible. Esther A. Holyoake. 10 cents.

Acts of the Apostles; A Farce. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.

Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.

Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

Who Was Jesus Christ? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

What Did Jesus Teach? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cts.

New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

A Secular Prayer. A. Holyoake. Per doz., 10 cts.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

LIFE-SIZE

LITHOGRAPH

OF

D. M. BENNETT.

Heavy Plate Paper,

SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.

Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.

ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man.

Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

FROM ONE WHOM ALL KNOW.

The Kerner Stylographic Pen is the most convenient, handy, and ever-ready pen I have ever use I've tried innumerable fountain pens, gold pens, and all sorts, from the old quill pen to the stylograp and for utility, satisfaction, and general convenience this excels all the rest.

My son Oscar also prefers it for use in the woolen mill to any other he has tried.

It is pen, ink, and pencil all in one and can be carried in the vest pocket so as to be always ready.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Observe the address: GEORGE MACDONALD,
21 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
6m9 Address THE TRUTH SEEKER. 21 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co.,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price. $2.00. 21 Clinton Place, New York

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 0 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

[Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 21 Clinton Place, New York city.

THE GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY —OF— RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and
A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

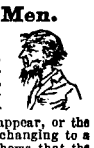
All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6.n15

DR. FELLOWS

SHARON SPRINGS HOPE



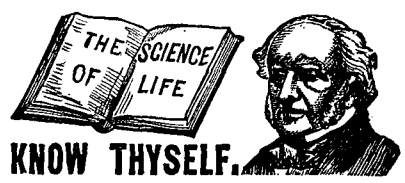
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securly sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.
30 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS. Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

IF success is the measure of power, the devil must be set down as far more powerful than his opponent, for in taking the whole world together he has twenty faithful followers where God has one; and any Christian clergyman will tell you that nearly the whole world is to-day led by his satanic majesty. That he is smart, powerful, and great, who can for a moment doubt?—D. M. Bennett.

ORTHODOXY teaches that we come from the hands of our maker with such a constitution, and are placed under such influences and circumstances, as to render certain and infallible the total depravity of every human being, from the first moment of his moral agency; and it also teaches that the offense of the child, who brings into life this ceaseless tendency to unmingled crime, exposes him to the sentence of everlasting damnation. Now, according to the plainest principles of morality, we maintain, that a natural constitution of the mind, unfailingly disposing it to evil, and to evil alone, would absolve it from guilt; that to giv existence under this condition would argue unspeakable cruelty, and that to punish the sin of this unhappily constituted child with endless ruin would be a wrong unparalleled by the most merciless despotism.—Dr. Channing.

TO thine ownself be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.
—Shakspere.

I INSIST that, if there is an infinitly good and wise God, he beholds with pity the misfortunes of his children. I insist that such a God would know the mist, the clouds, the darkness enveloping the human mind. He would know how few stars are visible in the intellectual sky. His pity, not his wrath, would be excited by the efforts of his blind children, groping in the night to find the cause of things, and endeavoring, through their tears, to see some dawn of hope. Filled with awe by their surroundings, by fear of the unknown, he would know that when, kneeling, they poured out their gratitude to some unseen power, even to a visible idol, it was, in fact, intended for him. An infinitly good being, had he power, would answer the reasonable prayer of an honest savage, even when addressed to wood and stone.—Ingersoll.

MOST of you hav been forced to listen to the criticisms and denunciations which rang discordant through the land for some years after the publication of Mr. Darwin's "Origin of Species" (1859). Well, the world—even the clerical world—has for the most part settled down in the belief that Mr. Darwin's book simply reflects the truth of nature; that we who are now "foremost in the files of time" hav come to the front through almost endless stages of promotion from lower to higher forms of life. If to anyone of us were given the privilege of looking back through the eons [ages] across which life has crept toward its present outcome, his vision would ultimately reach a point where the progenitors of this assembly could not be called human. From that humble society, through the interaction of its members and the stirring up of their best qualities, a better one emerged; from this again a better still, until, at length, by the integration of infinitesimals, through ages of amelioration, we came to be what we are to-day.—Tyndall on Man's Soul—No. 127 Truth Seeker Tracts.

IN the "Origin of Species" Darwin contends that the various species of plants and animals, instead of being each specially created and immutable, are continually suffering change through a process of adaptation, by which those varieties of a species that are in any way better fitted for the conditions of their life survive and multiply at the expense of others. So potent and universal does this process of natural selection seem to be that Darwin considers it capable, with other less important causes, of explaining how all existing species may hav descended from one or a very few low forms of life. This theory has excited controversies which are not yet laid to rest; but it has been embraced by many of the ablest naturalists, and has already induced [introduced] great changes in the methods of biology and kindred sciences. . . . Darwin's knowledge is not less remarkable than his caution in statement.—Chambers's Encyclopedia.

IF we do not exist after the dissolution of the body —and that we shall we think there is no proof—nothing awaits us worse than an everlasting rest, an eternal sleep, in which no vicissitude of earth, no event of time, shall disturb the quiet of our repose. The lightnings may flash and the thunder roll above us; the tramp of armies and the roar of battle may shake our graves; nay, the earth may swallow us or the volcano lay us in ruins; the earth itself may be dissolved, and, countless ages hence, our bodies returned to their elements, to the great store-house of matter, may enter into the formation of other worlds, and help make the forms of other beings, who shall, like us, feel the consciousness of existence, the vigor of manhood, the joys of hope, the thrill of love, the decrepitude of age, and the pang of death, and like us shall take their place in the great mausoleum of nature; yet to us all these things will be as though they were not.—Underwood's Christianity and Materialism.

FEAR no more the heat o' the sun,
Nor furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone and ta'en thy wages.
Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Fear not slander, censure rash,
Thou hast finished joy and moan.
—Shakspere.

THERE are some opinions in which a man should stand neutral, without engaging his assent to one side or the other. Such a hovering faith as this, which refuses to settle upon any determination, is absolutely necessary in a mind that is careful to avoid errors and prepossessions. When the arguments press equally on both sides, in matters that are indifferent to us, the safest method is to giv up ourselvs to neither.—Addison's Sir Richard de Coverly.

Odds and Ends.

THE preachers who write and commit their sermons are the only ones who practice what they preach.

THE duration of a kiss has been found from half a second to one and a quarter minutes, according to whether you are kissing your wife or the hired girl.

IT is proposed to change the name of Washington Territory to Tahoma, an Indian name signifying "Almost to Heaven." There is not much difference between Washington and Tahoma; both are star routes.

"MY dear," said a fond wife, "when we were engaged I always slept with your last letter under my pillow." "And I," murmured her husband, "often went to sleep over your letters."—Elevated Railway Journal.

"NO," said the high school girl to her dearest friend, "it is not allowable in polite society to say, 'He bit off more than he could chew.' The correct expression is, 'He severed with his incisors more than he was able to masticate with his molars.'"

PEDLER: "Where is dot lady what livs hiere?" Friend at the wake: "Whist! be aisy; she died two days ago." Pedler: "So help me gracious, I am sorry! If I had come two days sooner I could hav sold dose two napkins she promised to buy last week."

A SCOTCH boy had delivered a message to a lady, but did not seem in a hurry to go. Being asked if there was anything else his mother bade him say, he whimpered out: "She said I wasn't to seek anything for coming, but if you gave me anything I was to take it."

A GALLANT schoolboy's toast: "The girls! May they add charity to beauty, subtract envy from friendship, multiply genial affections, divide time by industry and recreation, reduce scandal to its lowest denomination, and raise virtue to its highest power!"

HOUSEMAID: "It does my heart good to see you and the baby together. It's a pretty picture. Sure and he's the image of you." Fond mother: "But they all say he looks like his father, Mary." Housemaid: "Bless your soul, mum, he is not good-looking enough for that!"

"MY son," said an Arkansaw colonel of the reformed school, "in life always make it a point not to fight." "Suppose a man calls me a d—d liar, what must I do?" "Find out whether he has told the truth or not. If he has, acknowledge the accusation, and if he has not, move to another neighborhood."

A MAN who probably hailed from Buffalo played a powerful mean trick on a Detroit bridal couple at Niagara Falls the other evening. They went to a hotel and registered, had supper, and then started out for a night view of the Mighty Roarer. They had not gone far when a man called to them and said:

"Hav you just been married?"

"We hav," answered the groom.

"Going to stay here a day or two?"

"Yes."

"Well, I want to say a word to you. I don't want any ducky-deary nonsense around my house. I want no popsy-wopsy business on the veranda. I want no squeezing hands on the balconies or feeding each other at the table."

The groom let his arm fall from his bride's waist in a slow and painful manner, and the stranger continued:

"The first time you call her peaches and cream, or she calls you darling, out you go!"

"Y-yes, sir."

"She's no sweeter than ten thousand other girls, and you are no more of a darling than I am, and I won't stand love-sick nonsense."

He walked away with that, and people at the falls who knew the bridal couple were amazed to hear them address each other as Mr. and Mrs., and to see what precautions they took to prevent touching hands or betraying any symptoms of love. They put in two wretched days, and it was only as they were upon the point of leaving that they discovered how a base villian had duped them.

MR. YAGER'S OPINION OF FASHIONABLE PREACHERS.

"I see a great many of the preachers of the large cities are getting ready to go to the summer resorts for the summer," said Herr Hans Yager's good neighbor to him last evening.

"Yes, dem fellers took it easy. Dem got a soft seat. In der vinter dey put on dem pig galico nightgowns und sot in a soft chair mit der grade fire to deir feed, und in der summer dey on der vater blaces gone and got soft seat dere, too."

"Well, they say they are worn out with labor and must take a few months' rest."

"Dey vas vorn oud, eh! Dem moost got easy vorn out. Dot vas a hellum pizness."

"Well, they say the Lord calls them to take a rest."

"Dot don'd vas so. Der Lordt him don'd dalk to beoples down here for more as dwo dousand year."

"That's so. Times hav changed greatly since then."

"I gould schmile dey hav schanged in der breacher pisness. Then der Lordt vos on dot gountry him vas a breacher dot vos a breacher. Him valk wid his feed on und breach efery day aroundt, und him don'd got him no vored out. Him don'd to dem highfalutin' pig Saratogy trunks vater blaces go for to get rest."

"That is very true."

"Him vas a scheep-vatcher vat vas a scheep-vatcher. Him vas no humpugger scheep-vatcher. Him don't gone himself avay in der summer dime und let der scheep took gare fon demselefs, and let der volf gome (vot vas der teifel in breach dalk) und schdeal avay dem scheep. No-sir-e, Bop. Dot vater pisness him don'd vos righd; und I pet you dem kind breacher got der teifel vhen dey got examination drial mit der Lordt, und don'd it fongot you."
—Kentucky State Journal.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

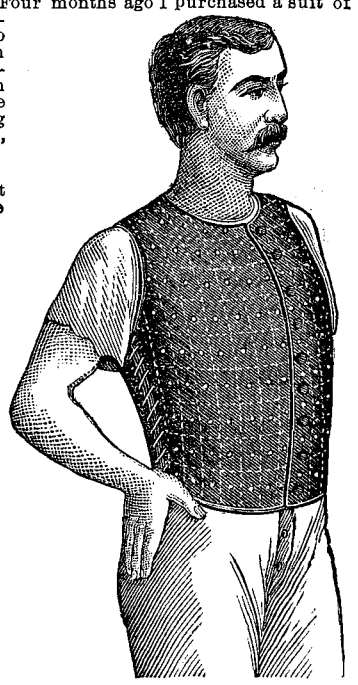
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case, send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 31. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, August 4, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

TEACHER—"What do we learn by the translation of the prophet Elisha?" Boy—"That he saved his funeral expenses."

"No, sir," said the clergyman; "I don't pray for rain unless my special dispatch from the Weather Bureau says we're liable to get it."

A BOY medium of Providence, R. I., with his bare finger, draws and colors pictures of flowers on unprepared paper. At least, so it is claimed.

IT is said that Mr. and Mrs. Tom Thumb were believers in Spiritualism, and would sit hours to receive communications from little Minnie Warren in the spirit land.

THE youngest "boy preacher" in this country is now about forty-one years old. The Burlington Hawkeye is led to inquire if it isn't about time to set another batch before the present stock of boy evangelists mature.

RECENT legislation in Kentucky is likely to hav a discouraging effect on church-going. A new law fixes the legal distance between a church and the nearest saloon at a mile. The effect of this will be to make a good many men late for church.

CHICAGO declines to do without Sunday evening dramatic entertainment. McVicker, the father-in-law of Edwin Booth, set the example of keeping his theater closed on Sundays, but has given up the effort on finding that public opinion was against him.

BISHOP BORGESS has forbidden the Roman Catholic churches of Michigan to raise any money by raffles, fairs, excursions, or balls. The first consequence of this is the lessening of the incomes of several charitable institutions, and he has ordered an assessment on his diocese to make up a deficit of $1,300.

"SHOW me an actor and I'll show you a low-lived, godless whelp," said a member of the Salvation Army, preaching in the Grecian Theater, London. A pugilistic actor strode forward and announced himself, as he struck a boxing attitude. "Exactly so," said the revivalist, "I'll be as good as my word. Here is the actor shown to me. I am the low-lived and godless whelp."

A CORRESPONDENT of Texas Siftings writes to that paper: "I am a regular reader of the papers published in Germany, and am at a loss to understand why there is so little 'come out' in the average German editor. Can you solve the mystery?" Perhaps the following explains why there is so little come out in the German editor: "Berlin.—The editor of the Unabhaenige, a newspaper published in this city, has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment for slandering Prince Bismarck."

ALL anecdotes, says the Herald, which make a good point against a clergyman seem to be doubly enjoyable to a wicked world. A celebrated preacher in Newark has only about fifty sermons in his barrel, but he is in great demand from Sunday to Sunday, and once in a while preaches in a place wherein all his sermons hav been heard at least once. Welcome as he always is, a wag once remarked, "Oh, yes, we hav heard Dr. Blank a great many times. He has preached for us every sermon he ever prepared, and quite a number which he hadn't prepared."

SUNDAY is a good day to spend well. How to spend it to the best advantage, like a new coin fresh from the mint, is a question every one must answer for himself. The Christian Intelligencer tells of a deacon who, being accompanied by a young friend on an autumn morning, when the foliage was all ablaze with high-colored hues, had his attention called to a clump of trees which was specially attractiv, and solemnly replied, "I never look at trees on Sunday." There are such people. There was a preacher who thought it worth while even to "consider the lilies, how they grow." But it was a long time ago, and he lost his life.—Star.

THE conviction of innocent men upon charges of crime has been of such frequent occurrence of late in Germany that the press is calling earnestly for the passage of a law to secure indemnification at the hands of the government in such cases. Innocent men thus unjustly convicted, and perhaps utterly ruined thereby in fortune, hav no redress whatever upon the discovery of the error. The latest reported victim is a man who was adjudged guilty of arson last year by the criminal court at Thorn, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, with hard labor. After serving over seven months of his term, indisputable evidence of his innocence is now discovered, and he is released from prison a ruined man.

THE recent ukase of the Russian czar, granting freedom of conscience and worship to the "Raskolnyks," schismatics of the Russian established church, will bring over 3,000,000 exiles back into the heart of Russia. The "Raskolnyks" were not banished in chains to Siberia, but, being dissenters from the Greek church, whenever they began to get strong in any particular section, the clergy of the es.ablished church complained of them and had their community removed to some remote province in the empire, which their intelligence and industry soon developed into productivness, and increased the imperial revenues. They hav always been noted as patriotic people, and the czars hav always been favorably disposed toward them on account of their loyalty and thrift, and their good example wherever they went.

A MANIA for the erection of statues of dimensions such as the world has never seen before seems to hav seized on the two rival countries of the continent. The statue of the Republic in the Place du Chateau d'Eau was displayed to public view on Saturday amid the rejoicings of the citizens of Paris, and in a few weeks the enormous figure of Germania, which is being erected in honor of the victories of 1870 and 1871, on the Niederwald, overlooking the Rhine, will be unveiled in the presence of the emperor. Both of them, however, will be dwarfed by the huge statue of Liberty, which, through the generous contributions of the French nation, will be presented in a short time to the Americans. This will be at least 150 feet in hight, and it will stand upon a pedestal of the same hight at the entrance of the harbor of New York, to welcome emigrants to their new home.—Pall Mall Gazette.

AN exchange says Beecher is color blind and cannot tell a red stocking from a blue one. That must be a very serious affliction for a man in his business.——Bradlaugh, the member of the English parliament, who has had so much trouble in the past few years to hold his seat in that body, now proposes to effect an entrance by an injunction. Brad. is a plucky fellow.——A Mormon bishop who organized a divorce court of his own by placing dynamite under the bed occupied by three of his wives, is to hav his conduct inquired into by a church committee. Even in Utah the church attempts to control a man's amusement.——The New Orleans Picayune says "it is a strange providence that blows down a church and lets a shot tower stand." The editor of the Picayune has evidently never attended a church fair and paid five dollars for a colored china doll. A shot tower never plays that kind of a game on its congregation. —Theologian of Peck's Sun.

THE announcement made by Mr. Beecher that he does not believe in the fall of Adam, and in the inheritance of guilt, is less interesting in itself than as the prelude or introduction to the subsequent confession of disbelief which we may expect in logical sequence. The rejection of the doctrin of the fall and of inherited guilt naturally dispenses with any necessity for an atonement or for a divine redeemer. If we reject the idea of vicarious sin we must also reject the idea of vicarious atonement, and the whole divine element in the mission of Christ disappears at once. Such a form of unbelief is easy to understand, but it is not easy to understand why one who thus unceremoniously rejects the divine mission of Christ should take the trouble of calling himself "a Christian Evolutionist." There would be as much meaning in the words if, under the same circumstances, he should call himself a Christian pagan. It would be more seemly if those who wholly repudiate the authority of Christ would also repudiate the name of Christian altogether.—New York World.

ON the popular habit of ridiculing science, among those whose religious belief conflicts with its conclusions, Professor Tyndall writes as follows in the Contemporary Review: "Shafts of sarcasm without number hav been launched at the Royal Society! It was perfectly natural for persons who had little taste for scientific inquiry and less knowledge of the metheds of nature to feel amused, if not scandalized, by the apparently insignificant subjects which sometimes occupied the scientific mind. They were not aware that in science the most stupendous phenomena often find their suggestion and interpretation in the most minute—that the smallest laboratory fact is connected by indissoluble ties with the grandest operations of nature. Thus the iridescences of the common soap-bubble, subjected to scientific analysis, hav emerged in the conclusion that stellar space is a plenum, filled with a material substance capable of transmitting motion with a rapidity which would girdle the equatorial earth eight times in a second, while the tremors of this substance in one form constitute what we call light, and, in all forms, constitute what we call radiant heat. Not seeing this connection between great and small, not discerning that as regards the illustration of physical principles there is no great and no small, the wits, considering the small contemptible, permitted sarcasm to flow accordingly. But these things hav passed away, while the ridicule and intolerance from which she once suffered are now, I think unfairly, sometimes laid to the charge of science."

CASES of intuition, it appears, do sometimes occur, or else human testimony isn't worth much. The following story is told in the Cincinnati News-Journal: "A gentleman who has given much thought and enthusiastic investigation to psychological questions, speaking of intuitions, told me the truth of these mysterious promptings—usually supposed to be confined to women—had been continually forced upon him in various ways, and as an instance thereof he related the following incident: 'I recently began an article in which I wished to introduce an account of Dr. ——'s experiments relating to the subject I was writing about, but could not remember the nature of his experiments with sufficient accuracy to warrant a description of them. Rather annoyed at my forgetfulness, I wandered aimlessly down stairs to a front room and sat there trying to recall the account which I had read some months previous. In this condition I suddenly saw, mentally, a large cabinet photograph of a friend, which I had lost for about a week. On looking casually before me I noticed a large encyclopedia on the table, with one end of the same photograph, which was mounted on a large oval card, protruding from between the leaves. Opening the book my attention was called to an illustration on the page upon which lay the photograph. The illustration was that of the identical apparatus with which Dr. —— conducted his investigations. Appended was a full account of the same. I had never seen the inside of that book before, but now remember having slipped the photograph into it for safe keeping. I should call this simply a coincidence had I not had too many like experiences to think it a matter of chance. I believe intuition is a natural faculty, and capable of high cultivation. I suppose it might be called natural clairvoyance, and think the innate power of intuition makes frequent attempts to attract our attention, and is often entirely neglected.'"

News of the Week.

THE cholera has claimed nearly nine hundred victims in Egypt within one week.

IT is reported in Rome that the pope is drafting an encyclical letter against divorce.

AN explosion in a coal mine at Caltanisetta, Sicily, last week, killed thirty-five miners out of seventy.

A LOT of factory girls in Trenton, N. J., last week hanged in effigy an editor who had traduced their character.

CETYWAYO, king of the Zulus, was killed in a recent battle between his own forces and those of another African nation.

MANY manufacturers in this city hav yielded to the terms of the striking cloak-makers, and hav signed the demands made by the employees.

SIXTY-FIVE persons are reported to hav lost their lives by falling through a rotten wharf at Tivoli Maryland, into the Chesapeake Bay, on the 24th inst.

INFORMER CAREY, of the Irish Invincibles, implicated in the Phenix Park, Dublin, murders, has been shot and killed at Port Elizabeth, South Africa.

BETWEEN three and four thousand lives were lost in an earthquake shock on the island of Ischia, near Naples, last Sunday. Many more were injured.

THE Brotherhood of Telegraphers is still on strike, and the telegraph companies continue to hold out. Railroad operativs are to be ordered out by the fraternity.

NINETEEN persons were killed and thirteen wounded in a railway accident at Carlyon, Orleans county, N. Y., during a thunder storm on the night of Friday, the 27th.

EX-STATE TREASURER POLK, of Tennessee, has been sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment for embezzling public money, and to pay a fine of $366,000, the amount which he stole.

CAPT. WEBB, the English swimmer, was killed last week in an attempt to swim the rapids and whirlpool at Niagara. His body was found six miles below the place where he disappeared.

SENOR DON FRANCISCO BARCA, Spanish minister to the United States, shot and killed himself in his rooms in the Albemarle Hotel last Sunday morning. No cause for the act has as yet been discovered.

THIRTY thousand persons from this vicinity visited Rockaway last Sunday. As many more went to Coney Island, and twelve thousand were at Glen Island. The shrine cannot compete with the brine in summer time.

THE Catholic bishops in Germany hav begun to use the powers granted them under the provisions of the government's church bill recently passed. They hav ordered all vicars and candidates for the priesthood to return to Prussia.

THE Rev. Mr. Tighe, of New York city, has been arrested at the instance of a member of his church. He is charged with conspiring with the member's wife to get him (the member) into prison. Ministers fool too much with family matters.

A NEW weapon of warfare called the multi-charge gun has been invented. A portion of the powder lodged in chambers along the bore of the gun explodes after the passage of the shot. It is claimed that fifty per cent is added to the force of the charge.

A DARING attempt at highway robbery was made last Saturday on the cashier of the Orange, N. J., National Bank. Three men entered the car with him, struck him on the head with a piece of lead pipe, and attempted to snatch from him a satchel containing $12,000. He succeeded in retaining his grip on the satchel, and the thieves were arrested. One of them is an ex-policeman who was suspended from the force a few years since for complicity in the robbery of the Manhattan Bank of this city.

Communications.

Radicalism in England.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Many thousands of the readers of The Truth Seeker, although they are generally very intelligent people, are more or less ignorant of what is going on in England in the way of Freethought effort. The British Isles are the fatherland of most of our American citizens. It was in England where the great battle which truth is now waging against the falsehoods of the church began. Voltaire, in his struggle for the freedom of the human intellect against the cruel despotism of the crown and miter in France, got aid and comfort by his visit to England and his conference with the Freethinkers of that country. The church of England, which is supported at the public expense, and which is as much a part of the constitution and government as the army and the judiciary, embraces in its priesthood thousands of men, more or less educated, who resort to this calling merely for the sake of a living. The zeal of these men for the church, therefore, is prompted mainly by a love of bread and butter, and not because they hav any faith in the church's creed. One-half the English people are dissenters from the established church, and maintain their own clergy. These are more entitled to respect because of their sincerity. And both together, including also the Catholics, are the organized force with which the Radicals are now at war. Besides these there is a large class of politicians who are secretly Infidel to all the claims of the church, and spell the word "God" with a little g, but who, nevertheless, do not feel called upon to identify themselvs with the Radicals, and think, upon the whole, that for restraining the turbulent masses there must be a religion supported by law, which has a hell in it, and a devil going about among wicked people as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. This class is of no account whatever in the struggle now going on. They are, activly, neither for the Radicals nor against them, but for themselvs. Their indifferentism and selfishness are as hateful to the one belligerent as the other, for in a controversy between right and wrong, truth and falsehood, all neutrals, if they be sane, are contemptible.

The Radicals in England are divided in sentiment, just as they are in this country, and on similar issues. Charles Bradlaugh, the editor-in-chief of the National Reformer, and three times elected to a seat in Parliament, which the Tories and weak-kneed Liberals will not allow him to occupy, because of his religious opinions, published an edition several years ago of a book called "Fruits of Philosophy," written by an American physician more than half a century since, in which he taught the doctrin that the number of children in a family was a matter within the control of parents. The working classes of England swarm with population, who grow up in ignorance and vice, steadily increasing the poor and criminal rates of the country. Even so long ago as 1798 the Rev. Malthus, a Church of England minister, seeing that the increase of population was greater than the means of subsistence afforded by the soil, sounded the alarm and published a book on this branch of political economy, in which he suggested means for correcting the evil of our population, such as a delay of marriage or a total abstention therefrom, which, although great evils of themselvs, were not so great as those which result from an excess of population. An American author, Mr. George, has, I think, proved in his "Progress and Poverty," which every one ought to read, that Malthus was mistaken in his facts, and that the earth never would refuse to sustain any population that might be born on it if it were occupied and cultivated as it ought to be. In the "Fruits of Philosophy," which, like Malthus's book, is a work on the science of political economy, the author suggests methods by which population can be effectually controled, as it is in France, without injuring either the health or the morals of the parties concerned. This book was issued from the publishing house of which Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant constitute the firm.

Mrs. Besant is the wife of the Rev. Besant, who because she outgrew the musty old creed and popish mummeries of the Church of England, made her life so uncomfortable as to necessitate divorce. Availing himself of the barbarous laws which took the poet Shelley's child from him because his metaphysical ideas of God did not conform to the pueril conceptions of the church, this bigoted clergyman, instead of being proud of such a wife and following her lead, took away her children and drove her to the necessity of supporting herself. This she is abundantly able to do; for there is no woman in England or in any other country who has a finer mind, a better education, and who can write and lecture in an abler manner than Mrs. Besant. When prosecuted jointly with Mr. Bradlaugh for publishing "Fruits of Philosophy," she defended herself in the courts, and, by her legal knowledge and acumen, secured the admiration of both the bench and the bar. Of course the church, which is a kennel for breeding the meanest kinds of dogs, put her hounds upon her track. But her character is so lofty that she commands the respect of the British public and pursues the course she has marked out for herself regardless of all opposition.

As "Fruits of Philosophy" was written half a century and more before the microscope in the hands of Haeckel and other eminent physiologists had advanced the science of embryology to its present condition, Mrs. Besant, availing herself of the new discoveries made in that line, published a hand-book on the subject of population for circulating among the class of people where knowledge was most needed. This pamphlet, while it serves the purposes of political economy on a large scale, is adapted by its wise simplicity and cheapness to reach the masses, where the evils to be remedied prevail, and has gone through several large editions. It teaches that the limitation of the number of children in a family is entirely within control, and that the old idea that God, by a special creation, sends children into the world, and may be expected to send food also to feed them, is a false and mischievous superstition. Multitudes of English families, made wise by this book, bless Mrs. Besant as their greatest benefactor. But as the method of improving the human race by the process of evolution is slow, and as the English mind is essentially stolid and stupid, Mrs. Besant's fame as a philanthropist and political economist will hav to be posthumous. When she shall hav moldered into dust, and when England shall hav felt the beneficent effect of her efforts, the descendants of the men who now malign her will perhaps build a monument to her memory. For it seems to hav been the fate of all reformers, hitherto, Garrison alone accepted, to be opposed and slandered while living and to be canonized after they are dead.

There is a class of persons, men and women, who, to use a Scotch phrase, "hav taken a sconner" at the whole subject of sex. To see them raise their upper lip and expose their canine teeth when anything of the kind is mentioned in their presence, you would suppose they were exceptions to the general rule, and had been miraculously conceived, like the child of the Virgin Mary; or had been born like Minerva, when she sprung forth, matured and panoplied, from the brain of Jupiter; or, if humble in their origin, had been found by some doctor or nurse, in a radish bed in their mother's garden. The way in which the all-wise and holy God has ordained for perpetuating the races of men, animals, and plants on the earth these ladies and gentlemen consider to be impure and abominable, and any allusion to such a distasteful subject is deemed a sign of coarseness, if not of moral obliquity. A gentleman who belongs to this class of exceedingly proper men has published an edition of Shakspere's plays from which he has expurgated all "indelicate" passages. Even the beautiful allusion of Shylock, in "The Merchant of Venice," to the Bible account of the way Jacob increased his share of his father-in-law's flock is eliminated; and the great "Poet of Nature" is throttled when he attempts to speak of one of Nature's most wonderful phenomena. The young persons for whose sake the sacred text of the poet is tampered with are sure, however, to find out the fact, and to go to the "Index Expurgatorius," and there read over the prohibited passages five times for once they would hav read them had they not been expurgated. The moment you shamefacedly cover up a passage in an author alluding to natural phenomena you awaken the curiosity of the reader, and he is never satisfied till he reads it a dozen times to see why it was expurgated.

Sex is the most universal and wonderful fact in all-creating nature. It reigns in the animal and vegetable kingdoms, and but for it the globe on which we dwell would soon become as lifeless as the moon is said to be. Even in the infinitesimal atoms of matter, a couple of able thinkers hav lately originated, or revived, the theory that sex prevails, and that life is generated and perpetuated by the constant recurrence of love and marriage between them. If, then, procreation is the grand law and purpose of all living beings, how profane it is in those who taboo the subject as odious and abominable! I suspect that many—not all—who loathe it as a topic of discussion hav been guilty some time in their lives of a shameful indulgence of the amatory instinct, and are now haunted by a remembrance of the fact. Others, knowing that they liv in a world of shams and hypocrisies, where tinsel can be palmed off upon the ignorant and credulous as fine gold, are constantly breaking over their professed code of morals, and cover up their transgressions by seeming to be excessivly pure and holy. I know of such a one—a bachelor clergyman of an orthodox church, who, like his great exemplar, Anthony Comstock, goes into spasms and holy wrath against "obscenity" in his pulpit on Sundays, but keeps in his trunk a choice selection of French pictures of the most lascivious kind, which he gloats over in private, and sometimes exhibits to those of his congregation who like to see such things. History tells us of others of this class, men and women, who, having exhausted the powers of their manhood and womanhood by illicit indulgence in their youth, compound with the devil and their own consciences, by turning monks and nuns for the rest of their lives, and denouncing the whole subject of sex as impure.

But there is another class of persons who think that everything which is natural is pure, and that it is mock, and not real, modesty which leads them to ignore the subject of sex. The women of this class tell no lies to their children about the way they are brought into existence; but, without allowing them to hear the subject coarsely alluded to by the vulgar, prepossess their minds with the truth by explaining to them, as they are able to comprehend, scientifically and physiologically, the whole process of generation among human beings, the lower animals, and plants, from beginning to end. They believe that the great preservativ of a young man's chastity in heart, speech, and behavior, is his mother's explanation to him of the mystery of sex and generation, so far as it is yet understood. When he brings home to his own consciousness that he was begotten of his parents by an act of holy love; that he lay in his mother's womb for months, drawing his very being from her blood, and that he was ushered into this breathing world at the risk of her life, you need not hide obscene books and pictures from him. He instinctivly loathes them because they are an insult to the sex of his mother. This class of people plant themselvs on the absolute holiness of sex. They would scatter scientific knowledge on the subject everywhere, because knowledge is the parent of all good, while ignorance is the prolific mother of all evil. The very fact that all-creating nature, whom we call God, has ordained sex, and made its functions the only means of perpetuating all living beings, proves that it is holy. And it is one of the counts in the bill of indictment we bring against the church that she has blasphemed God, and injured mankind, by dishonoring sex, and love, and marriage; and inculcating upon her victims the abominable lie that chastity—by which they mean merely abstaining from marriage—is a more holy condition of life than husband, and wife, and children, all bound together by the holy ties of blood and affection, and making home the dearest spot on earth.

Yet this subject was the rock on which the Radicals of this country split, weakening their power—small enough at best—and subjecting themselvs to the taunts of their enemies, the Pharisees. That infamous scoundrel, Comstock, aided by the equally infamous Cook, the spawn of a church whose fornications and adulteries are constantly obtruding themselvs in all their odious details on the public attention through the press, started the mad-dog cry against the Radicals, and charged them with circulating impure literature through the mails! There was only one way to meet this vile slander gotten up by these two agents of the church. It was the way the Abolitionists, fifty years ago, met similar slanders which the church heaped upon them—by trampling them into the dust, and treating them with scorn and contempt. But Mr. Abbot, who was our leader when Comstock sprung his trap upon us, tampered with the villain; and after rendering invaluable services to the cause as an editor, and as the founder of the Liberal League, turned against us, and afterward did his best to destroy the work of his own hands. He made charges against his old associates and co-workers which they hav never forgiven, and which they never will, nor ought to, forgiv.

In England the same dispute arose, and similar parties were formed, on the propriety of publishing a politico-economical work on the population question, simply because it involved the subject of sex, Mr. George Holyoake representing the prudery and miss-nancyism of England on the one hand, and Charles Bradlaugh representing the sound philosophy and patriotism of that country on the other. I hav had in my archives for several years a piece of poetry on the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary, which was written, set to music, and often sung by Mr. Holyoake in order to break down, by the legitimate weapon of ridicule, the colossal humbug which is a fundamental article of the Christian faith, that a woman could be the mother of a family of children and remain a virgin all her life. The poem is not equal to Lord Byron's poetry, but with Mr. Holyoake's permission and Mr. Abbot's consent, and not otherwise, I was willing to hav it published in the Index, so that the American Radicals could see and understand the true inwardness of this gentleman's new-born zeal in behalf of clean speech. This is all the more in point now, since in the editorial notes in the last Truth Seeker you say that Mr. Holyoake has refused to sign the petition to the government asking for the release of Mr. Foote from prison, and giving as a reason that Foote, in ridiculing certain passages in the Bible, has "committed an outrage on the faith of Christians." Tyndall, Huxley, Spencer, and many others like them—men who never saw their way clear to pollute their lips with ribald jokes about the immaculate conception—hav asked for the pardon of Foote, who was sent to prison by Judge North for doing precisely what George Holyoake did; but Mr. Holyoake votes that Foote shall remain in jail until he has paid the uttermost farthing!

I think, Mr. Editor, you are mistaken in your theory of accounting for this strange fact. It is not the miserable pay he receives from the government which has bribed Mr. Holyoake into treason to the cause of Freethought. You must go deeper, and further back, for the cause which has produced this humiliating effect. It is the jealousy and chagrin he has always felt at seeing the prominence given to Bradlaugh, who, a younger man than himself, and endowed with superior qualifications, has been forced by circumstances into a position which has given him not only national but world-wide renown as a leader of the Freethought forces in England. Mr. Holyoake is a strong man with his pen, and has done good work in battering down the walls of the church's superstition. He felt, therefore, that he ought to be looked up to as a leader. Envy and ambition are two of the cursedest and meanest passions of the human soul, and hav often hindered the cause of progress. Instead of rejoicing, as others do in England, that the sacred cause of Freethought has found such a powerful and accomplished advocate as it has in Bradlaugh, Mr. Holyoake has secretly rejoiced, as much as old Newdegate, at the success of the tories and the church in keeping him out of Parliament, because it would increase his power and prominence a hundredfold, and eclipse all other lesser lights The case is paralleled, as already hinted, in this country. We all remember how our own Achilles, because the Liberal League would not re-elect him and his four nominees as officers, went sulking to his tent, and actually joined Comstock and Joe Cook in charging the League with favoring the spread of obscene literature through the mails! Mr. Holyoake is only repeating that treason and folly. VINDEX.

The Supremacy of Reason.

I do not purpose to prolong the controversy between myself and Mr. Andrews, because it would be useless where such profound differences of opinion occur; and the question is not one of fact, but of fundamental assumptions concerning the foundation of belief. I do not wish to deter any one from accepting the philosophy of Mr. Andrews, if such philosophy appears to them the best. What I want is that they should distinctly understand to what they assent when they become the adherents of Universology.

Mr. Andrews accuses me of misunderstanding him. Possibly I do. But it may be that he also misunderstands me, for I notice that he accuses me of bringing in the old-time error of "Intuition," and yet when I state what I actually mean by "scientific intuition," he accepts it as an admirable statement of a Universological doctrin. So it seems that, after all, we agree on that point. It is very easy to misunderstand on account of the vagueness of language; and it does not show a lack of judgment that one misinterprets an opponent now and then; and if Mr. Andrews tumbles into a mistake concerning my ideas, assuredly I may be forgiven for the same offense in regard to his distinctions.

I think Mr. Andrews has hardly kept to the point in this discussion, which is concerning the origin of knowledge and not concerning its subjectiv classification and distribution after the sensation has once been given. In regard to the mental activity of man upon the basis furnished by the material universe there is but little difference between Mr. Andrews and myself. When it comes to purely subjectiv synthesis Mr. Andrews is a master-mind indeed, and what he has accomplished in this realm is of universal importance, and I do not think that any one would giv a greater meed of gratitude than myself to this surpassing logician. Mr. Andrews has been and ever will be one of my chief teachers in the subjectiv interpretation of the universe, and I wish it to be thoroughly understood that when once the objectiv has passed into the subjectiv and the human mind begins to play its part and mold the chaotic material, the method of Mr. Andrews is infinitly helpful and suggestiv, and flings a flood of light upon our mental action even to its subtlest wave of reflection.

The point of difference is not as to the subjectiv treatment of material sensation, but as to the fundamental relation of mind and matter. Mr. Andrews claims that he is not a transcendentalist according to the old style. I will admit that, and will not call Universology transcendentalism, but let it stand by itself as a new method of dealing with the universe; but at the same time I affirm that it is not a scientific dealing with the universe. It may be more sensible than the olden philosophy, but it has not come down to the hard-pan of science.

The old transcendental position is this, that mind comes first and makes matter. Matter is simply the shadow or manifestation of mind, and has no independent existence. It is an appearance and nothing more; the reality is the infinit soul or reason. The material universe is but a garment with which the all-pervading mind clothes itself.

The scientific position is the exact opposit of this, namely, that matter is the original substance and that mind is the result of certain conditions of this substance. There is no other conclusion to which science can come; there is not the slightest evidence that mind has ever existed apart from matter. Giv certain conditions of matter and you hav mind. Take away these conditions and the mind ceases. This is the universal testimony of human experience. Matter exists in a thousand forms through infinit reaches of space, absolutely independent of mind. In itself it exists, but mind does not; before it can exist there must be matter. Therefore science is driven to the conclusion that mind is not an entity, but a process—a process beginning and ending with certain movements of matter. Destroy those movements and you destroy mind, while you cannot destroy a particle of matter. Matter, then, is eternal, and mind is but a part of its changes.

Universology takes neither one nor the other of these radically opposit positions, but a "betwixt and a between" position, that is, it affirms the equal eternity of mind and matter. Matter does not produce mind and mind does not produce matter. The life of each is in itself, and they simply act together in time and space, commingling with an inscrutable and wondrous affinity. Both are entities, original causes in the infinit universe of life, and human consciousness is the "bright consummate flower" of their blending activity.

I think that Mr. Andrews will accept this as a fair statement of the fundamental affirmation of Universology concerning mind and matter. It is a beautiful doctrin, I admit, far better than the old transcendentalism; and if one wishes to believe it I will not bid him nay. I will not argue the question, but I still say that this is not the affirmation of science, and therefore Universology is not science. I desire those who claim that Mr. Andrews has the best of the argument, to know just what is the gist of that argument and to what they commit themselvs when they accept Universology as the explanation of the universe. They commit themselvs to a most tremendous assumption, namely, that mind is equally unbeginning and unending with matter. If one delights himself with this belief, all right; but science repudiates it, equally with the old transcendentalism.

And this brings me to a final word of explanation as to the "Supremacy of Reason." Mr. Andrews hints that I am not committed to the supremacy of reason and therefore am no true rationalist. Mr. Andrews's term, "the supremacy of reason," conveys again the deep point of difference between our respectiv views, for I do not believe in the supremacy of reason as Mr. Andrews understands "reason," and THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Investigator, and scientific rationalists, hav never affirmed any such supremacy. Reason is not supreme; it is the material universe that is supreme, and the human reason must submit itself every time to this universe exactly as it is, and no "supremacy of reason" can make it other than it is. The reason cannot go forth and construct this universe after some pet theory. This is the old transcendental method. The philosopher reasoned out some "perfect universe," and then, he said, "the real universe must be exactly like this." This was his "supremacy of reason," which is as essentially untruthful as the "supremacy of revelation," and against such sorts of reasoning science sets itself as rigidly as against any so-called "revelation."

However, Mr. Andrews's "supremacy" is not quite as bad as this. He believes in conforming to the outward to a certain extent at least. Still, however, he is not a scientific rationalist.

How does science use reason? Not to bolster up any preconceived notions, but to discover the actual facts of nature and life. It uses reason as the humble interpreter of the universe. Reason must always depend on fact; therefore how can it be supreme? It is the fact that is supreme. The man of science most deeply recognizes this relation of human reason to what is. He does not reason out what he thinks ought to be; he observes and studies and reflects on nature itself, and however disagreeable the conclusion, he accepts it. Man's reason is the loyal servant of nature, and only by the most absolute submission to nature can reason achieve any triumph whatsoever; and in order to do this it must advance from fact to fact, and it cannot transcend the facts given to it in experience.

Mr. Andrews's supremacy of reason is not this; it is something vastly different. As I hav said before, he assumes the equal eternity of mind and matter; that is, back of the material universe there is an "infinit reason." The material universe is the analog of this infinit reason, an outward picture of it, we might say, in time and space. That is, the Cosmos is the Logos or word of this unbeginning and unending mind. Between the two there is the most exact and wondrous unity. They play and interplay with each other in perfect melody of adaptation. Mind eternally echoes matter, and matter eternally echoes mind. Like the shell upon the sea-shore, matter breathes to the intent soul all the music of the infinit ocean of mind, and mind is but the pre-existent harmony of the beautiful shapes of matter. The ideal and the real, the spiritual and the material, two eternally independent existences thus blend together; and the logical outcome is what? Why, that if by any process of logic you can grasp the secret of the "infinit reason," you can certainly know the material universe, not by experiment, as science declares, but by a transcendent logic; for, if the outward universe is the analog of an infinit mind, if you comprehend the mind, then, by what Mr. Andrews calls the "Science of Analogy," you can comprehend its analog. The method of Universology is this, to get at the "infinit reason" and through that to the material universe. Now science will not deal with the universe in any such way. It deals directly with the universe through the senses. It does not admit the existence of an infinit reason. It declares positivly that there is no higher reason, no greater intelligence, than man himself. Mr. Andrews assumes an "infinit reason," and that we can pierce to its depths, and, having done so, the material universe will be a map before us, for it is but a reflex of this mind from whose center we look forth. All this is very pretty. It sounds royal; it is fascinating, and it crowns our poor, struggling, and oftentimes mistaken reason with an astonishing potency; but it is a dream and nothing more. There is no proof of this "infinit reason," and, therefore, we cannot commune with it, even though it master the "everlasting universe of things." Alas! 'tis true, and pity 'tis true, there's no such supremacy of reason. We must still struggle on. We are still liable to mistakes. We must learn and unlearn continually. We must keep on guessing half the time. Slowly and painfully must we acquire the certainty of truth. Many and many a time must reason submit to a most ugly and humiliating fact. We might like to hav an "infinit reason" to help us on our way, but there is no such thing. There is no greater reason than our limited human faculties can furnish. Through this we must understand nature as best we can. Science can giv no such gorgeous promises as Universology. It cannot say, "I will enable you to pierce to the center of things and from that dazzling point unfold every secret of the universe." Science has no such "reason," no such "logic," at its command. Therefore it must advance by infinit experimentation and by constant submission to the order of the material universe.

I do not think I hav misstated the position of Mr. Andrews and his followers. Does he not affirm the equal eternity of mind and matter—that mind and matter are both infinit and analogs one of the other? and, therefore, if by any process of logic one can understand the mind, so far he can understand matter, because it is the expression or "word" of that mind.

Universology is a most magnificent dream of the "supremacy of reason," but I affirm that this is not science. Science studies matter directly. It denies that mind is equally eternal with matter. It denies that mind is an entity, but affirms that it is a process finite and temporary and dependent on matter.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Assumptions.

Gen. Jackson had an adage printed at the head of his favorit journal, "The world is governed too much." May we not affirm with equal emphasis, the world believes to much? Credulity has done and is still doing a world of mischief. It is the inlet, as Shakspere expressed it, of a sea of troubles, far more dangerous and destructiv than Infidelity. This takes the wise precaution to bar out the applicant till he submits proof that he is worthy; that admits him without proof. The one element of the mind is cautious and safe; the other is careless, and passes propositions unproven and often absurd. The one, like the faithful sentinel, must hav the watchword, and thus keeps out all enemies; the other opens the flood-gates to deluge the precious interests it is his sworn duty to guard.

Such an incautious, loose mind diseases itself, like the unhygienic glutton, gulping down adulterated food, and at times absolute poison. The mind, to be kept pure, healthful, and vigorous, must hav pure pabulum well masticated and digested. Hence its first duty is to reject spurious articles, select and wisely use the genuin.

No longer than yesterday a lady of mind and education above the average remarked at our dinner table, "They say that raspberry tea is good for cancer in the stomach." When asked whom she meant by her pronoun "they," she perceived the careless assumption, and that she had allowed the idea to creep into her mind, not only without reason, but even destitute of authority, since "they" meant the mass of "ignoramuses."

Assumptions are of close kin to superstitions. These lead to cruel, bloody persecutions, of which the Inquisition is a dreadful example. Then, if we would be Liberal and free from the intolerance converting, or rather perverting, our kind into fiends, we need to hold our minds in balance like just scales, never preponderating without evidence. Ignore assumptions; call for proof. To do so over a true proposition the delay may do no harm, while to receive false propositions must result in disaster. Especially will this rule work well in the extensiv domain of inconsistent notions. Since the laws of nature are invariable and in perfect harmony, all at variance with this grand code may be regarded as not only doubtful, but false. To say the least, a reasonable presumption should at once confront such ideas, demanding proof. While too many of the unthoughtful seem more ready to receive notions conflicting with experience and common sense, the thoughtful, honest truth seekers prove all things, and therefore hold fast to that which is good. W. PERKINS.

Prohibition.

In your issue of the 16th instant, Mr. Walker has written a reply to statements of mine contained in previous numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I am highly pleased with the effort made; and the honorable adherence to the subject in controversy, coupled with the total absence of discursiv personality, is especially gratifying.

His reply to my definition of "right" is all that could be asked, even of a colleag in discussion, and more than I was expecting from the chief opponent in this controversy.

In support of the statement of an opponent in a discussion that has not been remarkable for the quantity of the "milk of human kindness" it contained, a man who can write, "No Liberal, burdened with a sense of the responsibility resting upon him as an apostle of the new faith, could conscientiously do, or advise another to do, that which would diminish the sum of human happiness," must be a truth seeker in the fullest sense of the name.

Immediately following the above, we hav this: "Now all this is within the sphere of morals, with which law should hav absolutely nothing to do." The last clause contains the premis of much of Mr. Walker's argument. We hav not at any time accepted this as true, and Mr. Walker must know that we will not accept it upon mere assertion.

I shall not here discuss this assumption. Mr. Walker has given us the same affirmation in different forms, repeatedly, and in my article of April 14th I negatived it with a mere assertion.

As it is peculiarly his "chicken," I wait to giv him the first picking.

A special use is made of the words "free" and "freedom," which I cannot pass unnoticed.

"When a man is free" (from the restraint of civil law) "only to do right" (according to the moral law) "he is not free" (under the moral law) "at all; he does not do right" (according to the moral law). Is this what is meant? If so, it is false upon its face, for it puts man in bondage to a law, the conditions of which he fulfils. If it means that, "When a man is free" (from the restraint of civil law) "only to do right" (according to the standard of civil law) "he is not free" (under the moral law) at all, he does not do right (under the moral law), it is true only when the civil standard of right is below the moral standard of right. If the civil law be up to the standard of the moral law, the "man" is free and does do right.

I presume objection will be made here to so much law, but after the protracted effort to square ourselvs on the word "right," which effort Mr. Walker so generously culminates in his last article, I wish to be careful about the introduction in this discussion of America's pets, "free" and "freedom." We must cut close to the "scratch" here, even though the grain is cross.

"When he has a right only to go east, he has not one iota of freedom," contains implicitly the idea of duress.

The same idea has been pushed into this discussion of prohibition by several parties. The idea is not pertinent to the question. The subject of controversy being the equity of a law, the individual under the law is not in duress, and has an "iota of freedom," because he can exercise his individuality in violating the law. That this is true one needs giv no special proof, as we hav but to open our eyes to see this "iota of freedom" exercised every day and in every land, in the violation of every law, natural as well as civil.

"He [I] does right only when he has the right (privilege, power) to choose the wrong way . . . and yet goes the right way." Argumento ipissimo, then. He does wrong only when he has the privilege or power to choose the right way, and yet goes the wrong way. This is a beautiful abstraction, and I accept its truth freely.

Man has the power or privilege to choose either the right or the wrong way. This privilege or power of choice belongs to or is his individuality in nature. Without it man cannot be, and is not, subject to civil law. Take from man this power or privilege (right), and he at once ceases to be accountable under the law for his acts, because he is not responsible for the character of those acts. Man chooses, and the law holds him responsible for the character of his choice. Upon the verity of this postulate rests the entire structure of human jurisprudence. The object of law is to point out the "right way" for man to go, and the character of a law depends wholly upon whether the "way" it points out is right, which "way" is always that which adds to "the sum of human happiness."

Man's individual standard of morals may be higher or lower than the civil law. If his standard of right be higher, then the civil law that forces him to lower that standard forces him to lower his manhood, and is therefore pernicious; but if his individual standard of right be lower than that of the civil law, the civil law will elevate his manhood, and is therefore salutary.

To illustrate: Man's individual standard of morality once sanctioned the right (?) of conquest, the right to enslave his fellow, the right to imprison mind in that man-trap of the gods—flatteringly called "creed"—and the right to "take" as many wives as he chose and use them as his property; and the standard of civil law was lowered to the plane of this individuality.

Now there are in every country and among every people persons who assert their individual right (?) to these practices yet; but the standard of civil law has been and is being raised to a higher plane, occupied by a higher manhood, and is fast bringing the individuality of the lower plane into harmony with its elevated standard of right in these matters.

I hav not a word to say in defense of the "might of majorities" in the legislation and execution of law. History furnishes us cumulativ proof that majorities are fallible in these matters. Right, individual and collectiv, has been trampled upon by majorities, but he who reads the history of man from the genesis of time to the present must learn, if he reads understandingly, that minorities, even in governments like our own, can outrage every principle of right in the enactment and execution of pernicious laws.

A has the right—power, privilege—to choose to become an intelligent, pure, and honorable gentleman, and he has the right to choose to become a filthy, drunken animal. This A, then, stands before us a model of "individual sovereignty." In the first case let us presume that he chooses to become a "righteous" man, yet has not, as often happens to man, owing to his social, physical, and mental environments, the means or power to accomplish what he had the power to choose. His fellows now step forward and generously contribute the power which he individually lacks to gratify his choice, and make a man of him. This is fine, you will say. It adds to "the sum of human happiness," and we call it human charity.

In the second case let us presume that A chooses to become the opposit of a righteous man—a thing—and has, as very often happens to man, the power to accomplish the object of his choice.

His "fellows" now again step forward and generously take from him, or restrain him in the exercise of his power, and make a man of him.

Apropos de bottes, you may exclaim, for I hav nearly left the "individual A" out of the question entirely, and am, therefore, "but striking air" again.

To show you that it contains something more substantial than air, I will just here crack that little individual nut for you, by pointing to the fact that, in either case, the resultant product of this contact of the individual A with his "fellows" is a man in condition to add to "the sum of human happiness." He is not, perhaps, so fine a model of "individual sovereignty," as you would like, I admit, but he is quite the man human progress demands—a man who ego is not floating—a remove only from the animal, but finds its highest expression and occupies a position in the ranks of men.

Mr. Walker givs "an illustration or two to make clear" a distinction—a difference wide as the seas, which difference and distinction I apprehend. No one who has read my article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 14th can fail to see I fully "grasp."

It is no uncommon thing, though, for men is discussion to say, as Mr. Walker does, that the man who "grasps" the opposit side of a question in controversy has failed to apprehend the question in toto.

Mr. Walker much regrets to hav to say this to me. He needs not to do so, for, being the man which to him I seem to be, it is taken in the same gentlemanly spirit in which it is said. I hav, in controversy, taken the small doses of rhetoric before, and am, Brother Walker, fully reconciled to any disagreeable flavor they may hav in appearance.

It is my purpose in this discussion to maintain this distinction and difference. I hav objected from the very first to dignifying "personal right" at the expense of righteousness. It is like exchanging by weight jewels for sand. Man cannot afford it.

The "illustration or two," about which I am interrogated, are, in my judgment, far fetched. If working "in the field on a cold drizzly day" is in the same moral category as the liquor traffic, and Mr. Walker will show it, I will answer the question in the affirmativ. If the effect of his "reading the lightest kind of light literature" extends to "mental intoxication" and physical brutalization, I will affirm again.

The horizon of Mr. Walker, on the "sphere of morals," is either extended beyond its legitimate limits, or I am not sufficiently near the end of my journey "from Jerusalem to Damascus." His "logical deduction" from an expression of mine in a former article is, I think, rather strained, but as this article is already too long, I shall pass it; and as our natures will not allow us to differ at every point, I will also pass his two incarnations of the devil—"the liquor dealer and the priest."

Mr. Walker closes with the assertion: "Every argument brought forward to sustain the plea for the curtailment of man's physical liberties applies with even greater force in the domain of mental intoxication." If by "mental intoxication" he means honest, sober thought and its expression, I deny it; and I hav given in support of this denial these two affirmations:

First, There can be no personal crime, the influence of which does not extend beyond the corporal limits of the personality committing the crime.

Second, As la pure divine naturæ, there can be no mental crime, as thought or opinion cannot become criminal till crystallized by action, universal mental liberty is the personal right of all created intelligence.

Mr. Walker should giv us something in support of his assertion, if it be nothing more than an attempt to "shore the ballast" contained in the above.

In closing, I would call the attention of parties to this controversy, and of readers also, to the fact that in this and former articles I hav confined myself almost entirely to to the primary effects and bearings of the liquor traffic. If I hav failed, in any particular, to show that these furnish sufficient reason for the suppression of the traffic, you can easily make out the case by drawing on the "secondary effects," which Mr. Walker and others are so careful to say little about, or would hav us believe do not legitimately belong to a discussion of prohibition.

Oreana, Ill., June 20, 283. W. H. GANTZ

Hunting for People in the Grass.

Probably Mr. Andrews will not thank me for stirring up the gentlemen who do not like his style; however, I only wanted to indicate to THE TRUTH SEEKER, which kindly opens its columns to its readers for the expression of their opinions, that some of us do not regard Mr. Andrews as incomprehensible, and object to his being choked off. Of course, THE TRUTH SEEKER is not published especially for the men up a tree, like Mr. Andrews, nor for the men in the grass, whom Mr. Peck speaks for, but aims to please the different classes of its readers; and when it givs an editorial hint to its learned contributors to fire lower, it undoubtedly does so with a knowledge of the position of the majority of its readers, which is all right, and I only ask for a fair minority representation.

Mr. John Peck also indicates a preference for easy lessons, and quotes a little story from Captain Cook for my especial benefit, which is very kind of him. In his haste to turn my guns against myself he misquotes me, which is all right too. But when he says that Mr. Andrews is "half the time in a field where neither Mr. Craig nor anybody else can follow him," I must protest. Mr. Peck is mistaken by a large majority. Mr. Peck is at liberty to make such a statement as that regarding himself; I object to his making it for me, and I doubt whether he is authorized to make it for everybody else. My modesty of statement gave him some warrant for saying that I admitted inability to understand Mr. Andrews myself. I did not mean to convey quite so much as Mr. Peck assumes; set that down to the ambiguity of my style, and let me say that so far as I hav read Mr. Andrews I do not remember to hav struck anything I could not understand without much trouble—perhaps the hunting up of an unusual word. Mr. Andrews is a master of the English language, and writes it with an accuracy and clearness that leave no excuse for his being misunderstood by those who know the meaning of words; and in debate his clean-cut pronunciation and intelligent accent often add a new meaning and beauty to the words he uses by pointing out their derivation. He is obliged to use the language which belongs to the subjects he deals with. Perhaps Mr. Peck, who classes me with the Hurons because I did not claim to be familiar with all the special sciences and their nomenclature, will tell us how those sciences can be taught, discussed, classified, or systematized without using terms which "the plain people"—and that means forty-nine fiftieths of the population of this enlightened country—do not understand.

The plain people, whose claims to easy reading Mr. Peck urges, do not like a problem in Euclid as well as they do a chapter in one of Sylvanus Cobb's novels. They do not understand it as easily, yet, with all due respect to Mr. Peck, I will venture the opinion that the great mathematician would not hav obtained, nor deserved, the gratitude of the world in any greater degree had he devoted his talents to writing love stories of the "once upon a time a lone horseman" order.

I think the fact is that the people who do not understand Mr. Andrews do not, as a rule, try to. It requires a little effort sometimes, and most people are lazy in their thinking. It needs all the wholesome fear of paternal anger, the dread of disgrace, and the stimulus of future reward to keep the college boy at his studies, and as soon as he has finished the curriculum he proceeds to burn his books. Knowledge, like most useful thinks, is not easy to get, and the higher you climb the forbidden tree the harder it is to hang on. Mr. Andrews is, if not near the top, pretty well up in the higher branches, and it is neither easy to follow him nor fair to ask him to climb down within reach of the people in the grass.

People will differ regarding the practical value of some of Mr. Andrews's philosophical speculations, but that is not the point under discussion.

Mr. Peck cites Thomas Paine and D. M. Bennett as perspicuous writers whose example Mr. Andrews would do well to follow. The suggestion is not well considered. Thomas Paine and Mr. Bennett were levelers, not builders; they were revolutionists, not organizers. The business of Paine was to stir up rebellion, and the style he adopted, or that was natural to him, was admirably suited to his purpose. Mr. Andrews is an inventor, a discoverer, a systemizer, a builder, and the same method and tools which served the revolutionary purposes of Paine would be out of place in his work.

As to Mr. Bennett, I was not aware that he ever discovered a new truth or made any material contribution to science, or that he claimed to hav done so. He took up the questions of civil and religious liberty, which Voltaire, Paine, and others had ably discussed, restated them in plain language, and so reached a large class who probably never would hav drank at the fountain head. For that, and the heroism he displayed in maintaining his opinions against the persecutions of a differing majority, I honor him.

Mr. Peck attributes Mr. Bennett's influence to his being armed with the truth and speaking in plain language. These are great advantages, but, better than all, he was inspired by an honest heart. He offered the people wholesome truths in simple phrase, but back of those truths was a sturdy personal integrity which added weight to them. In all the splendid eulogies that hav been pronounced upon his memory, none do him greater honor than the simple statement that in his business relations his word was as good as his bond. The man who can defy the devil and boldly maintain his rights with the other party, yet is full of human sympathy, and scorns to do a mean act, has in him the stuff of which heroes are made, and of such is the kingdom of heaven. Possibly the monument committee, who propose to cover the old man's tomb with eulogies and quotations, could not do better than to confine their inscriptions to his name and date and the simple legend: "He was an Honest Man."

I believe Mr. Andrews is animated by the same sincerity of purpose and the same desire to benefit his race that characterized Mr. Paine and Mr. Bennett, and I am willing to hear him and to let him work out his problems in his own way.

Mr. Andrews's work—singularly enough in view of this charge of obscurity—is all in the direction of the simplification of knowledge. In language, which is the tool with which we dig, and in science and philosophy, which are the objects we seek, he aims to straighten the road and arrange the treasures so as to lessen the labor and increase the acquisitions of those who follow him; and for these labors he deserves our gratitude, whether we understand him fully or not.

Finally, I think the Hurons who listened respectfully to a speech which they supposed had some meaning, although they did not understand it, did themselvs more credit than the more civilized but less civil gentlemen who proceed to insult the speaker and say he does not know what he is talking about, because they don't know themselvs. D. W. Craig.

The Consolations of the New Faith.

From H. L. Green's Freethought Magazine.

The old theological faith of Christianity and the new scientific integration of humanity are now before the world to be tried upon their merits. The new religion may be fairly said to hav gained its foothold on the earth. Based upon the theory of law as against the old hypothesis of overruling will, the inference is unavoidable that the incoming of the new belief must mean the outgoing of the old. This conclusion will be conceded by millions who, on the ground of pure reason and as a mere matter of logic, will readily admit that they cannot place a good God back of a naughty world, nay, who will go further and confess with Job that they cannot by searching find out God at all. Still those very millions will for decades yet to come shrink instinctivly from what to them must seem the coldness, baldness, and sterility of the creed of Materialism. And such semi-believers will still stretch out their eager arms to hug the old and dear delusion of their waning faith. It is only we Liberals who, having pastured our souls in the green meadows and by the still waters of both integrations, can judge of the respectiv consolation each one proffers.

It is undeniable that for all mankind existence brings its corroding cares. Poverty pinches one, pain eats out the patience of another, disappointed love afflicts a third, while death stands ever by to point his arrows at the ones we hold most dear.

Beneath the load of troubles, such as these, the Christian in his trust could feel that under him were the everlasting arms of God, his father; that Christ, his elder brother, had suffered and died for him, and was ready to sympathize and save, while heaven ever opened its distant portals in the yonder land to free him not only from ills of earth, but the worse despairs of his imagined hell.

That all such solace must pass away as we become incorporated into the new regime is undeniable. And to those who still cling to the old shreds of superstition, the substitute that Liberalism offers will doubtless seem but giving stones for bread and thistles for grapes, but none the less hav these refreshments to us proved themselvs both meet and ample. Hard would it be for a Catholic to comprehend the ecstatic contentment of a Buddhist worshiper. Harder still for either of these to know the peace that comes of the new religion of science and humanity,

True it is that God for us has dissolved into the unknowable, but, as Goethe says, the heavens yet arch above us, the earth is still firm beneath our feet. while through cosmic emotion we sense a feeling of support, of rest and trust in the boundless flow of energy that ever persists through myriad correlations, and manifests itself to human minds in terms of law.

True it is that Christ has dwindled from his old divinity, to take his place among the great ideals of mankind, but we do not therefore lose Christ in the best of all his attributes, nay, rather, by his side we see arise for us as cheerers and exemplars, Mohammed, Buddha, Socrates, Confucius, and every great reformer of his respectiv time. And even had we no such saviors, still the race, the great collectiv man, livs on, daily dying, daily rising for the sake of every one of us, and ever giving us an object of existence, devotion to which must make our lives worth living. So sickness may take hold of us, want may send its bitterness, death may strike our loved ones, but over all of these misfortunes we can rise, and work, and hope, while striving earnestly to aid the cause of man and make the earth a happier home for him. True it is that proof of personal immortality is to most Freethinkers utterly without foundation, but that which is best and noblest in our natures cannot die except with the end of all humanity itself. John Brown's body may molder in the grave, but his soul goes marching on. This conviction that we shall liv in our children, liv in our friends, liv in the general influence of our career, is to those who hav experienced its alleviations reward sufficient. There is no record of pre-natal life; why, then, post-mortem life? And even if an after existence could be demonstrated, what is the proof of its superiority to this? Man under any faith is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward. Why long to risk the repetition of these troubles in another sphere?

To be at one with the eternal flow of nature, to repose in the security of changeless law, to bow in reverential awe before the infinit, to hav an object greater than and beyond ourselvs, to identify our life and fate with the past, the present, and the future of humanity, to experience the sense of obligation to the centuries gone, the sense of duty to the now and to the centuries to come, to feel ourselvs protected in and by the race, to be freed from the awful conflict betwixt the head and the heart, which Christianity entails, to revel in the inspirations of human art, because all art is human—these are but some of the consolations of the religion of science and humanity. They form the new enthusiasm of liberty, the modern salvation. Courtlandt Palmer.

A Doubtful Matter Set at Rest.

From the Sun.

To those whose minds are troubled with doubt as to whether or not there is a hell, the following from the British Naval Chronicle, 1807, may not be uninteresting:

An Abstract from the Journal of the Ship Sphinx, in the Year 1686, up the Straits:

May 12.—When we arrived at Manson we found three ships lying there from London, commanded by the Captains Bristol, Brown, and Burnaby, all going to Lipari to load.

May 13.—These three ships sailed in company with the Sphinx (wind N. W.) to Lipari, where they anchored in twelve fathoms water (wind S. S. W.)

May 14.—The four captains and a Mr. Bell, a merchant, went on shore upon the island of Mount Stromboli to shoot rabbits. About three o'clock they called their men together to go on board their respectiv ships, when, to their inexpressible astonishment, they saw the appearance of two men coming very swiftly through the air toward them; one of them appeared to be dressed in black and the other in gray clothes; they passed close by with the greatest rapidity, and, to their extreme consternation, descended, amid the burning flames, into the mouth of that dreadful volcano, Mt. Stromboli. At their entrance there issued tremendous noises; the flames rushed out most terribly, and Captain Burnaby cried out, "The Lord bless me! the foremost of the two, in black clothes, is old Mr. Booty, my next door neighbor at Wapping; but I do not know the other." He then desired them all to write down in their pocketbooks or note it on something, what they had then seen; which was immediately done by the three captains and Mr. Bell, and likewise entered in the different ships' journals at the same time.

When these four ships had taken in their loadings at Lipari, they sailed together for London. When they arrived in the River Thames, at Gravesend, Captain Burnaby's wife came from London to him. He then sent for the other three captains to come on board his ship to congratulate him on his wife's arrival. After they had thus met, a little conversation passed between them in the cabin, when Mrs. Burnaby suddenly started from her chair and said to her husband, "My dear, I'll tell you some news. Old Mr. Booty is dead!"

He directly answered, "We all saw him go into hell!" and told her what they had seen, as before related, to her serious alarm.

When Mrs. Burnaby had returned to London she went to an acquaintance and related this serious event—that her husband had seen the soul of Mr. Booty go into hell on the 14th of May last. This gentlewoman then mentioned the same to Mrs. Booty, widow of the deceased, who immediately took a writ out of the King's Bench Court in the penal sum of £1,000 damages, and arrested Capt. Burnaby for defamation upon her late husband's soul. Capt. Burnaby gave bond to stand trial; and he then took out of the Court of the King's Bench, in Westminister Hall, summonses for all the people that had attended the late Mr. Booty in his last sickness and at the time of his death; also the sexton of the parish who buried him, and the clothes he last wore before his sickness, he had taken care of, to be introduced in court on the day of trial.

When the trial came on the different persons, with the black clothes, were brought into court, and were there met by Capt. Burnaby, the captains of the other three ships, and the men of the four boats, with Mr. Bell, who were all on the said island of Stromboli and saw the two apparitions descend into the burning flames on the aforesaid 14th day of May last. Ten of the men of the boats made oath that the buttons on the coat which the apparition had on were like the one present, being molds covered with black cloth, the same sort that the coat was made of. The different persons who were with Mr. Booty at the time of his decease made oath that his death happened at three o'clock at after noon the 14th of May last, which was in the year 1686. The jury then asked the captain of the Sphinx if he knew Mr. Booty in his lifetime. He answered that he never saw him in his lifetime, but plainly observed the dress the apparition had on, which Mr. Burnaby said was Mr. Booty, in company with another, unknown.

The judge then spoke: "The Lord grant that I may never see such a sight as that, for I think it impossible for thirty men to be mistaken!"

The jury then gave their verdict against the widow Booty, plaintiff to pay the costs of the court. The foregoing are facts, extracted from the journal of the ship Sphinx's voyage up the Straits in the year 1686.

The above trial is now to be seen on the records of the Court of the King's Bench, in Westminster Hall—the Mrs. Booty, plaintiff, against Captain Burnaby, defendant.

These records are written on parchment in Latin, in the lawyer's old text-hand writing, and are kept in a glass case in the clerk's office, where, for the sum of one shilling, they may be seen by all whose doubt or curiosity may induce them to it. W. A. M.

A Letter from a Worker.

Mr. Editor: My bible (self-made, by the way) says, "Blessed are they who pay as they go, for they shall feel that one duty is well done." Began to fulfil its dictates in a letter to you weeks ago, but sickness compelled silence. There are 350,000 self-supporting women in Massachusetts, the majority of whom are suffering in different ways from the same cause as myself, viz., overwork. When the age of reason overcomes the age of faith, and we exchange the religion of the skies for earthly humanitarianism, there will be vastly more knowledge, more justice, and less suffering in the labor direction. If I were in the habit of worshiping men, I think I should canonize Felix Adler for his education of children to habits of thought and knowledge of industry. Truly he is a savior and is preaching salvation. What a pity for the claims of Christianity that Jesus was not equally wise! If Adler's work is a sample of "cold Materialism," it is a good thing. It will cool the flames of superstition and ignorance.

Thanks, Mr. Macdonald, for your rebuke to illiberal Liberals. It was worthy the successor of Bennett and of a Liberal editor. I am sometimes told that it is past time for iconoclastic work. To such I would say, I wish you could read a recent sermon I hav, delivered by a Baptist reverend, thirty miles south of Boston, on "Satan's Personality." He says: "We can determin the personality of this evil adversary by the same means and as surely as we can decide that Cæsar and Nero were real beings." Again: "If the opposition of this arch-fiend be too strong to be resisted now, what may we expect from it when cast into endless fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, with no hope of God's helping us to escape his torments?"

I'll not take your valuable columns with more extracts. Yet the railroad and almanac are in daily sight of this 1783 reverend. No time now to say the day of ignorance is past and the work of destruction uncalled for.

I've discovered a bible which I am going to write about and explain. It wouldn't be biblical if it did not need explaining, and had common sense enough to recommend itself. Great are the mysteries of godliness.

Now, my first deed must be (on being allowed to sit up a few minutes) to inclose you $2 for the ever welcome Truth Seeker. I will soon send $1 for the Monument Fund, though I wish it had taken the form of a Freethought home or hall, or circulating library, or home for The Truth Seeker. You are doing gloriously, and giving us a good paper. May your life be long and happy; we know it is useful. May our dear, kind publisher be not weary in well-doing.

With a "let-us-work" to the fraternity of Liberals I sign myself a truth seeker, C. Fannie Allyn.

Stoneham, Mass.

Communications.

Paul Again at Ephesus.

That Apollos preached at Corinth shortly after Paul was there we know from Paul's epistle to the Corinthians. The narrativ of Acts continues:

"And while Apollos was at Corinth Paul traveled over the upper counties (i. e., Galatia and Phrygia) to Ephesus. And he inquired of the disciples whom he found there: Hav ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed? They answered and said to him: If there be a Holy Spirit it hath not come to our hearing. He said to them: Into what then were ye baptized? They say: Into the baptism of John. Paul said to them: John baptized the people with the baptism of repentance, while he told them to believe in him who was to come after him, that is, in Jesus the Messiah" (xix. 1-5).

Paul had recently preached in the same synagog, and had left Aquila and Priscella there to propagate the faith, who in turn had instructed Apollos. And yet when the apostle returned to Ephesus he found the believers so benighted that they had not even heard of the Holy Ghost, the real father of the gospel Jesus, and knew nothing except the baptism of John. And Paul had to set them right even as to John's doctrin, explaining to them, perhaps, the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which John foretold, and which descended upon Jesus in the likeness of a dove (Matt. iii, 11-16, Luke iii, 16-22); also the baptism of fire (Ibid).

"And when they heard these things they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus Messiah."

That is, they were rebaptized. Apollos probably had converted and baptized them, but when they learned that the messiah had come and had been put to death shortly after John was beheaded (if indeed he was beheaded) they must needs be baptized into the baptism of the messiah. And the writer of Acts would imply that Paul baptized them, while Paul tells the Corinthians that the messiah did not send him to baptize but to preach (1 Cor. i, 17).

"And Paul laid his hand on them and the Holy Spirit came upon them, and they spoke in various tungs and prophesied."

Quite possible, for it agrees with what Paul writes to the Corinthians very soon afterward about speaking in tungs.

"And all the persons were twelve."

This indicates the smallness of the congregation of believers; the speakers in unknown tungs were the lowest in official membership, and there were twelve of them in Ephesus. They were the least edifying talkers, and Paul had to put a check on them in Corinth, making them giv way to the prophets.

"And Paul entered the synagog and spoke boldly three months, persuading in regard to the kingdom of God. And some of them were hardened and disputatious and reviled the way of God before the assembly of the people. Then Paul withdrew himself and separated the disciples from them."

In other words, the conservativ Jews and proselytes compelled him and his factions to leave the synagog. Three months of his preaching was all they could endure.

"And he discoursed with them (the seceders) daily in the school (room?) of a man named Tyrannus. And this continued for two years, until all who resided in (Proconsular) Asia, both Jews and Arameans (Gr. Hellenes) heard the word of the Lord."

It does not appear that Paul ever remained in any one place as a preacher longer than he did in Ephesus. And here, after the first three months, his little band of believers were all accommodated in a school-room, Tyrannus being willing to sublet it cheap, and perhaps glad enough to get whatever Paul's lowly followers could afford to pay for the use of it out of school hours.

But who was this Tyrannus? "Some heathen sophist," says Canon Farrar, "of that not very uncommon name;" and in a note he refers to Suidas of the tenth century, to Josephus, and to two Maccabees. We turn to Josephus and find a Tyrannus who was tortured and put to death by Herod the Great about 7 B.C. He was at the time of his death one of the king's bodyguard and master of the horse, a tall and accomplished person, greatly esteemed by Herod until suspicion caused his arrest. This Tyranis was probably either a Jew or a proselyte, like Herod; and it is not impossible that he was the same person who opened his school-room to Paul some fifteen or twenty years before. (Ant. xvi. 10 §3, 6; War. i, 26 §3).

Sometime during this long stay at Ephesus Paul wrote the first epistle to the Corinthians.

"And God wrought very great miracles by the hand of Paul; so that from the clothes on his body, napkins and rags were carried and laid upon the sick, and the diseases left them, and demons also went out."

Modern preachers are not fond of quoting and defending such holy scripture as this, but Spiritualists like Moses Hull delight to adduce it just to plague the believers in plenary inspiration and disbelievers in Spiritual therapeutics. Canon Farrar treats this passage gingerly. He says it is clear that the writer's informant, whoever he was, abstained from saying that this use of Paul's handkerchiefs or aprons was authorized or sanctioned by him; but anyhow it served to prove the superiority of the Christian faith in the acropolis of paganism (St. Paul, p. 364).

Exorcism was practiced by certain Jews at Ephesus, and among them by seven sons of the high priest Sceva. But the greater success of Paul induced them to try his new Jesuitic incantation. So they said to the unclean spirits: "We adjure you, in the name of that Jesus whom Paul announceth." But the evil demon answered: "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but as for you, who are ye?" And the man in whom was the demon leaped upon the seven Scevas, threw them down, and drove them out of the house naked and bruised.

"And this became known to all the Jews and Arameans [Gr. Hellenes] who resided in Ephesus. And fear fell on them all, and the name of our Lord Jesus Messiah was exalted. And many of them that believed came and narrated their faults, and confessed what they had done. And also many magicians collected their books, and brought and burnt them before everybody; and they computed the cost of them, and it amounted to 50,000 pieces of silver."

If Attic drachms were meant, the aggregate would be $10,150; if Roman denarii, $8,850. This discomfiture of the sons of Sceva, says Farrar, revealed the startling fact that some of the brethren in embracing Christianity had not abandoned magic (p. 365).

Our apostle was now purposing to visit Macedonia again, and then go to Jerusalem, after which he desired to see Rome. So he sent into Macedonia Timothy and Aristus (Gr. Erastus) to prepare his way. But before Paul was ready to start a great disturbance arose in Ephesus. Demetrius, a maker of silver shrines, finding his trade falling off, called a meeting of artisans and addressed them, saying that not only the citizens of Ephesus, but all Asia, had been persuaded by Paul to believe that the graven images were not gods. It was slander and contempt of the great Diana, the goddess of all Asia, and whom all nations worshiped. The effect of this speech of Demetrius was electric; the artisans cried out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" The contagion spread until the whole city was in an uproar. The people rushed to the theater, bearing along with them Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia and associates of Paul. Paul was disposed to go in also, but his disciples and friends restrained him. Alexander, a Jew, was put forward by the Jews to defend the accused. But the mob refused to hear him, and shouted "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" for about two hours. At length they were tranquilized by the appearance of the chief of the city (Gr. town clerk), who said in substance: "Men of Ephesus, everybody knows that you are devoted to the worship of the great Diana. So don't get excited about it. Hav these men robbed your temples or reviled your goddess, whose image descended from heaven? No. But if Demetrius and his fellow-tradesmen hav cause of complaint let the case be brought before the proconsul or the regular courts of law. So far as now appears you are tumultuous without cause, and liable to arrest for sedition."

The Greek version has proconsuls in the plural; there was but one proconsul in Asia.

This temperate speech quieted and dispersed the mob. Then Paul called the disciples to him, and having kissed and comforted them, departed for Macedonia.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

The epistle of Paul to the Ephesians is probably spurious. Marcion and his followers called it the epistle to the Laodiceans, and Tertullian, fifty years later, charged Marcion with altering the title. We may never know whether the charge was true, but we do know that other accusations against Marcion were false. Paul's epistles were transmitted to the Catholic fathers by the Gnostic "heretic" of Pontus. Justin, Marcion's contemporary (A.D. 140–165), ignored Paul altogether; but the later trio of Catholic fathers, Irenæus of Lyons, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian of Carthage, grafted Paul on to their theology in the last quarter of the second century.

Some of the grounds for repudiating the authenticity of the epistle are these:

1. It is addressed to gentiles, with no allusion to Jews. Indeed the word Jew does not occur in the epistle.

2. It contains expressions that betray a post-apostolic age, e.g., "holy legates" (iii, 5), "descended to the inferior regions of the earth" (iv, 9).

3. The sentiments and diction are borrowed from the epistle to the Colossians, but the style is inferior. Of the 155 verses in the epistle, 78 contain expressions identical with those in Colossians (Dav. Int. N. T.).

4. The epistle throws no light on the state of the Ephesian church. It purports to be written by a prisoner, and to be sent by Tychicus, a brother minister, who will acquaint them with the writer's affairs (vi, 21). This parallels with Col. iv, 7, and is doubtless borrowed therefrom.

5. Tychicus is the only person named in the epistle besides the writer.

Another charge that Tertullian brings against Marcion is changing the particle in to from in Eph. iii, 9, making the passage read:

"The mystery which for ages was hid up from God, the creator of all things."

But as it is now conceded that most of the indictments against Marcion were false, we are bound to giv him the benefit of a doubt in this case. Nor can we ever know whether what was imputed to Marcion may not hav been chargeable to his followers or successors, who had the opportunity to tamper with the text before the earliest Catholic fathers began to try their hand at it.

Reply to A. Allen Noe.

With your permission, Mr. Editor, I wish in your columns to answer a few questions, ask a few, and set aright our friend Noe, who, it seems, has wandered into paths he should hav shunned for want of proper knowledge.

First, I wish to ask you, Brother Noe, why you did not answer three of the leading questions in my former article. Did you think by ignoring them they would be forgotten, or was it a feeling of inability on your part that prompted you to slightingly pass them by? In a controversy I think it proper and courteous that all questions should be noticed by an opponent, and answered if possible; and if not capable of the task, he should admit his inability.

The three questions are the following:

First, "If there are spirits, and our friends we think dead still liv in another world, they would be as likely to come back and visit with old associates, although Materialists, as would the friends of the Spiritualists; if not, why?"

Second, "If you believe that life or spirit livs after death and is independent of matter, has it not always lived, and are there not millions of people living in spirit-land whose bodies are not yet born, who can just as well talk and converse with us as those who hav lived and died?"

Third, "Why cannot the spirit of friends who hav died tell us what happened while in spirit-land before birth, as well as after death?"

Lucretius says, in regard to the future of the mind:

"And were the soul immortal, would the mind
Complain of death and not rejoice to find
Herself let loose and leave this clay behind?
Were souls immortal, and ne'er began,
But crept into the limbs to make up man,
Why can they not remember what was done
In former times? Why all this memory gone?"

In the first part of your article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 30th, I see but very little to notice; however I must try and correct you on several points where it seems you hav fallen into error.

You say Spiritualists "of brains" do not believe that there is life independent of organization; they speak of "disembodied spirits," "disembodied man." Then you express the desire that they would say what they mean; but here, the very place, it seems, for you to explain the meaning of these terms, you also pass by, leaving us entirely in the dark. Why did you not tell us what Spiritualists meant when they spoke in those terms? You say, "No such thing as life without organization with me." Then you do admit that of necessity there must be an organization where there is life, and without an organization of some kind there could possibly be no life. Then if life exists only in an organization, I would ask you what organization you know anything about except physical ones, and where there is life independent of this. You may say there is a spiritual organization which contains individual life and which always has existed and will continue through all eternity. You may think you know all this, but how I cannot conceive, for I am certain that by sight, hearing, feeling, tasting, and smelling, I hav never become cognizant of this spiritual organization, although I believe the five senses I possess are as acute as those of my Spiritualistic friends. But even admitting this life organization independent of a physical body, I would ask, by what means of knowledge does it know there is being a physical body brought into existence for it, and are they capable of dwelling in more than one physical organization? Has the life which is in us now lived, perhaps in any other human being, one of the lower animals, or even in a plant of some character, or has it ever lived in quietude, waiting for this body of ours, and after staying with us a few short years, our body dies and its mission is ended?

If it has lived before, and that in a human being, or in an animal, why can it not converse and relate to us what happened while staying temporarily in that body?

I still claim Materialism is negativ and the burden of proof lies alone with your side. You say we affirm. Not so, my friend; we simply say we don't know that we liv again or that we lived before; we never saw a spiritual organization go into a body at any time or leave it at death, and when any man or class of men asserts that such is the fact, they must bring proof, for the five senses we possess hav never made us cognizant of this knowledge which our spiritual friends claim to hav.

When our friends die, as far as we know, we bury every part and particle of them in the silent grave. We observe no separation, and when you assert there is you must produce your proof. A criminal before a court of justice is considered innocent until proven guilty of the misdemeanor.

We, as Materialists, assert nothing; we say this universe always existed and always will exist, because we never hav seen or cannot conceive how one atom of matter can be created or destroyed. We claim no individual life before the formation of a physical being and that death ends all, for we hav never seen life independent of a physical organization, either before birth or after death. You think the Materialists do not try to make discoveries, but you are grossly mistaken; the Materialists hav with the spade of investigation dug deep, unearthing and exploding false theories, accepting that only which is based on substantial evidence, and not, like our friends, carried by imagination away beyond human knowledge. Are you not selfish when you say, "It is not my place to demonstrate it to you?" If you hav the truth and your belief is full of happy thoughts, would it not be an act of Liberalism, as well as charity, to demonstrate and make plain your belief to a poor unfortunate? What do you mean by saying I hav shut the door in the faces of my parents? I am sure I hav been ever listening and watching; but may be they do not wish to talk directly to me and would rather convey their wishes to me through an entire stranger (a medium).

Brother Noe, you accuse me of getting off the track in my former article. Perhaps I did; but in the second part of your article in regard to life you hav entirely left the road traveled by modern scientists and students, and gone over on the preformationist one, which has long since grown rusty from disuse. You are upholding a theory that has been exploded by later scientific discoveries. Men who hav thoroughly investigated the theory in which you believe—the animalculistic theory—and also the opposing one, hav found them both false, and an entire revolution has been made in the science of biology since the theory of epigenesis was first taught by Wolff and found true and adopted by modern scientists.

It is strange that you should advance that old, discarded belief established by Leeunenhock in 1690, that the seminal glands of the male contained the activ or life principle, and all that it required was fruitful soil or a receptacle possessed by the female, when these germs would become developed.

Does not this theory of male encasement necessitate an Adam and Eve? Yet from your last article you would hav us believe you were an Evolutionist. How do you reconcile this? If you believe in evolution you must certainly believe that the first microscopical monad contained the germs for all future life, which I think would take a lively stretch for your imagination. No; the theory you advocate, as well as the doctrin of female encasement, has been found unreasonable and untrue.

I was aware that in the semen of the male, by aid of the microscope, moving bodies can be seen, and am also aware that they are not the "living, moving entities," which entirely make up future human beings, but are cells of the flagellate description, which by coalescing with certain cells in the female ovum forms a new compound cell, a new organization comes into existence, and individual life begins. This is when, as I said before, individual life commences, and not, as it occurs to you, when the "structure is about complete."

Haeckel says: "For individual existence does not begin at the moment of birth, but at the moment of fertilization." You say I hav life just as the organization is started. To be sure, the very moment the two dissimilar ancestral cells come together a new cell is formed, which is the parent cell of the coming new body. How can you conceive of growth in the embryo without life, other than that principle we see in all inert matter?

Is it not the same life we see in the embryo that we observe in a being after birth?

It is a physiological fact that if death of the embryo takes place, even at a very early period of utero gestation, it acts as a foreign body and will soon be expelled.

I still believe all matter contains a certain principle that is eternal with it, and which, by undergoing certain changes, is capable of becoming a part of an organization manifesting individual life, having the power of growth, development, reproduction, and increasing in number.

You appear to think that the entire impetus given to the new being comes from the male. Let me quote to the contrary. Haeckel says: "For since we regard the sperm cell, as well as the egg cell, as true cells, and since fertilization essentially consists in the amalgamation of the former with the latter, the cell which results from this amalgamation must be regarded as an entirely new and independent organization. It contains in the protoplasm of the sperm cell a portion of the paternal male body, and on the other hand in the protoplasm of the original egg cell a portion of the maternal female body. This is equally shown by the fact that the child inherits many qualities from both parents."

Again, "The life of the parent cell (cytula) is the product or resultant of the of the paternal activities transmitted through the sperm cell together with the maternal activities transmitted through the egg cell." Darwin, speaking of crosses, says, "A hybrid partakes of only half of the nature and constitution of its mother." Hav you not noticed, friend Noe, what resemblance children hav for both parents having peculiarities of one and possessing idiosyncrasies of the other, showing that they are in part derived from either parent? To prove my assertion that life is the result of organization, and is dependent on matter, let me quote other authority than myself. Lamarck taught, "Life is only a physical phenomenon." Haeckel teaches, "The vital activities of each cell form a sum of mechanical processes which depend radically on movements of the smallest (life particles), the molecules of the living substance." Herbert Spencer writes, "Life depends on or consists in the incessant action or re-action of various forces which as throughout nature are always tending toward an equilibrium."

You assert life has always existed. Do you mean to say that there has always been individual life independent of a physical organization, and this body of ours, which is so tangible to our senses, nothing to do whatever with these manifestations? If so, you must bring forth evidence which we can become cognizant of by the senses we possess. I cannot conceive of individual life without a physical organization of some description, and he who so believes must do so with only his imagination for proof. It appears you hav not delved very deeply into the late scientific works, or you would not be holding to those old obsolete ideas which you champion in your last article. You ask me if I should be taken suddenly sick, if I would not like to recover to attend to unsettled business. Certainly, but if I could not when the eternal sleep of death came, I would be forever free, while if you should die in the same position in regard to earthly affairs, would you not feel badly? Would not your conscience trouble you when you looked back to this world, seeing the wrongs you had done, but utterly unable to repair them? I prefer total annihilation to a life of regret and a feeling that I had done wrongs I could not right.

The latter part of your article I think more poetical than real, and as my article is already quite long, I will stop for the present, hoping you will receive my criticism with a kindly feeling.

A. W. Trevitt, M.D.

Death Does End All.

OPEN LETTER TO KINGSLEY.

Friend Kingsley: I do not pretend to be at all learned, only claim to hav an average share of common sense and the experience of some fifty odd years, during which I've always tried to glean truth, facts, and real knowledge from all sources within my reach.

When I declare that the holy virgin has never appeared to the thousands of Catholic devotees who firmly believe they hav not only seen her in various places, but hav been miraculously cured of disease and all manner of infirmities through bits of plaster taken from the walls where she was seen, I feel that I am only attesting to what is real fact, in opposition to imaginativ visions, dreams, and frauds.

When I declare that Moses never saw any god on the mount, nor received from him any tables of stone containing the Ten Commandments, I feel that I am only asserting a real truth against tales of impossible occurrences.

When I declare that no person was ever changed into a tree or plant, and no tree ever had its Hamadryad, I assert only what you all now acknowledge as true, though once it would hav been criminal to doubt it. When I say fairies, ghosts, gnomes, genii, dragons, furies, etc., are all myths, you will agree with me; but when I say man has no soul or spirit in him, when I say mind is only a result of organization and dies with the body it forms a part of, you think I am claiming too much "knowledge," and ask me to prove my assertion. But when I do prove the mind is, like the noise of a machine, nothing and nowhere when the machine is gone, you refuse the proof. When I ask evidence of mind separate from matter, you claim it is a part of very ethereal matter, undiscernible to the senses unless aided by a medium. You refuse to take authority as proof of the tales told in the old Jew book, yet you giv authority as reasons why I should believe in a future life and the communion with the dead. You refuse to believe in the old dreams of the Bible, and ask me to believe in dreams of to-day and dreams of St. Augustine. As to the dream of the insecurity of the staging, no doubt it was caused by that feeling of apprehension that always comes over one when working on so dangerous a platform. I never pick winter apples but at night I dream of falling from the tree, and waken with a start, yet I never hav fallen. I know of a case that happened near where we lived of a man doing a whole job of work on a scaffold that was held in place by one tenpenny nail—a nail that was put in temporarily till the scaffold could be rightly nailed. The work was safely done, and not till the scaffold was being removed was the fact discovered that the safety of that workman hung on that one nail. Now suppose before he had commenced work he had felt uneasy about the scaffold, and gone to bed and dreamed of its falling with him, as would hav been very natural, and on examining it in the morning discovered it was all resting on one tenpenny nail, would he not hav been as much justified in calling it a spirit warning, as in the case you relate? That Spiritism is, what Truesdell calls it, an art, is proved by its radiating from centers. It spreads, grows, and increases just as any other kind of knowledge does, and it is art that produces the phenomena. It is only of late it has come into Dixie to any great extent, but a few here and there are now running the whole machinery pretty successfully as regards supporting periodicals, publishing books, and making a sensation as well as a living by it. Because there are a few things I do not understand and cannot tell the why and wherefore of, is no reason why I should place back of them still greater incomprehensibilities that are still harder nuts to crack. Because one dream, thought, desire, or hope is realized, is no proof that others will be.

Where millions and millions of these are hourly occurring, now and then one must of necessity hit. Because Spiritism is an advance on the old theologies is no proof that it is true as a whole. Wherever it is a more moral, more elevating, and more truthful belief, it is better than the old religions. But where it is not true it must in time be revolutionized, and the false must go to the wall.

The whole that is called spirit, the whole that claims immortality for identities, must go with the gods and ghosts of antiquity. One life and one identity is the great law of nature. Once grant immortality to a single class of identities, let it be organized forms or bare, barren, dead worlds, and all nature must in the long course of ages become dead, barren, and cold. One universal stagnation must pervade the universe. True, matter is endless and time is endless, but fancy for a moment the investing say of man as an immortal, never-dying being, and see the result! Not an atom of him could ever change or pass away. He could not eat, for food would not be needed because there would be in him no death. No effete matter would pass from him. He would be a complete immortal existence, ever and always the same. Millions and millions, and endless eternal millions, of these immortals would be endlessly using up materials and keeping them, filling up the great vistas of eternal space full of themselvs. Why, man alive! no brain can conceive of the results of immortal existence of identities. It is contrary to every law of nature, every axiom of philosophy, every common-sense argument, and yet simply for not giving credence to this "beautiful faith" I am accused of denying my birthright and being full of sensuous, external life, of being wrapped closely in clay. So be it. I acknowledge the corn. I am of earth, and earth-like. I love the body and the enjoyment of the senses. All this morning I hav been digging and hoeing in the clay, stirring up the brown soil of dear, sweet Mother Earth, and inhaling her fresh, pure fragrance, while old Sol poured down his bright beams, making the perspiration drop from my clayey form. And I enjoyed the work, too, far better than I should that of being a dead and alive, stolid, ethereal, unchangeable, unperspirable, eternal identity.

"The laws of nature never yet did fail.
Great is this truth, and will at last prevail.
The laws of nature let us now obey—"
Till back we go once more to mortal clay.

Snowville, Va., July 15, 283. Elmina.

St. Peter and St. Paul at Rome.

THE CHAIR OF ST. PETER A PAGAN RELIC.

A correspondent of the New York Sun, writing from Rome, givs an account of the feast of St. Peter, which was celebrated this year with more than ordinary devotion and enthusiasm. Among other things the writer says:

"The columns where Peter and Paul were whipped attracted many visitors. . . . . And many looked at the chains of St. Peter. . . . . and those of St. Paul."

It would be pretty safe to say that not a single intelligent employe of the Sun, who is not a bigoted or benighted Catholic, believes that Peter and Paul were whipped or even chained at Rome. But yet the Sun must pander to its Catholic patrons by giving them an occasional ration of such flapdoodle without comment. And if a Freethinker should submit something historical about the alleged existence of St. Peter at Rome, his communication, however interesting and incontrovertible, would be thrown into the basket. A fact, for instance, like the following would never do to print in the Sun:

In the year 1662, at the annual celebration of the festival of St. Peter's chair, the said chair was got out and cleaned (for the first time perhaps since it was called St. Peter's, in the fourth century); when upon removing the dirt of ages, there appeared engraved upon the chair the Twelve Labors of Hercules.

This fact is related by Giacomo Bartolini, who was present at the discovery. (Anthichiti Sacre di Roma, p. 32). But the Romish authorities, ever ready with subterfuges when closely cornered, explain the labors of Hercules in a mystical sense, as emblems representing the future exploits of the popes!

Antichrist.

"A Truth Seeker Around the World;" 4 volumes, cloth, $6.50; leather, $9.50; morocco, gilt edges, $10.50

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - AUGUST 4, 1883.

REMOVAL.

Owing to the disagreeableness and rapacity of our old landlord, we hav moved the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER a few doors down the street—to 33 Clinton Place, where we hav obtained quarters very similar to the ones previously occupied, but considerably better. The office is on the ground floor. We shall be glad to welcome our friends here at any time during the next four years, as we hav obtained a lease for that length of time. We ask a little indulgence from our friends in the matter of filling orders and answering letters, on account of moving. We hav been very busy the past few days, but, having now got comfortably settled, hope to catch up with our correspondence soon.

What Beecher's New Departure Signifies.

The position occupied by Mr. Henry Ward Beecher in the theological world is of much importance, from the fact that he is the foremost preacher of his time. There are other theologians more skilled in splitting hairs and refining creeds, but Mr. Beecher is the popular mouthpiece of the great body of Congregational Christians. His pulpit utterances hav had great weight in reforming the religious opinions of thousands, and to him is in a great measure due the credit of the liberal movement in theology. Heretofore it has been hard to pin him down to a statement of his belief. He first renounced hell, then publicly accepted evolution as the true theory of man's origin, then denounced the doctrin of vicarious atonement as reflecting on the goodness of God; but, after all these exploits, there seemed to be a mental reservation on his part. Perhaps the careful reader can see this reservation in the following letter to a Chicago clergyman, the Rev. J. S. Kennard, who, in one of his sermons, reviewed Mr. Beecher's theology, expressing the opinion that his teaching had grown lax, and that his definition of Christianity omitted the cross:

CHICAGO, July 23d.

REV. J. SPENCER KENNARD, Dear Sir: I hav read your reported sermon, delivered yesterday, with great interest. I hav to thank you for your kindness of feeling manifested, and the absence of that rigor of orthodoxy which seems to be but a covert form of saying "damn you." But I am not saying this as an expression of surprise; one would hav expected this excellent spirit in you. But the point of my gratification is that the time has come for an honest discussion of the views of the old and new theology. If conducted in a Christian spirit good cannot but come out of it. It is hardly to be expected that either side will hav a whole victory, but another generation will find itself upon a higher level. Allow me to say of my own position, that I know that I am orthodox and evangelical as to the facts and substance of the Christian religion; but equally well I know that I am not orthodox as to the philosophy which has hitherto been applied to those facts. I am a cordial Christian evolutionist.

I do not agree, by any means, with all of Spencer, his Agnosticism, nor all of Huxley, Tyndall, and their school. They are Agnostic—I am not, emphatically, but I am an evolutionist. Evolution strikes at the root of all mediæval and orthodox modern theology; the fall of man in Adam, and the inheritance by his posterity of his guilt, and, by consequence, any such view of atonement as has been constructed to meet the fabulous disaster. Men hav not fallen as a race—men hav come up. No great disaster met the race at the start; the creation decree of God was fulfilled. Any theory of atonement must be one which shall meet the fact that man was created at the lowest point, and, as I believe, is, as to his physical being, evolved from the animal race below him; but, as to his moral and spiritual nature, is a son of God, a new element having come up in the great movement of evolution at the point of man's appearance.

Man is univerally sinful, not by nature, but by voluntary violation of known laws. In other words, the animal passions of man hav proved to be too strong for his moral and spiritual nature. Paul's double man—the old man and the new man—is a grand exposition of the doctrin of sin.

But enough of this. I am not in my preaching attacking orthodoxy. I belong to this wing of the Christian army; but I cannot get my own views out except by comparison of them to the disadvantage of the standard views. If to any I seem to bring wit and humor to an irreverent use, I can only say I do it because I cannot help it; these things come to me, so I must express them; but not as a sneer or scoff, though often with impetuous feeling and with open mirth. My life is drawing to an end; a few more working years only hav I left; no one can express the earnestness I feel, that in the advance of science, which will inevitably sweep away much rubbish in the beliefs of men, a place may be found for a higher spirituality—for a belief that shall hav its roots in science, and its top in the sunlight of faith and love. For that I am working, and shall work as long as I work at all.

The discussion has begun. God is in it. It must go on. It is one of those great movements which come when God would lift men to a higher level. The root of the whole matter with me is, in a word, this: Which is the central element of moral government—love or hatred? I say hatred, for in human hands that is what justice has largely amounted to. I hold that they are not co-equal. True justice's primitiv form is simply pain, and this suffering is simply auxiliary—pedagogic—the school-master, until we are enough developed to work by love. Love is not auxiliary, it is the one individual force of moral government to which God is bringing the universe. I've gone my length. I should wish to liv in affection and confidence of my brethren in the Christian ministry. But I cannot, for the sake of earning it, yield one jot or tittle of loyalty to that kingdom of love which is coming, and of which I am but as one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord."

I am, affectionately yours, HENRY WARD BEECHER.

This letter places Mr. Beecher squarely among the nineteenth century heretics. It is true he clings to his ideal God, but this God is in no way the Jewish Jehovah worshiped by the great body of churchmen, and Beecher is as much an Agnostic as the men he names. On the question of deity he may truly be called a Paineite, for Thomas Paine held substantially the views adopted by the Brooklyn preacher. If Paine was a heretic, so is Beecher. The other points of his heresy are:

1. An acceptance of evolution, and consequent rejection of the creation account as found in Genesis.
2. The rejection of the atonement.
3. A total disbelief in hell.

These constitute the very bases of Christianity. Without them it has no vitality or excuse for being. The fall of man has ever been the foundation dogma on which is built the scheme of salvation through Christ. If Genesis is a legend, the gospels may as well be myths, for all the good they are; and if men cannot be saved through Christ, then what is the use of supporting all the churches? Mr. Beecher's position is a very illogical one, and his remaining in the church can only be justified by the hope that as a pastor and ostensible Christian he can lead more people out of bondage than he could as a Liberal lecturer. His associations, too, are all churchly. His method is that of a preacher, and if he remains so in form while denying all Christian substance, he must settle with his own conscience. If his congregation are satisfied with the doctrins he teaches, it is perhaps none of the rest of the world's business. They pay his salary.

What Ingersoll calls the "great-man argument" is without any logic, but it is not without a deal of force to those who form their opinions second-hand, taking the word of a preacher instead of reflecting and arriving at conclusions for themselvs. Upon this class this letter will hav a great effect—more perhaps than the utterances of a known Infidel—and for that reason should be circulated as widely as possible. They will think that if Beecher accepts evolution, it must be true; if he rejects hell, it cannot exist; if he discards the atonement, it cannot hav virtue for them.

Bigotry is based on the Bible. Honest believers hav ever been the cruelest persecutors. All the legal tyrants of to-day, who imprison Freethinkers, belong to the old-school orthodox church. Their eyes hav never seen the light that Beecher's hav; their hearts hav never been touched by the love of humanity that he expresses. If they could only be made to see how false and cruel is the theology to which they cling—how inadequate to the needs of the world—they would do as Mr. Beecher has done—evolute out of it. A hard nature is intensified by a hard creed; a big heart is pained by the conflict between what is thought to be religious duty and the natural human desires. A cast-iron creed is incompatible with a deep love and sympathy for the poor and wretched of the world; one or the other must be given up. That it will be the creed must be evident to anyone who reads the signs of the times. Such theologians as Joseph Cook seem at the present time to be out of place, and such as Beecher are hailed with acclamations as the coming men.

Dangerous Views.

The strike of the telegraphers, which still continues, is developing a very unhealthy and undemocratic sentiment on the part of the daily organs published by capitalists. It consists in asking that laws be enacted making a combination of laborers illegal, that men in a body be prevented from quitting work in order to enforce their demands, and that those whom they term the "ringleaders" be punished by imprisonment.

Monopoly has grown very bold when it dares to ask for the passage of such iniquitous laws. They would be a radical and entire perversion of our form of government, and would set this country back to where Russia is. The church monopoly is bad enough, and the Comstock laws are all the acts of that despotic kind the country can stand. Happily there is not much danger of these sentiments being embodied in laws on our statute books, but the fact that so powerful a force as the secular papers boldly advocate their adoption is a sign not to be disregarded.

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Religious liberty is threatened by the God-in-the-Constitution party, and physical freedom by the holders of such views.

The Chinaman and the Christians.

When the Chinaman was a few thousand miles away the Christians of this country were very solicitous about the welfare of his soul, and spent a good deal of money in the effort to "save" it. But now that he is at our own doors in quantities too large to be pleasant, the churches shirk the labor of "saving" him, and leave him to be dealt with, so far as interference is required, almost entirely by the police. The majority of the church people favor letting him severely alone, while a few want him converted whether he desires to be or not. The first sort evidently discredit the missionary enterprise, thinking, no doubt, that contact with civilization will do for him more than the preaching of the missionary. This view is undoubtedly correct. The Chinamen who come here do not need the Christian religion. They hav a better one of their own. What they need is to learn the western civilization, and this does not require any salvation scheme. The Chinaman is a sharp individual, and the few Christians who do take a little interest in his welfare soon find this out. He attends the religious school till he becomes slightly proficient in the English language, and then falls back on his pigeon English and his own religion, which he considers sufficient for his needs. And we really do not see the need of converting him, for he is more moral now than his white brethren of corresponding rank in life. He is rarely seen in court; does not get drunk; is as honest as the preachers, to say the least; and picks up civilized ways with eager quickness. The Catholic Italians, Germans, and Irish who dwell in the same quarter of the city, are more in need of civilization than the Chinamen. It is from these classes that our prisons are filled, and it is to them that the civilized missionaries should be sent in the shape of school teachers and temperance lecturers.

Notes.

"'Tis the love of Jesus that saves," says the Advocate. We knew a man who had plenty of the love of Jesus, and it never saved him a cent.

A DOCTOR of divinity, writing to the Independent concerning some statements, or misstatements, made by Joe Cook, says: "I am moved to ask: If Mr. Cook fails in the attempt to convey the right impression respecting facts of his own conduct, can we be sure that he always succeeds in his statements of the intentions of others?" This is a hyperbolical way of saying that an habitual liar can't stuff his yarns down the practiced throat of a doctor of divinity.

THE Index, published in Boston, is a professed Freethought paper; yet we look through its columns in vain for something in the line of Liberal news. There is nothing in its last number about the National Liberal League. The coming Freethinkers' convention at Rochester is unmentioned. The imprisonment of three Freethinkers in London is not denounced, but, to the contrary, it contains an article quoted with compliments from that apostate to liberty, George Jacob Holyoake, and extends a hand redolent with taffy to the R.-P. Journal, the most unscrupulous sheet published in the world. Of what good to the cause of Freethought is a paper like the Index?

CANON LIDDON, of England, has bidden adieu to Oxford, and is said that he will also abandon the pulpit. Oxford has become too secular for him, and he says: "We may shortly liv to see what has been the home of the church of Christ for a thousand years become a place of purely secular education, which might hav been founded last week by a company of shareholders." So it seems that the institution has outgrown the preacher. It is usually the other way; but one alternativ may be considered as encouraging as the other.

JOHN E. REMSBURG starts east on his lecturing tour August 4th. He has been engaged to deliver from one to five lectures at each of the following places: Chicago (State League Convention); Decatur, Dana, Carlyle, and Indianola, Ill.; Carbon, Ind.; Kent, Republic, and Salineville, Ohio; Patch Grove, Wis.; Erie, Scranton, New Holland, and Philadelphia, Pa.; Newark, N. J.; Rochester, N. Y., (Freethinkers' Convention); and Welland, Canada. Letters addressed to him at Atchison, Kan., will be promptly forwarded to him.

THE Rev. W. H. H. Buckboard Adirondack Murray is about to open a law office in New York. As a preacher Mr. Murray was a success; but his moral and financial crookedness worked against him outside the church, and finally ruined his reputation inside it. The Methodist organ of this city ventures the opinion that "if he does not make better work with the law than he did with the gospel, he will not achieve any brilliant success at the bar." If the Rev. Mr. Murray is more upright as a lawyer than he was as a minister, his case will be a good criterion by which to judge the relativ moral influence of law and gospel.

HORRIBLE stories come to us of the torture and murder of Jews by the Christians of Russia. A dispatch to St. James's Gazette from St. Petersburg, dated July 13th, says:

"A painful sensation has been created by news which has just reached this city from Ostrog. While the Jewish cemetery at that place was being violated and the monuments being broken, the malefactors were surprised by the custodians of the place, whom they threatened with death if they gave information. Probably fearing that they would be arrested and punished for the outrage, they a night or two afterward went to the houses of the caretakers, entered them by force, and, after barbarously torturing the inmates, murdered them with blows of hammers. To some of their victims they administered narcotics before dispatching them."

There is something about Christianity that makes its adherents more brutal and persecuting than those of any other superstition known to the world. The Christian religion ought to go.

THERE is to be a great wave of aggressiv Liberalism going over the country, this coming year. Wakeman, Watts, and Chainey are to enter the lecture field, and from East to West we may expect a tremendous stirring up of the minds of people, with the most profound and inspiring ideas of the day. New Yorkers are to hav the first wave of the vast movement, in a lecture by our brilliant Freethought poet-speaker, George Chainey, who will set the ball a-rolling at German Masonic Hall, on the evening of Sunday, August 26th, preceding the convention week at Rochester. The subject of the lecture is "Reform and Reformers," and from his well-known ability and sparkling thought, we may be sure that the Liberals of this vicinity will listen to one of the brightest and wittiest discourses of the day. Chainey has won rounds of applause wherever he has been, and it is the pleasure and the duty of advanced thinkers to sustain him in his efforts to enoble humanity on the basis of nature and science. Let every one take hold, tell every friend he meets, advertise the lecture far and wide, and come himself and greet our friend with an overflowing house. We hope every one in this matter will be generous. Admission to the lecture is 50 cents.

H. L. GREEN'S Freethinkers' Magazine and Freethought Directory for July, enlarged from 48 to 64 pages, is at hand, possibly a little late, but good enough to pay for the waiting. Its contents embrace articles on "State Secularization: the New York Sunday Laws," and "The Bible" (article 2), editorial. Then we are presented with "A Modern Myth," by the Hon. Elizur Wright, always interesting, and in this case particularly so; "The Consolation of the New Faith," by Courtlandt Palmer; "Relics of Barbarism," by Prof. A. J. Oliver; "A Few Thoughts About the Next Freethinkers' Convention," by Jay Chaapel; "Christian Persecution: How to Avoid It," by Elmina (the remainder of the name it is unnecessary to mention—everybody knows it); "The Montreal Freethought Club" and the poem "Onward" (published a short time since in THE TRUTH SEEKER), by George Martin; "All Sorts," a useful department, by the editor; the Freethought Directory, and a quantity of other matter of general interest. The price of this periodical to subscribers is $1.50 per year. Those who wish their names continued in the Directory are requested to remit ten cents in postage stamps. The Freethinkers' Magazine is a useful publication, and Mr. Green has a kind word for all.

WE hav just received a cablegram from England, announcing that Charles Watts will be present at the great Rochester Convention. This is good news to all and will no doubt make the gathering clans more numerous than ever. Mr. Watt's is one of the representativ thinkers and speakers of the old world; and his presence will be an added impulse and enthusiasm to the convention. All who hav heard Mr. Watts will rejoice to listen again to his fervid eloquence. He is to remain with us for three months. Let arrangements be made everywhere for lectures. Now is an opportunity seldom presented for the advancement of Liberal thought, and for the putting forth of one's best labors for its success. We could find no better speaker than Mr. Watts, who presents his ideas with masterly clearness and effect. He is a noble exponent of aggressiv Liberalism. Of course, every one who can will now come to the Rochester Convention, and giv our English friend a cordial greeting. He comes to bring the thought, the sympathy, the inspiration, the prophecy, and the hope of the great mass of Liberals on the other side of the waters. who hav the same exalted purpose that we hav, for the emancipation of man. Our convention will thus be an international convention, and memorable for its achievements and influence.

ON Wednesday, July 18th, a mass meeting was held in London to protest against the imprisonment of the editor of the Freethinker, and to ask for the repeal of the blasphemy laws. The following account of it is taken from the Freethinker:

"Long before the hour advertised for the commencement of the meeting summoned to protest against the imprisonment of our two friends, St. James's Hall was crammed. Hundreds, I think I may say thousands, were turned away from the doors. Nor was the crowd remarkable alone for its numbers. The quality of it was scarcely less noticeable than its quantity. The great mass of the people were of the upper classes, that is, they were people, men and women, who worked for their living. It was no gathering of idlers. Yet there were not wanting a considerable number of what are commonly called 'well-to-do' folk. Apparently they get their name from not thinking it well to do anything. A very large number of women were present—a helpful and hopeful sign. The more thinking women, the more likelihood that the children of the future will be free.

"The faces of the vast crowd were a wonderful study. It seemed as if a bad one were not among them. The sight from the platform of the thousands of upturned faces all alive with indignation at the wicked wrong done and enthusiasm for the wronged, was forever memorable.

"The speaking was of a very high order. The Rev. W. Sharman was as vigorous and as brave as ever. The two other clergymen, Messsrs. Geldert and Headlam, also spoke splendidly, the former moving the huge audience to hearty laughter as well as just anger. Mr. Moncure D. Conway gave us a very finished, thoughtful speech, and Mrs. Besant moved her auditors as no other woman in England could. Mr. Symes delighted every one by his outspeaking, and Mr. Burrows also spoke.

"The reception of Mr. Bradlaugh was, as usual, a tremendous burst of enthusiasm. In truth, how the audience on that midsummer evening kept up at the fever heat at which they started is a marvel. But speakers and resolutions alike were cheered to the echo. So loud were the voices of the gigantic mass of living beings, that one might hav hoped their sound had pierced through the prison walls and reached the ears of the two solitary men who were to every one of us the most real presences in that hall, despite their absence from us.

"The voting was very solid. Both resolutions were carried by the whole assembly minus two gentlemen, who had the courage to hold up their hand against each. In a word, the meeting was a grand one in all senses."

Our London Letter.

Within the last few days bigotry has scored one or two temporary victories, and I am rather glad that such is the case; a few more such victories would be far more disastrous than small defeats. Partial concessions to liberty and right are too often accepted with thankfulness, and thus the total destruction of cant and oppression is put off from time to time. It is only when men are overwhelmed and crushed by the incubus bearing them down that they make a grand and successful effort to rid themselvs of the monster. The short-lived triumph gained by the bishops in throwing out the "Deceased Wife's Sister's" bill has once more shown the public what useless beings these fathers in God really are, and brings to mind the fact that these locusts hav always stood in the way of progress. No measure for the benefit of anyone but themselvs or their party can be brought forward but they immediately oppose it, and bring forward some passage from their holy book to prove they are right. Meetings are to be held through the country for the purpose of passing resolutions to the effect that these very unworthy individuals should be debarred from voting in the House of Lords, and when this object is attained it will probably be found expedient to withdraw from them all state pay, letting their cost fall upon their admirers, who will scarcely be inclined to keep them in the same luxury that they are now enjoying.

With regard to the Bradlaugh question in the House of Commons, Gladstone has certainly not shone in very brilliant colors, and has as usual appeared weak-kneed and vacillating. Afraid of offending the church and court party, he dares not stand by his own conviction, and is consequently gaining the contempt of all parties. Had he boldly stood up for the right, even had he been defeated, he would at least gain some measure of respect for showing the courage of his opinions; but as it is now, he has gone far to lose the esteem even of his own supporters. On the other hand, Mr. Bradlaugh has gained, and is gaining day by day, hosts of friends; even those who differ from him, but who hav a sense of decency and justice, are protesting against the illegality practiced to keep him from his just rights; and when he has triumphed over his enemies he bids fair to be the most popular man in England. His power is fully recognized by the supporters of tyranny, both lay and clerical, and they are fighting their utmost, desperately and madly, for they tremble for their existence; and if he is the man I take him to be, when his opportunity comes, much of the despotism now rampant will crumble and dissolve before his might and just wrath. We can only fervently hope that he may hav health and many years of life yet before him to enable him to carry out his pledges to those for whom he is now fighting.

The Salvation Army fraud has been pretty fairly exposed during the past week or two. The inventor, "General" Booth, has had to giv up his lease of the Grecian Theater, which cost him, or rather his gulls, £20,000, and he was severely censured by the judge for committing an act of gross perjury, but the judge must hav been very ignorant of the ways of "Christians" not to know that the majority of them would not scruple to commit perjury or almost any other crime to gain their own ends. It has been proved that their midnight meetings hav caused gross immorality in many towns where the army is established, and the population has been increased in rather an irregular manner, but this is the general result of all great religious revivals; and yet in the face of all these exposures, ignorance and credulity are still so rampant that the majority still cling to the various forms of supernatural religion which hav been proved over and over again to hav done no good, but an incalculable deal of injury to humanity.

London, July 16, 1883. J. D.

Another Camp-Meeting.

The Nemoka Spiritualists Camp-Meeting Association, of Pine Lake, Mich., will hold their first annual meeting on their grounds, commencing August 9th, and continuing to August 27th.

This association had its origin in the attempts of a few gentlemen to find a place upon the shore of some lake, where camp-meetings could be annually held, also where there could be erected a sanitarium or medical institute, a hotel, an art gallery, also a Liberal library, and a building for phenomenal Spiritualism.

Upon the shore of Pine Lake, the most delightful spot in Michigan, has been selected one hundred acres of choice land, eighteen acres of it being a grove of oak, hickory, elm, and other timbers. The Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway runs through the land, makit easy of access from all parts of the country, because it crosses all the lines running east and west across the state.

The grove is being put in attractiv shape. A speaker's stand has been built in cottage style, with shingle roof and seats placed for many thousand people. A dining hall has been erected that is eighty feet long, and a number of temporary buildings will be constructed for the accommodation of all who may desire to come. One-half dozen cottages are now in the process of building. There is a fine hotel at the head of the lake. It is only two and one-half miles to Okemos, where there are two hotels and many private houses that will be opened for the public, and in addition there are twenty private houses in close proximity to the lake where the families would be only too glad to entertain at a nominal price. There will be omnibuses running in the several directions at low rates.

Arrangements hav been made for one and one-third fare over the following roads: The Chicago & Grand Trunk from Port Huron to Chicago; the Detroit, Lansing & Northern from Detroit to Howard City; the Michigan Central from Bay City to Jackson, from Grand Rapids to Jackson, and as far west as Niles, and as far east as Ann Arbor on the main line. The Detroit & Milwaukee from Detroit to Grand Haven; the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern from Lansing to Jonesville, and as far west as Elkhart, and as far east as Toledo. Good from August 8th to August 28th, 1883. Apply to the secretary for certificates to entitle you to excursion rates for round trip tickets; if not received, pay full fare one way, and receive from the secretary on the camp-grounds a certificate which will entitle you to one-third fare returning. The latter method will be adopted in all cases where it can be.

To those who furnish their own tents, grounds will be free. Those who desire tents and cots furnished, and are willing to pay for the same, should apply to the secretary at once. Persons intending to camp should bring their own blankets and pillows. Supplies can be furnished on the grounds.

Among some of the speakers and mediums invited are the names of Hon. F. O. Willey, of Madison, Wisconsin; Dr. P. T. Johnson, Coldwater; Mrs. L. A. Pearsall, Disco; Mrs. M. C. Knight, New York; J. W. Kenyon, Jackson; Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, South Haven; Rev. Chas. A. Andrus, Flushing; J. P. Whiting, Milford; J. H. Burnham, Saginaw; Miss Susie M. Johnson, Wisconsin; Abram Smith, Sturgis. The committee invite correspondence with other mediums and speakers.

All are cordially invited to attend the first camp-meeting at Nemoka. There will be an entertaining program for each day. J. M. Potter, of Lansing, Mich., is secretary.

AN exchange says that a paper published in the east recently came out with the following "declaration of principles," printed in bold type: "Pay no interest, rent, profit, taxes, or other unjust demand; produce, exchange without restriction and without robbery. Marry not at all; but recreate, finding in reason religion, in love law." The editor of that paper has evidently mistaken his location. He probably thought he was opening up in the newspaper business in heaven. The last part of the above rather givs the lie to the statement that the whole is a "declaration of principles," but rather an absence of principles.—Peck's Sun.

Further Objections to Spiritualism.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I desire to say, in order to correct any misapprehension about my position in regard to Spiritualism, as some misapprehension appears to exist in the minds of some of those who hav honored, by perusal, a letter from me in The Truth Seeker of June 23d, that I do not claim to hav investigated the phenomena of Spiritualism, or to hav read its lore, although it happens that I hav seen a book called "Transcendental Physics," and read the parts of it that hav been most proudly and triumphantly quoted and referred to me by Spiritualists.

I think there is no doubt in the minds of leading scientists that Zoellner lost influence and standing by his Spiritualistic beliefs. His writings were, many of them, reviewed in the Popular Science Monthly, not long ago, and his arguments in favor of Spiritualism were considered to be ably refuted. Neither am I entirely ignorant of the works of Andrew Jackson Davis, having read some of them. For the purpose of argument merely, so far as my demonstration was concerned, I was willing to admit that all "mediums" and other Spiritualists were honest.

I claim that I hav presented a proof (not original with me, of course,) that a future life is impossible, in the ordinary sense of the word; to speak more clearly, I mean that it is as extremly improbable as it is that a man should jump over the moon or perform any other feat that is considered impossible by ordinary rational men and women. I am willing to make the sweeping admission (for purposes of argument only) that all the alleged phenomena of Spiritualism actually take place and that all Spiritualists are honest, for the reason that even then the manifestations, although mysterious, and many of them not understood or accounted for, cannot be shown beyond a reasonable doubt, or even by a preponderance of evidence, to emanate from or hav any connection with the spirit of a dead person. I do not see that the question as to the truth of Spiritualism, from the position from which I attack it, is affected by this admission.

I think that honest Spiritualists will be very highly entertained, to say the least, by the perusal of a book called "Bottom Facts Concerning the Science of Spiritualism," by Mr. John W. Truesdell, recently published. It contains much that will mystify and perplex them, and probably act as a somewhat powerful bomb in their camp.

All that I claim here, or claimed in my last letter to The Truth Seeker, is, I think, comprised in the following propositions, which I hereby assert:

First, The burden of proof that there is a future life is with those maintaining the affirmation.

Second, Inasmuch as it is, on its face, almost impossible for a dead man to be alive, or exist as a sentient being, conclusiv proof is required.

Third, Spiritualism proves nothing in regard to the matter.

Fourth, Science tells us there is no future life, so far as it tells us anything about the matter.

Fifth, There is therefore every reason to believe that man dies entirely and has no other conscious existence than what he has here, and there is absolutely no reason to believe the contradictory proposition.

The teachings of religion being untrue and unimportant, I do not degrade the theme by alluding to them.

Of course my written articles speak for themselvs, but I wish here to deny having said that any of the distinguished persons mentioned by my critic, Mr. Stephen Young, in his letter in The Truth Seeker of July 21st, were charlatans; I expressed no opinion about them, whatever my thoughts may be. I do say that, so far as Mr. Young or anyone else knows, except the man himself, each one may be a charlatan, or more likely each one may, like the rest of us, be mistaken, particularly when dealing with and speculating about things not capable of proof. The frequent triumphant mention of these and other names by Spiritualists corresponds with what Mr. Robert Ingersoll has so aptly called "the great-man argument" of Christianity, and is answered by saying, as I hav done, that the men are dishonest or mistaken; or it might be answered by mentioning a list of names of far greater men who utterly disbelieve in Spiritualism.

So far as Mr. Young believes in the necessity of everything that happens I agree with him, and, like himself, hav no feeling but that of good will and kindness toward every human being, no matter how depraved.

Mr. Young states dogmatically, in the last paragraph of his letter alluded to above, what I think must be contradicted by the daily observation and experience of nearly every tolerably sane man, and what it seems to me is axiomatically untrue; namely, that a knowledge of a future life tends to make men pay more attention to this than they would if they knew there was no future life.

I do not see that the belief that there is no God, and that there is no future life, and that when we die we die entirely and forever, is a painful or unpleasant one. This belief has been mine for many years, and has caused me no feeling of unhappiness or regret. Philip G. Peabody.

North Conway, N. H., July 22, 1883.

Good Work Being Done.

From the Daily Courier.

The Liberal League of Evansville, Ind., met last Sunday night at their hall on the corner of Main and Seventh streets. The object of the meeting, as explained by its president, Mr. Ernest Schor, was to take some steps in opposition to those already taken by the Pastoral Association of the city. The organization was perfected by Mr. Carl Langner, who called upon Mr. Schor to preside, and the appointment of Mr. Wm. Peters as secretary. This being accomplished, Mr. S. I. Lowenstein, in presenting the resolution by which the League should be governed in the future, advised the members to leave the question of nationality entirely out of the subject, and treat it as adopted American citizens. He then read the following:

RESOLUTIONS.

In view of the action recently had by a certain class of our people, calling themselvs "Law and Order Society," we, the undersigned citizens of Evansville, irrespectiv of creed or vocation, hereby make the following declarations:

1. We indorse every movement tending to improve the morality and welfare of the people.

2. We are opposed to singling out any one day of the week to enforce morality and decorous behavior, but would hav all days so observed.

3. We respect the teachings and tenets of all religious sects, and ask that our own views be respected.

4. We believe in upholding the inalienable rights vouchsafed us in the Declaration of Independence, viz.: "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

5. We condemn and abhor all interference with the observance of the Sabbath, or any other day, by any class of people, and demand as a matter of justice and reciprocity that we be not interfered with.

6. We believe that intemperance, coercion, and persecution are not promotiv of good, and that every person should hav the right, quietly and peaceably, to enjoy life in his own way, as long as he does not interfere with the rights of others.

7. We are against imposing our beliefs and customs upon others, and ask that others refrain from forcing theirs upon us.

8. We believe that the day commonly called Sunday was appointed by men as a day of rest and recuperation, and that those needing and seeking such rest and recreation, should be permitted to do so in their own way, always respecting similar rights to be enjoyed by others.

9. We believe that at this age, it is impolitic and productiv of no good to deny working people the peaceable and innocent enjoyment of the only day allowed them for pleasure and recuperation.

10. We are earnestly opposed to intemperance, and we believe that sobriety is not furthered by proscriptiv and oppressiv laws, for compulsion destroys all moral worth, and we also believe that moderation in the enjoyment of life is the best factor to promote the ends sought. With this expression of our general views on this subject, we ask that our representativs in council and elsewhere, enact such laws and ordinances as will effect and protect all alike, and that they repeal such as are oppressiv, obsolete, and repugnant to the declarations herein contained.

Evansville, July 20, 1883.

After the unanimous adoption of the resolution, Dr. Greener, of Louisville, made a short address, claiming that the question of Sunday observance was entirely civil, and not a religious one. The further business transacted was the election of Hon. F. W. Cook, as vice-president, and the appointment of an executiv committee, on motion of Mr. Langer, consisting of the gentlemen named below. The executiv committee was authorized to collect such moneys as would be necessary to cover the expenses to which the present state of affairs would naturally lead. A motion to hold a mass meeting one week from Monday night next was defeated. The feeling is largely prevailing that the work in hand could only be done effectually by being done quietly. Further addresses were made by Mr. J. C. Boden and others, and after passing a resolution of thanks to the League the meeting adjourned.

The executiv committee is composed of Messrs. C. Langner, J. C. Boden, Henry Rosenbergh, Isadore Esslinger, and F. R. Caden.

Religious Frauds in India.

Writing from Calcutta, India, a correspondent of the London Freethinker says: "Then, again, in Christianity; there is a large cathedral in the city with a Roman Catholic bishop; a church in Cantonments with a High Church of England clergyman; and a "Little Bethel" or "Havelock" chapel for the Ranters and Baptists. The Baptist thinks the Roman Catholic is as sure of perdition as the Hindoo or Mussulman, and the Roman Catholic reciprocates the feeling very strongly. And as if these were not sufficient to confuse any one, out come the Mukhti Fanj (Salvation Army) who repudiate the whole lot, and declare that they alone possess the free pass to heaven and the divine recipe for earthly happiness. While all these doctors disagree, how is poor Gunga Ram or Hidayet Ali to decide?

"Speaking of churches brings me to the subject of missionaries. Is it necessary to tell my Freethinking friends that here, as all over the world, the missionary is a fraud? As teachers or doctors they sometimes do good, but such cases are extremely rare. And even when such cases occur, I consider their place would be better filled by one properly trained to either profession. The ordinary representativ of the dissenting sects who comes out here disgusts his logical Hindoo hearers by his dogmatisms, and they soon learn to pass him by without further notice than an amused smile. He comes out from the missionary manufactory stored with idiomatic and grammatical Urdu culled from 'Dr. Forbes's Manual,' or a similar work, and finds to his dismay that in very few parts of India is he understood; indeed, he may be sent to a district where they hav a patois of their own. For the languages of India are legion.

"Well do I know the sight of the missionary with a small knot of nativs around him; the blind semi-idiot of the neighboring village who thinks Christianity consists in 'wearing European clothes same like sahib;' the poor sweeper, who sees elevation from his lowly caste, and a chance of repaying the cuffs and kicks he has received from his fellow-creatures when he turns Christian and livs in the mission church compound; the nativ policeman who loiters round (anything for a change); a few villagers attracted by the novelty, who stop to rest on their dusty tramp homeward, and—a few pariah dogs. To such an audience the 'padre sahib' shouts and gesticulates; then, when his time is up, mounts his dog-cart and drives off to his pleasant bungalow; where, cooled by the punkah swinging overhead, he forgets Ram Singh and Nobby Bux in the hot stifling bazar, and longs for his month's leave to the cool hills, or for the time to come when he will take ship and go home to enjoy his retiring allowance, there to enlarge to wondering non-travelers at May meetings upon the heat and dust of India and the number of converts gained to the fold.

"So much for the Dissenter. Beyond constituting himself a nuisance in the bazars and streets he does little or no mischief; but the Roman Catholics hav a subtler way of making converts.

"During the last famin (and preceding ones, for aught I know to the contrary) the Catholic priests were constantly in the bazars and villages; they would take any number of children (nativ) to educate and bring up, but the parents must allow them to become Christians. It is whispered some were taken without the parents' consent; certainly, many orphans were taken without reference to any one. These children are shown in the returns as so many converts. Every year many are thus taken into their schools; but the famin years are those of harvest for them.

"All the adult converts made among nativs are from the lowest and most ignorant classes, and all become converts with a view to something better in this life. They develop into veritable pests, begging from house to house on the strength of being Christians. How is it that missionaries and chaplains never employ these converts as their personal servants or in other capacities? Because they know they are the scum of nativ society, unworthy of trust and with no idea of honesty or integrity."

The Human Body.

While we know nothing of that which is termed, in common parlance, the soul, we do know something of the human body, yet not so much that we may not learn a great deal more.

And it is just this knowledge of the body and its various functions that is sometime to improve the race, to make the world better than we find it to-day.

What is called sin, wrong, crime, disease, etc., are only other names for ignorance. People, generally, I think, do about as well as their limited knowledge will permit, and it is to be wondered, sometimes, how, with the great burthen of ignorance and weakness that they carry, they can do as well as they do.

Great mistakes are made, irreparable errors committed, terrible blunders brought about, because human beings lack the knowledge of themselvs and the common laws of right living, which, observed, would produce only happy and beautiful results, whereas, their non-observance leads to consequent inharmony, misery, and trouble.

Ask the children in the schools if they understand the rules of good health, even, and they will stare at you in open-mouthed wonder—they don't know what you mean.

Ask their teachers what they know of hygiene—the construction and mechanism of the human body, its uses and the perfection it may be brought to—and most of them are as ignorant as the children. Go to the homes, and inquire of the parents if they know and observe the health laws, and too many will look at you in blank silence. At the same time, they can tell you all about the "City of the New Jerusalem," the "Holy Ghost," and all the "invisibles;" all about the laws of sanctification, foreordination, purification, and perdition, as well as the condition of all the inhabitants of the earth after death, but are dumb upon the vital questions of health and happiness of mortals on this hither side of the grave.

The schools of a new philosophy must arise and wipe out this lamentable ignorance. Honest inquiry, to begin with, among children must not be checked, but fostered, while trained and educated teachers must be able and willing to cheerfully instruct them in the knowledge they hav a right to seek. Instead of the old falsehoods that fed our parents, and which hav resulted in untold mischief and anguish, they must be given new and comprehensiv truths—the truths that lead to salvation, to health, long life, peace, and prosperity.

Those opening the doors of such schools of science, teaching that the whole human body is sacred, "holier than any temple of wood and stone, consecrated by diviner rights and for diviner purposes," will rank with the greatest and noblest philosophers that hav ever lived on earth. SUSAN H. WIXON.

Plagiarism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I was much surprised to see, in No. 28 of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that Mr. J. E. Beckley claims for his friend, "S. A.," the authorship of "A Truth Seeker's Dilemma." Inclosed find a copy of the original. The transposing is but a bungling effort. The whole, or greater part thereof, is a plagiarism. R. R. HALL, M.D.

Rockford, Ill., July 18, 1883.

THE ORIGINAL.

Thou great, eternal Infinit,
The great unbounded whole,
Thy body is the universe,
Thy spirit is its soul!
If thou dost fill immensity,
If thou art "all in all,"
If thou wast here before I was,
I am not here at all!

How could I liv outside of thee?
Dost thou fill earth and air?
There surely is no place for me
Outside of everywhere!
If thou art God, and thou dost fill
Immensity of space,
Then I am God, think as you will,
Or else I hav no place.

And if I hav no place at all,
Or, if I am not here,
It must be I shall not be "damned,"
For then I'd be somewhere.
So, I must be a part of God,
No matter if I'm small;
And if I'm not a part of him,
There's no such God at all.

The Death Penalty and Benefit of Clergy.

From Blackwood's Magazine.

William the Conqueror, notwithstanding the ruthless, savage nature of the man, disliked the punishment of death in cold blood, and substituted mutilation for it. Mutilation is a punishment mentioned in the assizes of Clarendon and Northampton in the time of Henry II. In the reigns of Richard I., Henry III., and Edward I. death was the penalty inflicted. In the two last-mentioned reigns it was the common punishment for felony. It continued to be so, as to treason and nearly all felonies, down to the year 1827, till public opinion revolted and an era of mercy set in. But ages before public sentiment rose in rebellion against the system of barbarous severity, the English people had in their own practical, unsystematic way managed to a great extent to elude it. First of all, the clergy successfully asserted a claim to be free from the jurisdiction of secular courts, to be subject to the ecclesiastical courts only, which merely enjoined a clerk to purge himself of his offense, probably by some mode of penance and fasting. In early times a clerk was delivered up to the ordinary as soon as he was imprisoned on suspicion of any crime whatever. The Norman kings, especially Henry II., might struggle against this claim as much as they pleased. They failed, and the clerk in holy orders possessed immunity from civil punishment. Later on, in Edward I.'s time, this immunity began to be disputed, and a clerk was not allowed to claim his clergy until after he was convicted. The next step was that the court might deliver him up obseque purgatione, in which case he was to be imprisoned in the bishop's prison for life. But restriction on the privilege, which originally was confined to the tonsured clergy, was followed by a wide extension of its application. In 1350 it was enacted that all manner of clerks, as well secular as religious, should thenceforth enjoy the privileges of holy church. In construing this statute, the courts, ever, except in the time of the Stuarts, on the alert in favor of liberty and against tyranny, extended the privilege to everyone who could read, whether he had the clerical dress and tonsure or not. All women, however, except professed nuns, were for centuries excluded from the benefit of clergy, as it was called. Another grotesque exception was that bigamus—not a bigamist in our sense of the word, but a man who "hath married two wives or one widow"—was also excluded. In 1547 a statute was passed which gave every peer of the realm, although he could not read, a privilege of a similar kind. It thus happened that, though all felonies were capital offenses, a large proportion of offenders escaped scot-free. They were entitled to benefit of clergy, and could not be punished at all. At the beginning of the eighteenth century women and those who could not read were admitted to benefit of clergy, and then everyone charged with a clergyable felony became liable to a slight punishment in lieu of death. The benefit had always consisted in being excused from capital punishment; and at one time a man who could read could commit as many murders as he pleased with impunity. Later, a man who claimed it was branded on the thumb, unless he was a peer or a clerk in orders, and was not allowed to claim his privilege a second time. The effect of such a clumsy system—barbarous severity on the one side, hand in hand with capricious exemption from all punishment whatever—was as bad as possible. Yet benefit of clergy was a recognized privilege till 1827.

Letters from Friends.

NEW YORK, July 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for my year's subscription; and $1 for the Monument Fund. I find the paper more a necessity than ever before, and congratulate you on the successful handling of a pen mightier than the ministerial frauds can command. Long life to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

R. H. CRESSINGHAM.

TIMMONSVILLE, July 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, July 21st, an article headed "Help Spread the Light," asking for names of men who do their own thinking. I will send you the names of as many as I can think of just now. This section is very orthodox. We hav about 500 inhabitants, three churches, and hav had 101 prayer-meetings, 191 sermons, and a perfect failure on the part of the churches in capturing a single child. Methodist preachers and the ladies are holding the fort, but the men are generally free to speak about the churches and their doings. Since I hav been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER I can't keep it; everybody wants to read it; in fact, most every man is an outspoken Infidel. R. J. ROLLINS.

EAST OTTO, July 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing in the last TRUTH SEEKER the progress of the Monument Fund, I hasten to add my mite with that of a friend, and may all tardy Liberals and truth seekers do likewise.

For four years I hav been an admiring reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to me the best paper I ever saw. I approve of the fairness with which all are treated that ask for a hearing. Many times my sympathies hav been strongly agitated in following the varying fortunes of its founder, and when the news came of his death I was for the time without hope. It was more than the loss of a friend. All seemed lost. But when THE TRUTH SEEKER came to me with its many expressions of sympathy for your loss, I felt there were some good and true souls left, and THE TRUTH SEEKER might be sustained, and again I took courage.

I cannot close this without saying that I heard T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, say that of all the Liberal papers he could find THE TRUTH SEEKER was the best, and as a Spiritualist I can say the same.

Please find inclosed $2—one from Robert Dygert, Springville, N. Y., and one from,

Yours respectfully, CLARK BURCHARD.

INJUSTICE TO THOMAS PAINE.

KANSAS CITY, July 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to say a word through your valuable paper in defense of Thomas Paine.

I hav been listening to the orthodox denouncing Thomas Paine as a base scoundrel, liar, and blasphemer. No longer ago than last Sunday I heard a prominent presiding elder denounce him as such. Those sainted preachers make such denunciations as this when they hav no one to rebut these malicious attacks upon a man who stood by this country in its infancy. Thomas Paine's ideas are used by our government and condemned by the church. My understanding from history is that Thomas Paine's ideas control the English government, and he is the man who wrote the Constitution of the United States, and was the first man who wrote the words "United States of America."

But he is looked upon by priest and clergy as a demon. They stood by his dying bed and prayed fervently for him to recant. But he would not. They falsely say that he said all was dark and gloom. There are lots of ministers to-day who are ignorant enough to believe he did recant. But he died as he had lived—a firm believer in truth and liberty of thought. May his memory ever liv and be cherished by truth-loving people when orthodox lies cease to be.

Giv the churches power and we are slaves.

A. B. FOX.

A FEW REMARKS TO MR. S. YOUNG.

CINCINNATI, July 20, 1883.

SIR: You make quite free with my name in your charges that I assert without proof. My proofs, sir, are the strongest ever experienced. I hav investigated your so-called phenomena for a considerable time, fully expecting to discover some tangible grounds to convince me that some truth was at the bottom of so much statement. But alas! up to this present moment hav I realized nothing. My dead friends and many relations hav never, never uttered one single word, sir. Must a man believe your theory against his strongest, honest sense? No, sir. I cannot. Your statement of seeing spirits on spooks is not proof sufficient to convert a man of independent thought. Your religion, like all others, demands implicit faith, and that faith, sir, I cannot hav in any kind of religious extant. My hard sense strikes back on every religious imposture. If, sir, there be any truth in your theory that man is immortal, I shall know the whole business on an equality with others. But, sir, my firm belief is that nature hath made no such provision. And, sir, if nature had not so provided, your theory is false, and you and others are deluding yourselvs. Millions hav been deluded by various religions in the past, and many now, from a weak and frail mind, do still dream of distant charms and beauties bright which lend enchantment to the view. But, sir, your last breath will bring to you eternal sleep from which no man ever awaketh. THOS. WINTER.

ITHACA, July 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Taking Universology as a basis, which embraces the whole of nature's domain, we can but conclude that from the laws of her material kingdom there appears to our vision a great variety of vegetation, and each variety, though differing from other forms, is perfect in itself, and each fills the sphere of its own necessity. So also, in the progression of nature, animal life appears in a corresponding variety, and each also fills its own sphere of action. And thus in the higher form called man (though it is evident he has not attained to manly eminence as yet, but is progressing). Animals will act out their nature in combating and beating each other, as in the Liberal ranks. But he is now upon his dignity of thought, and supposes (animal-like) that his sphere of thought comprises all the ground there is to spare; and as yet has not attained to the capacity and correctness of man to behold the great city of nature, which comprises all varieties and is called the city of the living God, and it lieth four-square; the length, breadth, and hight are equal. This city symbolizes pure, earnest, individual thought. Its walls (experience) of precious stones; its streets (wide and liberal) symbolized by pure gold; and on either side of the city are three gates, so that when we arrive to the capacity of man, we shall enter the city of unity and charity through the gate that suits us best.

I delight to follow the arguments of Mr. Putnam and Mr. Andrews, for they are developing the higher regions of animal life. Mr. Putnam places himself upon the fundamental principles of material nature, which produces the one pole, the objectiv, which is the male of nature; and Mr. Andrews places himself upon the progressiv and equally fundamental principle of the mental world—the opposit pole, the subjectiv, the female of nature. The two are united, and we hav the stature of man.

I hav reconsidered the living monument Mr. Bennett made for himself, and concluded, for the love I bore toward him, to send you $1 toward a material one. Find amount inclosed.

Yours with charity, ZENAS KENT.

NEW YORK, July 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I would be obliged to you if you would notice the death of John T. Jacobson, an old Philadelphian by birth, but a citizen of the city of New York for more than sixty years.

I was summond to your city to attend the sick bed of this aged and noble monument of man, and the friend of humanity everywhere, who for more than fifty years has been an outspoken Freethinker, and who, no matter in what society, religious sects, or among those of whatsoever creed, was ever respected for his manly courage, gentlemanly deportment, his profound depth of knowledge, and fearless advocacy of the theory of Materialism.

A few years ago, when boarding with his daughter—a Mrs. Cheshire, who kept house for him—he was a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and an admirer of our martyr, D. M. Bennett. I sat by his bed side for three days, conversing, reading, and talking to him on the great all-important question of a hereafter. His mind was at no time dimmed or clouded, but was well prepared for the coming change; and he was only afraid his lamp of life would flicker too long, thereby causing too much trouble to his children and friends; and wishing, but one hour before he died, for death to come, he fell asleep, to awake no more (forever?). Although but sick a few days, he died as he had lived, a noble, honored man and Infidel.

His acquaintance was extensiv. He was for more than thirty years, a resident of east 25th street, between second and third avenues. None knew him but to love him. He was a philosopher, and a philanthrophist. He lived a useful and activ life, no matter what the creed or religion of his neighbors. If any were in want, he and his daughter hunted them out, sympathized with them, spoke words of comfort to the dying, and with open hands and hearts and home, brought them in and relieved their wants and suffering. After a life of 82 years of unbroken activity, on Friday, the 20th instant, we closed his eyes in a sweet and gentle sleep; and on Sunday we laid him away to rest in that beautiful and quiet city of the dead at Cypress Hills.

M. W. ROWE.

WAPELLO, July 24. 1883

MR EDITOR: I hav sadly neglected to send my mite for the Monument Fund, but now inclose $1 to apply to that purpose. I wish to giv something toward erecting a monument to the memory of our dear friend, D. M. Bennett. MRS. MARY KREMER.

ESKRIDGE, July 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 for our Sunday reading, which we find much better than the old Jew book or modern orthodox preaching. We hav but few outspoken Infidels here. Orthodoxy is popular, and to be noticed we must go to church and chip in with the big crowd. Apply $2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for the year and fifty cents for an extra copy of the same as long as it will pay for. I want to distribute them to my friends. M. JESTER.

ELGIN, July 25, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $1.30, which please apply as follows: $1 for the Monument Fund and the balance for "The Holy Bible Abridged." I had one but gave it away, and want one to show to my Christian friends—it is a good eye opener. I do think every Liberal in America (I should say the world) ought to hav our beloved Bennett's last work, "A Truth Seeker Around the World," which is one of the best eye-openers ever published. I hav lent the work to Christian friends. One man, who is now reading it, said to me a few days ago, "Archibald, I believe by the time I hav finished that work I shall be an Infidel." One grand reason why every Infidel should hav these books is because it was Bennett's last work, which I hope and trust will be as lasting as the granit monument. I. W. ARCHIBALD.

OSAGE MISSION, July 23, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: The inclosed money order is to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year. I am fully satisfied with the conduct of THE TRUTH SEEKER. You and Macdonald are acquitting yourselvs nobly. They of any party who say they cannot affiliate with the other party in the work of the National Liberal League, disgust me beyond measure. I would rather they were in clerical robes and our fighting enemies. It is inexplicable! A Spiritualist or a Materialist opposing the grasp of the church upon the states is equally efficient. If he sets up the insane cry, "He don't believe as I do, therefore I will not work with him to secure a purely secular government," he is more efficient to such government than the officers of the National Reform Association. I would not advise denial of access to your columns, but oh! how offensiv they make themselvs!

H. L. R. JONES.

INDEPENDENCE, July 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1—50 cents for THE TRUTH SEEKER for three months to a new subscriber; 25 cents for "Answers to Christian Questions," by D. M. Bennett; 15 cents for "Bible Inquirer," by Jacobson, and 10 cents for "Ingersoll and Jesus," by Samuel Putnam.

I wish I was able at this time to send in a more liberal order, but, situated as I am, must take advantage of such as I can. I, for one, want to train my children so that they may sail clear of the tempestuous sea of mythological source. I hav been years enslaved by my early lessons at my poor mother's knee, and hav since her death been an earnest, anxious inquirer at the doors of the church and in secret prayer for the real life as promised by Christ and his preachers even now, but hav found more to satisfy me in a few copies of your paper and some Liberal works I hav been reading than I hav found in thirteen years of prayer and study of the Bible and church experiences. I hope to be able to become a regular reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and also to supply myself and family with a goodly collection of Liberal work.

Truly yours, GEO. E. PENFIELD.

ALMOND, July 23, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $1 for the monument to D. M. Bennett. I hope enough will be immediately sent to swell the amount to the required sum, that the monument may be speedily erected. It seems to me to be the duty of every Liberal who can possibly spare a little to contribute something for this purpose. It is a debt we owe this noble man, and the amount, instead of being $1,400, should be ten times that sum.

I see much is said in THE TRUTH SEEKER for and against Spiritualism, Materialism, etc. This is all right as far as honest truth seeking is concerned; but when I see words used tending to arouse ill feelings among Liberals in consequence of his or her peculiar views of life or no life after death, I want to say, Stop this, friends; this is not true Liberalism. I am not a Spiritualist, having thus far failed to obtain what would be to me satisfactory evidence of its truth. But, notwithstanding, good and honest Spiritualists are good enough Liberals for me, and I can giv them upon all occasions the right hand of fellowship.

I inclose twenty-five names for you to send specimen copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER to. I hope some of them may be induced to subscribe for it. At all events, it will be good seed sown, and I hav selected as good soil for its reception as can be found in this community.

Send me "Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or the Book of the Generation of Jesus." I hav wanted to lend my neighbors THE TRUTH SEEKERS, but they would be soon spoiled if I did. I am keeping them clean to hav them bound when I get enough. I think I will hav the volume when bound entitled "Holy Bible," with family register leaves inserted.

I remain yours for truth and justice,

O. D. WALLACE.

GRAND ISLAND, July 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send my mite to the Monument Fund. I do not believe much in monuments, but if one can be raised that will do some honor to our departed friend and scatter that monstrosity called the Christian religion at the same time, I would giv my last dollar. Who can believe in a God that didn't know enough to teach his people to dress themselvs, but left their instruction to devils and snakes? Oh, it takes the Bible to relate the boss snake story to be found in the pages of fiction. He made Adam and Eve, and turned them out naked without the knowledge of the fact till his snakeship came along, walking upon his tail, to inform them that they were naked, and that they had better sew fig leaves together and make themselvs aprons (breeches in the old versions of the Bible). Funny God, this!—that trusted the teaching of his people to snakes and demons, and then damn them because they can't believe the yarn!

He made David after his own heart, and David danced in his nudeness before the females of his harem, which brought the blush of shame to his queen; and because she blushed and rebuked him for his unbecoming conduct he shut off all social intercourse with her, and begat offspring upon her maid-servant (thus putting his lawful wife below her own slave, because she dared be more refined than her tyrannical husband). Wonder if David's God has a harem, too, where scores of beautiful goddesses promenade before him and administer to his pleasure; and if he, too, dances naked in their presence and cuts up other monkey-shines before them, entirely unbecoming gentlemen among ladies; and if he ever gets rebuked and gets mad when a beautiful goddess undertakes to refine him.

And we are told David danced before the Lord; but what object could the God of David hav in requesting him to dance in the presence of his ladies in so unbecoming a manner? Would a divine being take pleasure at the sight of a naked brute cutting up antics to gratify the lowest animal passions in man? The whole story is preposterous nonsense.

But David covers himself with the mantle of divine authority, and goes ahead, dancing uncovered before females, and committing rape and adultery upon other men's wives and daughters, butchering their fathers and husbands in cold blood after satisfying his brutal lust upon them, like a demon without mercy. And we are told David was a man after God's own heart (in a horn). David's God was a myth that only existed in his own evil imagination of his heart. And this is all David or anybody else ever knew about him, or ever will know. He is a God without body, parts, or passions, and resides beyond the bounds of time and space—that is, he is nothing, and has no habitation. Selah! Bah!

WALTER SIMONDS.

WEATHERFORD, TEX., July 21, 283.

MR. EDITOR: As I hav never written to you except in a business sort of way, and as you are publishing letters every week in THE TRUTH SEEKER from Liberals all over the country, I resolved to try my hand at a letter, in which I wish to make a suggestion or two. It has been said many times that "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," and we all know from personal experience that nearly all of the human family are music-loving creatures. Music is one of the grand elements in all social gatherings; and as nearly all—or many, at least—of the music books of to-day are published by or in the interest of some Christian church, thus compelling Liberals to aid and abet Christianity in the purchase of music books, in order to get tunes for the songs they sing in their meetings and social gatherings, I suggest that some one prepare and publish a book containing words and music suitable to be used in League meetings, social gatherings, funeral occasions, etc. I am a great lover of music, and hav taught vocal music a little, but I am so disgusted with the silly nonsense in Christian songs that I cannot sing them. If I had a Liberal music book I could wield a mighty influence over the young people in my community. Christians are putting forth every effort in their power to secure the young, and we as Liberals must do the same thing if we expect to win.

Another suggestion I wish to make is that of circulating Liberal literature. I think every Liberal should try to take at least one Liberal paper, and, after reading it, pass it around to his neighbors. And everyone who is able should purchase a good book and pass it around. Christian people are more afraid of Liberal literature than they are of "his satanic majesty." I hav purchased $20 or $25 worth of books and papers in the last two years, and hav circulated them freely. Many at first would not read them, but they now read them with a relish; and many good Christian people are getting to be quite liberal in their views. There is a certain class of Christians who will not read; these, of course, will die hugging their idols. But those who will read soon begin to think, and when they once begin to think they soon trample their idols under their feet.

Two years ago Liberals were "as scarce as hens' teeth" in this part of God's "immoral" vinyard. Now we can count a score or more; and this result has been accomplished without organizing. Christians are already very much concerned about it. The preachers are all preaching to us; the brethren are all scolding at us, and the "dear sisters" are all praying for us; but, despite all this, Freethought moves along as if nothing was the matter. We expect soon to organize a League and go to work in earnest.

Find inclosed $4.25—$1 25 to apply on my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and for the remaining $3 send me "Champions of the Church." S. WHITE.

TRUTH AND MYTH.

HOWE, CAL., July 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Every reality in itself is an eternal truth; the smallest particle of matter is a truth, and the real universe is the aggregate of all truth. In other words, every real truth is a material existence, and the totality of these is the universal factor of all facts, and every fact is but an appearance. Factor and fact are all we can know; the first physically, and the last mentally—the first a reality, the second a myth; the first the real world, the second the apparent world (objectiv and subjectiv). Factors are truths evidenced to physical sensations, and are classed as entities; while facts are imagined entities and should be relegated to mythological mentation. We hav, then, in the physical real truths, in the mental apparent truths; so the apparent world is but a semblance of the real world, yet we too often mix them mentally.

Whatever reasonings may relate to acts, as thought, virtue, vice, God, devil, heaven, hell, soul, etc., must be classed with the mythical, as wholly devoid of being—mere ideas of fancy to complete a picture; nothing more; while every truth is a reality and an evidence of its own existence. In other words, the truthful test of truth is reality physically demonstrated, and true physical science embraces such demonstration and relates to truth as a substratum.

If we ask what the mind is we fail to satisfy ourselvs, even metaphysically, and when we search for it physically it is yet non est, and must ever remain so, because it is no part of truth; it does not possess substance, neither does it occupy place; it is a mere fact, as other acts, and must be classed with other myths—the mere ideal of mental romance, imagined in the previous childhood of our race, but in the present mythical age nearly all stalk it forth an immortal entity. Mentally we cannot know the real universe, as it is but an appearance. Physically we may know it, because we are an integral part.

Bishop Berkeley was correct, from his mental standpoint, when he said there was no such thing as matter, because mind (so called) can never determin its existence. His followers, from the same ideal Ararat, declare mind the great factor of the universe, the primary ego de facto. All attributes are merely speculativ suppositions; and these, with all their supposed genera, are but the fancied children of idealism, super-imposed on organization; for, in the absence of this, there could be no ghostly chance for the imaginary.

